"In May, 1888, I was taken with sciatic rheumatism in my legs and arms, and was confined to my bed entirely helpless. In August I was just able to move around. I was reduced to a mere skeleton, my appetite was entirely gone and my friends thought I could not live. I took almost everything I could hear of, but with no good results, during that winter. One day, reading about taking Hood's Sarsaparilla in March, April and May, I concluded to try it. One bottle gave me so much relief that I took four bottles, and since then I have not been troubled with rheumatism, and my general health has never been better. My appetite is good and I have gained in flesh. I attribute my whole improvement to taking Hood's Sarsaparilla." WM. F. TAYLOR, Emporium, Cameron County, Pa.

A Lesson in Agriculture.

A couple of thriving tobacco plants stand in the window of a cigar store. A young lady stood looking at them Tuesday afternoon, and just then Shep Cone stepped from the door. The following conversation ensued:

Young Lady—Can you tell me what kind of plants those are, sir?

Mr. Cone—Tobacco plants.

"Do cigarettes grow on them?"

"No, cigarettes are not made out of tobacco."

"When do they bloom?"

"Never. When the leaves wither and turn brown in the fall of the year, and curl up and dry in the shape of cigars, then they are picked."

"How funny!"—Berkshire News.

Progress.

It is very important in this age of vast material progress that a remedy be pleasing to the taste and to the eye, easily taken, acceptable to the stomach and healthy in its nature and effects. Possessing these qualities, Syrup of Figs is the one perfect laxative and most gentle diuretic known.

A Startling Success.

"We had some mind reading at our party last night. Johnny hid a pin and the new minister tried to find it."

"And did he succeed?"

"Oh, yes—he found it when he sat down."

"August Flower"

Mrs. Sarah M. Black of Seneca, Mo., during the past two years has been affected with Neuralgia of the Head, Stomach and Womb, and writes: "My food did not seem to strengthen me at all and my appetite was very variable. My face was yellow, my head dull, and I had such pains in my left side. In the morning when I got up I would have a flow of mucus in the mouth, and a bad, bitter taste. Sometimes my breath became short, and I had such queer, tumbling, palpitating sensations around the heart. I ached all day under the shoulder blades, in the left side, and down the back of my limbs. It seemed to be worse in the wet, cold weather of Winter and Spring; and whenever the spells came on, my feet and hands would turn cold, and I could get no sleep at all. I tried everywhere, and got no relief before using August Flower Then the change came. It has done me a wonderful deal of good during the time I have taken it and is working a complete cure." ®

THE Butler Record calls attention of farmers to the fact that fewer eggs are shipped into this country since the McKinley bill went into effect, than before. Then he coolly tells them that prices are no higher. What advantage is it to a farmer, then, if prices remain the same? And if prices are higher then people, who eat eggs suffer loss. But protectionists say a tariff makes prices lower. Will the Record explain?

BEFORE we went to press last week the elections, or "force bill" in congress had been sidetracked again. It was laid aside in order to take up the apportionment bill. This will delay it once more. And as "cloture bill" for giving the senate, the "previous question rule," is also laid aside, it is possible neither will be passed before March 4, when it will be no use to try further.

Fees and Salaries.

McCullough, member of the House from Marion county, (Indianapolis) has a bill to fix salaries. He names each county separately. He proposes to give the county of DeKalb as follows: clerk. $2,485: auditor, $2,630; recorder, $1,860 treasurer, $2,270; sheriff, $2,485. The clerk of Marion county would get $18,000, and in Allen county $6,200. From this, it will be seen the counties will be called on to pay a large amount for salaries, and the only question is, How much can they get back in fees?

Secretary Windom Dead.

Secretary Windom, of the treasury fell dead from heart disease, at the banquet of the New York Board of Trade, last Thursday evening. It was their nineteenth annual banquet, and was a grand one. Mr. Windom made the first speech and there were to be others, but on concluding, he sat down and fell over dead Of course that ended the banquet. The press report had this additional:

Secretary of the Navy Tracy sat at his right. and before the cheering had time to subside, leaned over to whisper into the ear of his fellow cabinet officer some words of congratulation. Mr. Windom smiled, then calmly cut off the end of a cigar and put the latter in his mouth. He looked around as if he attended applying a light to it, then paused.

Those at the table opposite noticed that a deedly pallor overspread his countenance. It seemed as if he had been stricken with a great sudden pain. In a second his face became distorted, and he half rose from his seat. To the amazed watchers it looked as if he meant to speak, but the words evidently froze in his mouth. There was an inarticulate sound, a something like a sob, then, with a half-frantic motion, he leaned heavily to one side and fell over.

A few seconds before Judge Arnoux, the toastmaster, was on his feet about to introduce the next speaker of the evening in the person of ex Secretary Bayard. Judge Arnoux did not go as far as the latter's name when the tradegdy took place. Instantly everything was in confusion. Guests rose in their seats and cried out in alarm. Secretary Tracy and Captain Ambrose Snow, who presided over the feast, sprang to the floor and hurried to the fallen statesman. Dozens of other willing hands also helped to raise him, and he was borne to an ante-room.

There were several physicians at the dinner, and they hurried to lend assistance. The confusion was so great that the guests were with difficulty restrained from following. They were requested to keep their seats, and did so.

Judge Arnoux was about three minutes away. It seemed, however, an age to all who were in the banquet room. When he did return his face was grave; nevertheless he tried to reassure the others.

"Mr. Windom has had an attack of heart disease," he said, "but the physicians say he will be all right in a little while."

Every one tried to believe that Judge Arnoux spoke the truth, but few succeeded in doing so. This was especially apparent when the Judge hurried back into the sick chamber. Even then it was the chamber of death. This time he was only gone an instant, as it seemed, and the whole story was told to the horrified guests when he said:

"Secretary Windom is dead."

The whispers, which had been carried on by the excited group, ceased, and a deathlike stillness for a moment prevailed. Then cries in which horror and regret were intermingled went up on all sides. Politics were forgotten, as were the wines on the tables. There was only one idea—that all had lost a personal friend.

But it was so sudden, so dramatic, that all hoped, some, in fact, shouted that he could not be dead. Many made a rush to the ante room. In spite of physicians or others, the body was raised up by strong arms, all the windows were thrown open. Fans were brought into use, while messengers were dispatched for different forms of medicine.

All the medicine in the world, however, could not have saved Secretary Windom's life. He was then dead, and as the awful fact impressed itself on the minds of all present, they stood as if spellbound. Slowly the body was laid down, then a blanket was procured and placed over the remains.

A message was then sent to Harrison at Washington and Harrison notified Mrs Windom. Some difference of opinion as to the cause of his death, still exists, some claiming it was not heart disease, but "cerebral hemorrhage."

OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

What he Sees, Hears and Thinks About.

Most everybody in and about Auburn, is more or less acquainted with Herman Kessler, and have been since his boyhood days, when he posed as the primi[illegible] "cub" for a member of the art artis[illegible]. Herman labored hard and earnestly [illegible] those days to maintain a livlihood and gain for himself a competency. To say that he had not gained that competency—a broader plane upon which to develop his intellect, broaden his views and secure a good income, would not be guessing aright. The gentleman has risen! Not as a scientific painter, of course, but in the capacity of a traveling salesman for the famous Kessler Brothers' cigar factory. He is a young man of ability and it is evident that the proprietors of this popular firm have been very wise in their selection of a representative and the interest he takes in the business doubtless is adequate in a measure to the ultimate success of his employers. Haven't we a few more young men in town with pluck like Herman Kessler?

* * *

In going along Sixth street, we very naturally dropped into the handle factory of J. S. Loutzenhiser. It is an establishment giving evidence of genuine, business enterprise. Mr. L. is a good workman and employs two hands in the manufacture of every kind of handles now used, that is made from hickory wood. The bulk of his goods is shipped to other points, and vast amounts of second growth hickory butts are used in the course of a year's business. Truly this is an enterprise that speaks respectably for the town, and its proprietor is a gentleman worthy of all the success that can possibly come to him as a business man.

* * *

It is with pleasure that we grasp our "markin' stick" to chronicle the advent of a new firm. People have become somewhat accustomed to going to the West Seventh St., bakery, for such goods as are usually kept at such places of business, but its frequent changing hands made it an inconvenient and uncertain concern. Several parties have owned it during the past year, who as suddenly vanished from the stage of business activity, as they mushroom like made an appearance upon it. The last owner was Herman Groscop, a young man of good qualities, who sold his stock-in trade, store and all to Thomas Brothers, who will hereafter do business under the name of Union Bakery. These young men are widely and favorably known in this part of the country. William Thomas, senior member of the firm, it will be remembered, learned his trade under the direction of our popular and widely-known baker, Fin. Gibson. He mastered his profession in all its departments, and with the partnership assistance of his younger brother, who is also a good baker, is able to meet the demands of public patronage. Their trade is already quite large and seems to be increasing, thus giving evidence that the business will be profitable and that the above named firm will stand as a living monument of the successful existence of our wide awake, business-like little town. Remember the boys at their place on West Seventh street.

* * *

We penned quite an article last week in telling about the Reading room. People read the article and felt proud, that our city was possessed of so much interest in the welfare and comfort of the community. It certainly does speak in loud terms on the line of philanthrophy, and those who have liberally contributed to this cause are blessed with the satisfaction of knowing that their interest in the "least of these brethren" is appreciated. We believe the meeting held there Sunday afternoon, was one of extraordinary qualities. Mrs. Jones, of Garrett, addressed the congregation in a very pleasing way for a few minutes, relative to the benefits and objects of the institution. It will be remembered that this lady is among the most noted lady orators in this part of the country, and when she mounts the rostrum to address an assemblage of people, she never fails to have the attention of her hearers. She has a manner of speaking that is smooth, eloquent and convincing, and invariably appeals to the common judgment as possessed by most men, with an irresistible force, and we believe the managers could do no better than to have Mrs. J., talk to the young people now and then. It would not only please and benefit them, but it would open up an avenue for them to think and understand that all knowledge is not confined beneath the brain pan of a man. May the prospects of this grand institution never be less brilliant than they are at this time.

* * *

Someone once said, "If you can't talk up your own town, don't talk." Some people didn't like him and called it selfishness, when he said it. But now the world takes a broader view of the subject and agrees that the "crank," as he was called, was about right. We think he was, and will lead out on the line of thought his words suggest. We want to call attention to the manufactory, at the north end of town, known under the style and title of Auburn Woolen Mills. This institution has been located where it now stands, for a good many years and farmers have been used to going there to dispose of some of their wool. Of course, it supplied the demand in former days. Now, a new scene strikes the spectator's gaze. Instead of the old, narrow-contracted concern, there appears a large, roomy building, a part of it nicely painted and putting on a citified air. Several new additions have been built to the old plant, such as, office, dye house and oil shed, together with a new set of drying lines. The oil shed holds 175 barrels of crude petroleum, which is used for fuel The inside of the main building presents a wonderful scene of machinery, raw material and finished goods in great variety. Since these Mills have been in the hands of the present proprietors, Messrs. Ensley & Forkner, a constant improvement has taken place They have added machinery and apparatus until they are prepared to supply the trade with an extensive line of woolen goods. They manufacture fifty-one different kinds and colors in flannels, and have for some time made a special run in blankets and ladies' skirtings. These skirtings, by the way, are all the rage and they have not been able to supply the market. This is unquestionably a promising institution and the proprietors expect ere another year rolls around they will be able to run continuously the whole year. The property and machinery is roughly estimated at about $5,000, with a stock on hand valued at about $2,000. These gentlemen are full of genuine push. and the town has reason to be proud of the enterprise that is being brought to the front by them.

* * *

As the man with a stubby pencil was walking leisurely along one of the principal streets, the other day, he almost unconsciously dropped into a reverie somewhat in this fashion:

The world is full of business men,
Seemingly with nothing to do;
They sit day after day in a little den,
And continually kept in a stew.

Their clothes are seedy grown and threadbare,
With pockets minus chink,
They want of the public patronage to share,
But silently they sit and blink.

They wonder why some men succeed,
While others do no better than fail,
And grasp their little hoard with a miser's greed;—
This alone, tells their tale:

Now, unfortunates, I've a word for you,
If it pleases, call it kind advice:
If you do what's in your power to do,
You'll find business successful and nice.

If a business friend is making money,
Study his ways and be wise;
For 'tis busy bees that get sweet honey,
And to have good trade, list to what I advise.

Now, come to the front with printer's ink,
To see your business rapidly rise—
You'll be no longer on ruin's brink,
When once you advertise.

* * *

While the pen is warm it will be in good taste to test its elasticity in saying that J. G. Clapp, the photographer, is a fine fellow, and he has facilities for turning out a fine line of his wares, that are very complete. He is a young man of sterling qualities and thoroughly understands his business. If you intrust your negative to his care for development, you can rest assured that you will get a good picture

* * *

During an interview with Mr. Michael Lumm, foreman of the Auburn section of the Wabash road, recently, the man of "puff proclivities" was enabled to recall the memories of other days, when he was learning to tamp gravel beneath the melting rays of a mid-summer's sun. Mr. L., is a thorough railroad man, having held some position in that capacity for nearly fifteen years. Besides being a good railroad man, he is also, a good citizen of our bright little city.

* * *

When green, half-grown apples and green cucumbers are abundant, the colic among the boys is not uncommon. But we are now called upon to chronicle the fact that our young friend Frank Foltz, son of E. C. Foltz, who has been employed in the painting department of the Kiblinger Carriage Works, was taken violently, a week or so ago, with what is known among the craft as "painter's colic." He suffered all the agony that could easily be brought about through the effects of lead poison. For awhile, his life was despaired of, but by a prompt application of such remedies as are known to be effective in such cases, he was restored to a reasonable degree of good health, though still quite weak He thinks there are occupations more pleasant in their ultimate results than the one from which he has just disengaged himself.

* * *

That terror to human health and comfort, la grippe, has again made its appearance. It is acknowledged to possess that degree of "stick-to-it-ive-ness" which bids defiance to enemies and turns into monopolized possession all systems, coming under the shadow of its wings. It seems to be a terror on land and sea, going and coming at will without consulting anyone as to their pleasure in having its excellency for company.

* * *

A few mornings since, the electric pole in front of Kiblinger's hardware store was adorned with a peculiarly suggestive poster, presenting as it were, the art preservative in it its original crudeness, when boys and girls developed their taste for the artistic and beautiful by means of a piece of charcoal and pig [illegible] whose outside surface were otherwise in disuse. The caricatures were as crude as the typographical get up, and represented in distinct coloring the deplorable condition in which many of our once promising young men find themselves today—"cleaning spittoons for the drink there is in it." And while the poster, proper, was rudely gotten up purposely to illustrate some joke, it spoke volumes in eloquence to the reflective mind.

Court.

Court adjourned last Saturday, the last day being one of the busiest. The darkey who was caught stealing wheat down near New Era, at Carnahan's was brought up and in spite of the fact that he was caught in the act, and had besides acknowledged it to several, he still plead not guilty, and had counsel assigned him at the expense of the county, the trial to come off next term. Had he pleaded guilty he would have got off easier, and the county would have been saved a big expense. He gave his name as "Ed. Whetsell" instead of "Ed. Smith" the name he had before given. Various judgments were taken, some attacements made to "attach," and one or two divorce cases were started.

McElree's WINE OF CARDUI for female diseases.

Bills Introduced.

Since those named in our last, one has been offered to prevent the waste of natural gas by burning torches or flambeaus—one to fix rates on toll roads—to require the licensing of dogs—to provide that an election to change the county seat may be held, when 500 petition for it—to add vocal music to the common school branches—to regulate the charges at stockyards—to protect hotel keepers from deadbeats—to limit county superintendents to 100 days' work each year—by Dr. Teal, to compel certain persons to testify as experts in certain cases—by Mr. Kelley, to make it unlawful for courts to give judgment for attorney's fees, except on contracts already made—to make it unlawful to sell goods on the installment plan with intent to defraud—to compel supervisors to keep in good order, the approaches to bridges—to limit time to supervisors to ten days—to prevent the dumping of refuse into lakes where ice will be cut—to punish drunks, $10, $15 and $25 for 1st, 2nd and 3d drunk, and jail them till sober—to exempt poor persons, or those not owning a team, from doing road work—to prevent fraud in entries in horse races—to amend the libel law—to fine and imprison a dealer who sells short weight—to prevent any catching of fish from April 15 to June 15—to provide $30,000 for use in the soldiers' monument this year—to compel railroads to make passage ways for roads under the track when this can be done—to exempt actual indebtedness from taxation—to compel foreign insurance companies to reports their receipts twice a year.

Marriage Licenses.

William O. Stamets and Laura A. Anderson, Henry Hamm and Angela White, George W. Snell and Inez Green, Jacob Shull and Elizabeth Morr, Charles Wallace and Anna Groscup, John H. Baird and Alma E. Livergood, William E. Kocht and Laura Krise, Peter J. Parr and Louise Ziebell, Reuben Clouse and Amanda Lacy, William O. Greenwood and Blanche E. Young, George H Hull and Mary E. Draggoo, Burley A. Bohler and Elizabeth L. Wilhelm, John M. Lowe and Laura A. Bechtel, D. P. Olden and Lu'ey Pearl Demoss, George Bowman and Jennie Delong, Nevada Walter and Callie Fair, Roman Henke and Ida Delong.

REPUBLICAN papers still claim that a top-notch tariff reduces the price of articles and so enables the manufacturer to pay better prices. That is if you have a thing to sell, sell it at a low price so you can pay higher wages to your men. It takes a great brain to be a good republican high taxer.

Notice of Hearing of Ditch Petition.

In the matter of the petition of Charles Kelley et al, of Smithfield township, DeKalb county, state of Indiana, notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed with the Auditor of DeKalb County, State of Indiana, and viewers have been appointed who have viewed and reported said view which is on file in my office. The hearing of said petition upon its merits will be on Tuesday, the 3d day of March, 1891, the same being the 2d day of their March term, 1891.

The prayer of said petition is that a ditch be constructed on the following route to-wit:

MAN-O-TEE,
(INDIAN DOCTOR)
CURES CHRONIC DISEASES.

Read the Evidence and judge for Yourself.

HUNTINGTON, Ind., June 30, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
Two months ago I began to use your medicine; at that time I had had headaches, poor appetite, was weak and unable to do any work, felt tired and nervous and was troubled with severe neuralgic pains in different parts of the body; am now entirely free from pain, can eat well, sleep well and work without tiring. I can gladly recommend you to any who may be sick.
Yours truly,
GEO. HELSER.

NEBO, Ind., July 4, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
I have been troubled with Dispepsia for years. My symptoms were severe pains in the stomach after eating, bloating, poor appetite, constipation, palpitation of the heart, dull headache, dizzy spells, tired feeling, no strength, restless dreamy sleep, and being extremely nervous. This was my condition when I put my case in your care four months ago. I am a well and hearty man to day, and this result has been brought about by the use of your treatment during that time, for which I am truly thankful.
Respectfully,
F. M. JONES.

EPILEPSY CAN BE CURED.
PINE, Ind., Aug. 18, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
My son, Cyrus, has had Epilepsy for many years; would have as many as ten distinct fits in twelve hours, and they were growing worse on him day by day. I tried several doctors with no permanent benefit. Placed him under your treatment, and he is now well and hearty, and has had no attack for over one year. The fits are entirely cured. I consider that your treatment is positively reliable in these cases, and that you have saved my boy years of suffering from this most terrible of maladies. Yours truly,
JAMES E. KINZIE.

WABASH, Ind., July 5, 1890.
DR. MAN O-TEE:
If I could induce all ladies who are suffering from disease peculiar to their sex, to visit you, I would be glad to do so, for the benefit I have obtained from your treatment is a great comfort to me, and I gladly add my testimony to that of many others who have been cured.

WARSAW, Ind., Nov. 21st, 1890.
DR. MAN O-TEE:
Your treatment cured me of Rheumatism of over 20 years' standing. During the last five years was scarcely able to walk. Am now a well and hearty man.
Yours truly,
E. B. LEEDY.

WARSAW, Ind., Oct. 1st, 1890.
DR. MAN-O TEE:
Your treatment has cured me of the worst case of Catarrh I ever saw or heard of. Many say that catarrh can not be cured, but you have demonstrated that such is not the case, for you have cured me and many others here.
MRS. LOU BECKWITH.

VANDALIA, Mich., Aug. 6, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
I have been afflicted with Bleeding Piles for ten years; was so bad with them could not work half of the time; suffered severe pain day and night, and was rapidly losing flesh and strength. Used your treatment four months, and am perfectly cured. Can work hard, have no pain and am in as good health as I ever was in my life. I recommend you to any who may be suffering.
Respectfully,
JNO. N. BOHINE

ROANOKE, Ind., June 30, 1890.
To Whom it may Concern:
I have been treated during the last four months by Dr. Man-O-Tee, the Indian Doctor, for Catarrh, Headache and Nervous Debility. When I went to him, was scarcely able to be up and around. He helped me from the start, and I am now in better health than I have been for years. I consider Dr. Man O-Tee a skillful physician and recommend him to all who may require medical treatment.
Respectfully,
MRS. ANNA WARNER.

HAS SUFFERED FOR YEARS.
GOSHEN, Ind., June 19, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
During the past three months I have used your medicine for headache, cough, bronchitis and general debility, and can not speak too highly of you. No person ever suffered more from neuralgia and headache than I have, and I cannot thank you enough for the relief you have given me.
Yours respectfully,
MRS. ELIZABETH McDOWELL.

TO THE PUBLIC.
Many of you who are sick can be cured if given proper remedies. The above facts prove this. Twelve years extensive Hospital and private practice — 3 years INDIAN MEDICINE MAN. I use Roots, Barks and Herbs — Nature's remedies. Next visit to

The familiar face of Dr. J. V. Lewis, was seen on our streets last Friday. He was here to see a patient He is now permanently located at Butler, having returned from the west about two months ago. His wife's health was not good in the west, hence the return.

Dr. W. P. Carpenter, of Butler, was over here last Friday. He came to see young Sawyers who was brought here about a week before and put in charge of Dr. Sebring. It had been found advisible to take him to some healthier locality, and the two doctors decided to bring him here We are pleased to hear he is improving.

"LOST IN SORROW: REVERIE," transcribed for the piano by J. E. Ecker, just published by Ign. Fischer, Toledo, O., is a delightful piece for piano quite within the reach of young progressive pianists. The piece will be an enduring favorite, not merely because the melody is fresh and charming, but also from the fact that it combines, with melody, all the features of a bright and sparkling composition that will always be welcome and acceptable. Price, 40c. Ign. Fischer, publisher, Toledo, O.

Ligonier Banner: "The Columbia City Mail, the new republican paper, put in its appearance upon our table last week, and it seems to be a worthy successor to the Times, E. W. Brown's paper, which it supplanted. The new proprietors go at the business as if they already knew more about Whitley county politics than the "oldest inhabitant," and they "go for" things in a way that can but make them solid with the radically rantankerous ranters of which Columbia City has her fair share. In the meantime we notice that the Commercial, the old established repulican paper, has been enlarged and improved in many ways. Mr. Baker doesn't propose to be frozen out if he can help it."

There will be a Gospel temperance meeting at the Lutheran church next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. The program will consist of an address by Rev. Kain; recitation, by Grace Zimmerman, Paul Davenport and Rowena Teff; music by Arion Quartett; song, by Iva and Dora Fisher. All are cordially invited.

J. F. Snyder, former editor of the Lagrange democrat, and afterwards, postmaster at that place during Cleveland's administration, is about to enter the ministry. He is a member of the M. E. church. After all, it is but a short step, from a teacher of sound democracy, to being a teacher of the gospel. Everybody should believe in both.

St. Joe News: "We wonder if John Henderson had any remorse of conscience when he read in the COURIER last week of the untimely death of his old friend Calkins. It will be remembered that the old gentleman frequently stopped at John's when in this neighborhood and on one occasion John decoyed the old man into an old log stable where he had a number of cross rams, and closed the door to prevent his escape while he took the first degree in sheep husbandry."

The Dispatch does itself no credit by copying from a daily paper, a resolution by Representative Faulkner, in which were inserted words not properly spelled. The article was merely a drive at the member, for the facts are Faulkner spells as correctly as the Dispatch does. On a level with this sort of thing is also its allusion to the mythical "boy" of the ex-president. Those who are not equipped to fight on a higher plane, will learn in time, that great political parties do not have their origin, their existence, or their downfall, depending on truck of this sort.

Those who have not as yet seen the New Process Vapor stove, at Beuret's, should do so. It is a great invention. All you have to do is to turn a little gate and the gasolene goes to the burner in the form of gas, and you light it without waiting for it to heat as in the old kind. It seems almost impossible, but that is just the way it does. It makes no flash, no smoke nor smell, and burns quietly in a large blaze, covering the bottom of the kettle or other vessel used and so heating much quicker. Every one who is going to get a new gasolene stove should not fail to see the newest of the new, at Beuret's, in Auburn.

J. N. Boyle, the real estate hustler from Butler was in town last Friday. He is doing an extensive business in handling real estate both farm and county. We are pleased to see him in excellent health once more. He was accompanied by E. F. Needham, foreman in the Wabash Boiler Department at Butler. Both gentlemen are of the opinion that the Wabash will not build a new line from Montpelier. They are inclined, also, to think that the Lake Shore road will establish a passenger division at Butler in the near future, as there have been many changes made recently, that look that way. Other changes are to take place including the moving back of the Aldrich House, and the depot and office buildings.

Our life is made up of mistakes and the greatest one I ever made was not in using Loose's Extract of Red Clover long ago. I suffered two years, scarcely knowing a well day, with rheumatism and indigestion, had arrived at the conclusion that I was nothing but a trial to my friends and myself. I commenced taking your fluid extract of Red Clover in fact arrived at the point where I would take anything any one recommended. Saw your ad. and thought I would try a little newspaper recommendation on my own hook. Like all other remedies the first bottle seemed to do me good. But unlike all other remedies I discovered no bad effects from taking it. I am now on my thirteenth bottle and though perfectly well, go on the supposition that if a little does me so much good, will keep it up.

Very truly yours,
J. A. Eberling

The cold wave that struck here Tuesday, started in the Rocky Mountains last Friday and Saturday. It extended all over the country, the mercury going down to 20 or 30 below in some places. Here it stood 8 below Wednesday morning.

Monday was the famous groundhog day, and about noon, the sun shone out quite nicely for a time. So we suppose Mr. G. H. saw his shadow, and will give us a long spell of cold weather. At all events there was an inch or two of snow next morning.

The C. L. S. C. will meet next Saturday afternoon with Mrs. Plum. Program, Outline History of England, Miss Keeran; From Chaucer to Tennyson, Mrs. Dills; Studies in Astronomy, Mrs. Clifton; England after the Norman Conquest, Mrs. Yesbera; Recitation, Mrs. Plum.

J. A. Case, now in Washington, sends a copy of the Interstate Commerce Commission's latest report. He is assistant statistician and like all DeKalb boys, he has a good position. The report contains much interesting information about railroads. One item is to the point, Indiana has about 6,000 miles of railroad, or one mile to every six square miles of area.

We notice through a Kansas paper handed us, that Josephus Harner, a former resident of DeKalb county, has recently been elected to the state legislature of Kansas. Mr. Harner was born in this county, and for a number of years resided on the farm now owned, by Sol. Shilling. His friends here will be glad to know that in addition to being elected to a prominent office he has also become quite wealthy.—St. Joe News.

The attendance at the masquerade at rink last Saturday evening was immense. There was hardly standing room outside of the skating area. Almost everybody was there, though most of the skating was done by the maskers. The costumes were good and in good taste, better in all than the average. The order was excellent of course, for the managers always insist on that. Several young people were here from Butler, including Lola Springer, Lottie McLain and Rilla Baxter. There were also a number from Waterloo and Garrett whose names we did not learn.

Hicksville News: For years it has been the custom of the railroads of the country, to advertise by means of posters, cards, etc., but more recently they are beginning to adopt newspaper advertising. Several companies have tried the experiment and are well satisfied with the results of newspaper advertising. Several of the large railroad corporations of the country will confine their advertising business for the present year exclusively to the newspapers. The returns from newspaper advertising have been better to the railroad companies than from any other source of advertising.

The Waterloo Press is getting reckless again, in spite of our warning of the yawning abyss that opens perpetually for him who "bears false witness," etc. It says the COURIER claims that "Auburn business men have raised their prices on account of the McKinley bill." We said nothing of the kind call in him to show what we said. They may, or not have raised prices We don't know. What we do know is, that the McKinley bill compelled them to pay more for the goods they bought. No doubt if this advance is kept up, and it is in such a shape as to enable them to do so, they will have to advance prices likewise. We spoke of Mr. Harris, who had to pay $2.50 more per 1,000 for oyster cans. He still has to pay this. But whether this comes entirely out of him, as the consumer, or whether he has advanced the price to his customers, we can't say. Will the editor of the Press please read over the commandments again?

WINE OF CARDUI, a Tonic for Women.

Prof. Jordan at St. Joe Feb. 26.

There will be skating at the rink Saturday night.

Look out for a good supper next week, at the gentlemen's social.

Miss Woodhull's class gives a recital this evening at the residence of J. L. Davis.

Miss Edna Davis entertained a few of her young lady friends on Tuesday evening for tea.

Mrs. Ella Noonan, of Comanche Co. Kansas, is here visiting her sister-in-law, Mrs. Rickard and Mrs. Webb.

Fresh every day at the Union Bakery, cream, Vienna, rye, home-made and graham bread, pies and all kinds of cakes.

Miss Dollie Shook, who was here visiting her sister, Mrs. Eli Cochran, returned to her home at Corunna, Tuesday.

For a good, smooth and clean shave, done up in style, call on B. F. Stahl, the "south side laborer," at 100 South Main street.

For fine bread, cakes, pies, etc., fresh from the oven every day, call on H. Groscup, next door to Hoff's on West Seventh street.

Masks of all sizes, kinds and appearances. Most complete stock ever brought to the city. Come and see them at Robbins & McCord's.

Miss Mabel Hartman has a small class in elocution work. She is in every way fitted to give instructions, and should have the support of all interested.

Mr. Burk, who has run a dray line for several years, has bought an interest in J. A. Clifton's meat market. Everything is shining, and we predict success for the new firm.

B. M. Hastings returned from Ohio, last week, bringing with him his bride. They were married about three weeks ago, and will become permanent citizens of Auburn. The COURIER extends them a hearty welcome.

Jimmie Dills is now engaged with the firm of Schaab Bros., as a clerk. We are pleased to note this as he is a bright lad and every way worthy. We look to see him become one of the popular fixtures of that always popular establishment.

James Griswold has sold his land that lies about a mile north of town, and has bought several lots of George Lanning, just east of John Kooder's, between that and Cedar Creek. It will make him a good piece for gardening, a business at which he is an expert.

Sheriff Plum took young Town, a bad Butler boy, to the reform school at Plainfield Monday. While at Indianapolis, he visited our lawmakers, and found Mr. Kelley, Dr. Teal, Senator Jackson and the rest, hard at work, and business going on well.

Miss Mary Husselfeld, of Laporte, who came to our little city during the holidays, returned to her home Monday afternoon. She is a young lady of good qualities and during her few weeks' stay in this county, many new friends have been added to her already long list.

B. M. Hastings, agent for the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Co. has moved his office from the rooms over the Farmers Bank and will hereafter be found at the rooms of the Farmers Bank, where all who have business with him can find him, as he will be permanently located. Mr. H. has had a good deal of experience in the insurance business and his new location will be a convenient one for him and his patrons.

Several of our local masons, those of the "mystic tie" went over to Garrett Tuesday evening on some business connected with the order. They met there also, a lot of the brethren from Hicksville, and all had a pleasant time. Among those from here, were J. J. Van-Auken, D. Y. Husselman, Clerk Al. Bishop, W. H. McQuiston and others.

Miss Lucia May Wiant, will give one of her popular readings here Friday evening Feb. 20, for the benefit of the High School Library. We feel sure our people will turn out to hear this gifted lady. All who heard her at the county institute last summer, will be sure to enjoy another such a treat. Besides we all want to help the High School to secure a good library.

Rev. C. H. Payne D. D. of New York City, corresponding secretary of the educational society of the M. E. church has been secured for the dedicatory service of the new M. E. church. Dr. Payne is an able pulpit orator measuring up with the Bishops and leading divines of the day. He has been at the front in the educational work, having been the honored president of the Ohio Wesleyan University of Delaware for a number of years. This will be a rare treat for our people and all ought to go and hear him.

Big Presbyterian Social.

The men of the Presbyterian church and congregation are expecting to out do themselves on Friday evening of next week, in the way of giving the best 5 o'clock dinner ever before given by these gentlemen. The different committees are as follows:

ENTERTAINMENT.

E. D. Hartman, Dr. W. S. Allen, Dr. S. B. Johnston, J. A. Barns, A. J. Ralston.

John Shugers' Chickens.

Undoubtedly, the chap that tried to steal John Shugers' chickens a week or two ago, don't read the COURIER. But he likely borrows it of his neighbors if he has any neighbors. So, we will let him have a chance to see why he didn't get the last lot he went for. The first night he lugged off a batch, one of the boys heard the chickens squalling about three in the morning, and noticed the sound gradually dying away, as if they were being carried off across the fields. But he did not suspect any thieving. However, next morning he was speaking about it to Mr. S. and was surprised when the latter said he had not been disturbing the chickens. It appears that a dozen or so of the many he has, had been roosting on a big heap of brush, made by a number of fruit trees that had been cut down and piled away. It was these that had been disturbed the night before, no doubt. But they thought no more of the matter till a similar disturbance called it up that very evening. About ten o'clock just as the family were fairly abed, the low, alarmed clucking of the chickens was heard. It came very plainly from the direction of the brush pile. Mr. Shugers stepped to a point where he could see the pile, and there sure enough, were two chaps after the chickens. One of them said in a low, hasty command, to his pal, "Go 'round on the other side," meaning we suppose that the roosting birds could be better reached from the other side. But he didn't get there for Mr. Shugers reached back, got his shotgun and hastily fired. The load went over their heads slightly, but such a rush, and scramble and run, has not often been known in that school district. A second shot fairly lifted them over the fence as they flew. Didn't either of 'em say," you go first and I'll foller." It was hard to tell which would break his neck first. Mr. S. thinks the "McKinley Bill" made his chickens popular, but he has entered into a bargain with the old shotgun, to "pint a little lower next time."

A Friendly Farewell.

Mr. and Mrs. Steller, of Corunna, (the day operator at the station) have departed from our midst and we can only cheerfully submit to the fact, knowing as we do that what is our loss will be the gain to the community where they may be cast. During their stay among us they have endeared themselves in the hearts of the people here and desiring to manifest their love and esteem for them in some way, therefore, on the evening of the 22nd, their neighbors and friends numbering about 75 gave them a surprise taking with them some token of remembrance. Mrs. Steller was presented with a beautiful lamp and a number of other presents by the ladies. Mr Steller was also remembered by the brotherhood of the K. P., Mr. Trumble making a presentation speech in a plain and touching manner which caused many tears to flow. Mr. Steller responding in as many words as such an occasion could command. The night being far spent we all went to our homes feeling it was an occasion long to be remembered. And may you dear brother and sister by the light of that beautiful lamp so study the light of the glorious Gospel of the Son of God, that it will guide you into all truth. And may each of our lives be in accordance with its teachings that we may all gain an entrance into that eternal city, where God himself is the light and tears and farewells are unknown.

YOUR MANY FRIENDS

The Governor's Arithmetic.

Hovey must be "poor in 'rithmetic." In his message Jan. 9 he speaks of the tax rate in New York as being 3 52 mills on the dollar, and adds that this would be but 3.52 cents on the hundred dollars, the way we levy taxes. But the children in our primary schools, will tell the governor of the state of Indiana, that 3.52 mills on one dollar, would be 100 times as much on one hundred dollars. Then they would walk to the blackboard and prove it to the governor, by writing down 3 52 mills, and then multiplying this by 100. Written as a decimal, 3.52 mills, would be .00352, which shows the rate on each dollar paid by New York. Now, the child multiplies this by 100 by removing the decimal point two places to the right, and it now stands, .352, or 35 and 2 tenths cents on the hundred. So the governor's attempt to disparage Indiana to the glorification of an eastern state, fails. He makes the same error when he speaks of the "one mill" state levy of Connecticut, as "one cent," it should be "ten cents." So it will be seen after explaining Hovey's poor arithmetic, that while the Indiana levy is 12 cents, Connecticut levies 10, and New York 35 2 cents. As we have often shown, the most important element of success that the republican party lacks and has always lacked, is a common school education. As education and intelligence continue to spread, so does the republican party go down and out. The democratic party of Indiana has been wise in fostering the best common school system the world ever knew.

Obituary.

Ray W. Maurer was born in Jackson township, DeKalb county, Ind., July 14, 1883, and departed this life January 31, 1891, aged 7 years, 6 months and 17 days. He was an unusually bright child, obedient and affectionate, also the bright promise of his parents. But he has been called while in his youth to his resting place. The funeral services were held in the U. B. church last Sabbath at 11 a. m., Rev. S. P. Klotz officiating. The remains were interred in the Auburn cemetery to await the resurrection morning. May God bless the bereaved parents and grant a reunion in heaven where sorrow comes no more.

Unclaimed Letters.

Unclaimed letters remaining in the postoffice at Auburn, Ind., for the week ending Jan. 30, 1891. Mrs. J. Hull, Mrs. Fannie Kesler, Miss Emma Langley, Joseph H. Hepp (2), Joseph Shoelmire, Noah Williams, Wm. Busbey.

Claimants will please call for letters in advertised list.

It's easy enough to be merry and gay,
When no clouds obscure the sky,
And no man finds any cause to kick high.
hanging goose is

But when times change, and a fellow finds
That he has no earthly show,
He kicks like forty steers, because His luck is roosting
low.

Changed the Name.

At the stockholders' meeting of our agricultural society last Thursday, some important business was done. Among the rest, they changed the name of the association from "DeKalb County Fair" to "Auburn District Fair." This change was made because, it was found we had no show with the railroad companies, unless our name indicated a "district fair." They will not give good rates and special trains to a "county fair" although it may be the very same thing. Then, again, everybody will come to the "Auburn Fair" anyway, so the change is a very proper one to make.

Excursion to New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes sleep all night, cough gone, gained 7 pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered, so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
McDOUGALL.

PUT HERE ON RECORD

ARE THE RECENT EVENTS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

Frightful Disaster to Fishermen on Saginaw Bay—A Locomotive Explodes—A Cleveland Judge Kills a Burglar.

ADRIFT ON THE ICE.

A Fishing Village Driven Out Into Lake Huron.

A special from Bay City, Mich., says: Much excitement prevails here concerning the report that many fishermen have drifted into Lake Huron on an ice-field carried out in Saginaw Bay by the strong south wind. The fishing village is about fifteen miles northeast of this city and five miles from land. It is estimated that 300 men were engaged in spearing fish and the first reports are to the effect that all were lost. Toward evening several of the fishermen reached Essexville, a suburb of this city, and reported that most of their companions reached the shore in safety. The best authority obtainable places the number of castaways at from twenty to fifty. Those acquainted with the situation say they will reach the shore before the ice passes outside of Saginaw Bay. In case they do not, there is no hope of their being rescued.

The story of the disaster, so far as known, is that during the night the wind had driven the ice out towards the lake, taking with it all the fishermen who were on the floe in their shanties numbering about 200 men. They were distributed all over the bay for miles. Six of the lost men managed to get to the shore twelve miles east of the river, having been on the eastern portion of the ice. Dennis Bonnette, who had his house on the ice, says he thinks about twenty men got ashore on the east side of the bay, near Big Creek. The others will escape if the seas, which are running mountains high, do not break up the ice.

Germany and the Saloons.

Berlin special: It is expected that a general law for the suppression of drunkenness will be enacted and put in force in all the States of the German confederation before the year is ended. A bill on the subject has been prepared by the Prussian Government and has received the approval of the Emperor, who, from the day he succeeded to the throne, has persistently demanded some restrictions upon the sale of intoxicating liquors. For nearly three years the Government ministers have been engaged in collecting statistics and evidence on the points concerned, and decisions at last arrived at have already been sanctioned by the Bundesrath. The bill decrees the withdrawal of saloon licenses and the imposition of fines upon saloons keepers who encourage persons of inebriate habits. The drunkards themselves will be fined if they are poor, so as to prevent them from indulging in the vice of intemperance, and terms of imprisonment are to be imposed in cases where monetary fines would presumably not have the desired effect.

Just Like a Chicken.

There is a tiny mite of babyhood weighing just three pounds in the babies' hospital, at New York. The infant is a male and its mother died in giving it birth. The baby weighed just three pounds when it was turned over to the babies' hospital a few days ago. It was decided that the only chance of saving the child was to place it in an incubator. This consists of a box about three feet long and eighteen inches wide, with a glass cover, one end of which is slightly raised to give ventilation. Inside a bed of soft cotton is made on a small shelf and on this the infant rests. The temperature of the incubator is kept at 92 degrees.

Horrible Death of a Child.

A probable double tragedy is reported from Edmond, O. T. Starkweather and his son-in-law, James Funk, were burning the prairie when the former's 4-year-old-daughter, by some means, got in front of the flames. In a moment her clothes ignited and before succor could reach her she was so badly burned that she died in a few moments. Funk, who dashed in the flames in the attempt to rescue the child, is horribly burned and is not expected to survive.

Prisoners Escape.

Seven prisoners, including Sam Deese, of Bridgeport, Alabama, sentenced for life, escaped from the Scottsboro, Ala., jail. One of the prisoners forced a spike out of the floor, and made a chisel out of it. When the jailor's daughter brought in the suppers the prisoners forced the locks from the doors and made a rush for liberty. Four prisoners refused to leave the jail. None of the escaping party have been captured.

A Passenger Engine Explosion.

The engine of a passenger train on the Cleveland, Canton and Southern railroad exploded a few miles outside of Cleveland, while on its way south. The engineer, Oscar Greenwald, of Canton, was instantly killed, and the fireman, Edward Hellman, was so badly injured that he died shortly after the accident. One car left the track, but none of the passengers were hurt.

He Brought Down the Rascals.

Two burglars were going through Judge H. J. Ewing's house at Crawford and Lyman streets, Cleveland, Ohio, when the Judge opened fire with a pistol. John Farley, a colored man, one of the thieves, was mortally wounded.

Shot by a Policeman.

William Britton, a negro prisoner at Corsicana, Mo., was shot and instantly killed by a policeman while attempting to escape from a street working gang.

Two Men Killed.

During quite a severe snow storm, way freight No. 38, east-bound, and an extra, No. 49, west-bound (freight train), collided about three miles west of Corry, Pa., on the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio road. Lew Osgood, a well-known engineer, residing in Pittsburgh, and his fireman, named Ohmzen, were killed.

Foster For Secretary of Treasury.

The Republican Senators of the Ohio Legislature have sent a petition to President Harrison asking that ex-Governor Foster be appointed Secretary of the Treasury.

Gen. Miles' Policy.

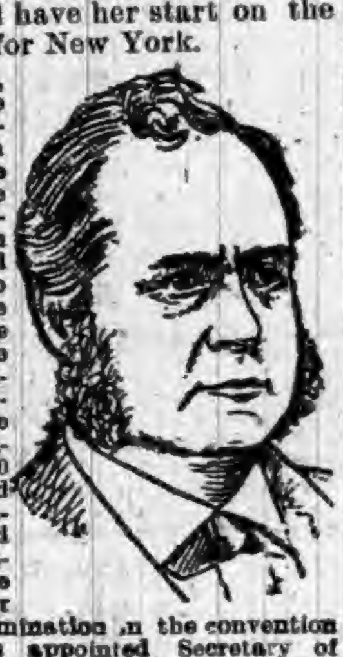
When shown a dispatch from Washington criticising his action in disposing of the Indians placed at Fort Sheridan, Gen. Miles indulged in a laugh. Becoming serious he said: "That Indians are now quartered at Fort Sheridan is purely a matter of military consideration. It does not require any consultation, as it is entirely within the jurisdiction of my department." The General was asked if it was his intention to send the Indians now at Fort Sheridan to Washington. He replied: "Never for a moment! In an interview which was obtained from me the day I came back from the Northwest I stated that the purpose of keeping those savages there was to prevent any possibility of another outbreak in the spring. This is my purpose now."

SUDDEN SUMMONS.

Secretary Windom Drops Dead at a Banquet.

The sudden death of Secretary Windom, of the Treasury, while at the dinner of the Board of Trade and Transportation, at New York, caused the immediate adjournment of that body a few minutes after 10 o'clock. The Secretary was the first speaker of the evening. The dinner, which began at 6 o'clock, was completed shortly after 9 p. m., and the Secretary arose to speak. He entertained the diners with a most elaborate oration and sat down amidst the loud applause and cheers of his auditors. Judge Arnoux was in the midst of a speech introducing ex-Secretary Bayard, when some one cried, "Look at Secretary Windom!" The speech was broken short and every eye was turned in the direction of that gentleman. He had sunk in his chair and was falling to the floor. His face was ghastly, and a cry of horror arose among the late festive revelers. Drs. S. A. Robinson, Durant, Whitney, Fisher, and Bishop were soon at his chair. Dr. Robinson bent down, and making a close examination of the prostrate form, discovered that the heart was still beating. By his orders the dying Secretary was carried into the dish room adjoining the banquet hall and there placed on a table. Messengers were hastily dispatched for electric batteries and four were applied to body, which was rapidly growing cold. This was exactly at 10:05 p. m. For six minutes the electric shocks were applied incessantly, but without success. At 10:11 p. m. Judge Arnoux came out of the dish room and said: "He is dead!" The words went to the heart of every man who heard them. The brilliant orator of a few minutes before, aglow with enthusiasm, predicting his future policy in the Treasury was only a mass of clay.

The Secretary had succumbed to an attack of the heart. He had been for a long time a sufferer from heart disease and only the other day was visited by a shock which, however, passed away without causing him much inconvenience. When it was officially announced that the Secretary was dead, Secretary Tracy at once went to the nearest telegraph office and sent a message to President Harrison, informing him of the sad event and requesting him to communicate with Mrs. Windom and have her start on the 11:10 p. m. train for New York.



William Windom, Secretary of the Treasury for a second time, was born in Ohio in 1827. He was admitted to the bar and became Prosecuting Attorney in his native State, and in 1853 removed to Minnesota, where he was elected to the Thirty-sixth and the four subsequent Congresses, taking an important part in the management of Indian affairs. In 1870 he was appointed Senator to fill an unexpired term, and was afterward elected for two terms. He was a candidate for the Presidential nomination in the convention of 1880, and was appointed Secretary of the Treasury by President Garfield's Cabinet. He resigned when Vice-President Arthur succeeded to the Presidency and engaged in rail road and other financial enterprises, making his home principally in New York until he was recalled by President Harrison to his former post.

WEIGHT OF WOE.

Secretary Windom's Remains at Washington.

Washington special: The remains of the late Secretary Windom arrived here and were met at the depot by the President and members of the Cabinet and officers of the Treasury Department. Following the casket were the President and Vice-President arm in arm, Secretaries Blaine and Proctor, and behind them other Cabinet officials. Then followed a long line of Treasury officials. The line of carriages reached from the depot far into the capitol grounds. After the remains were placed in the hearse, the procession moved to the late residence of the Secretary on Massachusetts avenue, where the remains were removed from the hearse and placed in a position in the parlor. The casket was then opened, and the members of the Cabinet and others were permitted to view his remains, after which they withdrew, leaving the dead Secretary with his family, who had remained in retirement until the others had taken their departure.

The Secretary of State issued a formula announcing the death and the President's order directing the closing and drapery of the departments.

The President directs that all departments and executive branches of the Government and officers subordinate thereto shall manifest due respect to the memory of this eminent citizen in a manner conservant with the dignity of the office which he has honored by his devotion to public duty.

Gossip is already busy with probabilities as to Mr. Windom's successor, and the general belief is that Congressman McKinley, whose term in the House expires shortly, and whose fitness by reason of his prominent connection with financial legislation is conceded, will be selected.

DOWN AN INCLINE.

A Kansas City Cable Car, Containing Nine Persons, Dashed to Pieces.

Kansas City special: A runaway cable train ran down the Union Depot incline and it was only by the merest chance that a number of lives were not lost. The incline is 1,000 feet long, and descends at an angle of thirty degrees from Summit street to an elevated station east of the Union Depot. At Summit street the grip broke, the brakes failed to work, and the train, unrestrained, shot down the incline at lightning speed. The passenger car contained nine persons, among them L. J. Bricker, employed in the Burlington ticket office, and C. E. Davidson, of Neosho, Kan. The ladies in the car rushed for the door to escape, but Mr. Bricker and Mr. Davidson restrained them and saved their lives. The train kept to the rails until it reached the curve at the bottom of the incline, when the grip-car jumped the track and turned over on its side. The passenger coach crashed into it and reduced it to splinters. Gripman Bosley was seriously injured, but will recover. None of the passengers were hurt excepting C. E. Davidson. He was cut with glass and badly bruised.

Irish Statesmen Compromise.

The London Times says it is reported on good authority that a settlement of the differences in the Irish factions has been arrived at. Parnell and O'Brien will go to America; McCarthy will remain chairman for the present, and Dillon will surrender himself to imprisonment, the understanding being that he will be nominated as leader at the next session. O'Brien has written a long letter to the Times, regarding Balfour's speech, as to the origin and working of the plan of campaign. Lobby rumors confirm settlement reported in the Times.

Four Firemen Hurt.

A fire in Wiler's building on Fifth street, Philadelphia, caused a loss of $35,000. During the progress of the fire four firemen were injured. The names of the injured are: Samuel Dunlapp, assistant engineer, fatally; James Sheahan, foreman engine company No. 22; Michael Keevan, hoseman engine 2; James Garrity, assistant engineer engine 20. The three last named will recover. They were all crushed by the elevator giving way and falling on them.

At Windom's Bier.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. William Windom, were held at the church of the Covenant in Washington. The vast concourse comprised more officials of President Harrison's administration than have ever before gathered together in one edifice. The scene was impressive in its solemnity and awe inspiring in its simple grandeur. Gathered within the walls of the stately white marble church were the Nation's greatest statesmen, the most renowned diplomats of foreign countries, the highest officers of the army and navy of the United States, the most brilliant women of the social world, while mingling in the vast crowd were many whose plain dress bespoke the position in social life and emphasized the truth that "death levels all ranks." Rev. D. Hamlin, of the Presbyterian Church, officiated, and the remains were deposited in the Rock Creek Cemetery.

Negroes Shot Down Like So Many Dogs.

A dastardly crime occurred at Carbon Hill, in Walker County, Ala., the other night. A mob of white men, supposed to be ex-strikers, surrounded a negro cabin, occupied by nine colored men, and, without warning, burst open the doors and opened fire on the occupants. The mob used shotguns, Winchester rifles, and pistols. The colored men were taken perfectly unawares and did not have time to defend themselves before they were shot down like so many dogs. A perfect fusillade of leaden balls poured into the little cabin, and the occupants fell right and left, bleeding and groaning, after about sixty shots had been fired. Their murderous work fully accomplished, the band of desperadoes fled, and, so far as is known, their identy had not yet been established, nor has any of them been arrested. A number of colored men were put to work at the mines in place of the strikers, and since then ill-feeling has existed between the factions.

Covering Their Tracks.

New Orleans special: The lottery managers evidently wish to cover some of their tracks. Last week suspicions were aroused among some of the stockholders, when in collecting their dividends they were required to sign a heading on receipt book indorsing all expenditures by the lessees, authorizing the destruction of all vouchers for money expended and approving the management of the corncern. Several of the stockholders refused to sign this extraordinary resolution. The lottery company wishes to destroy certain vouchers and books in order to save itself and certain legislaturers and judges from exposure, that will certainly be made, should the anti-lottery movement triumph at the coming State election.

Plucky Ohio Women.

The residence of W. C. Cannon at Locust Grove, Adams County, Ohio, was entered by two burglars. Mr. Cannon was not at home, no one being in the house except Mrs. Cannon and daughter. It was at a late hour, and the burglars in rummaging the house awoke the occupants, who immediately jumped from their beds, armed themselves with shotgun and revolver, and started to chase out the offenders, who fired at them several times. They succeeded in driving out the burglars after firing several shots, one of which took effect in the arm of one of them.

Another Outbreak.

Oporto, Portugal, special: Three regiments of infantry in the garrison revolted. Fighting between the rebels and loyalists is now in progress in the streets. It is rumored that many have been killed on both sides. Citizens are barricading houses. The population hold aloof from the movement at present. The alleged object of the mutineers is to establish a republic. The municipal guard and all the garrison, except the three regiments, remain loyal. The Government is sending troops from other points to this city.

Nearly a Riot.

Decatur (Ill.) special: During the progress of the Crawford murder trial a riot was nearly precipitated in the court room. William Woodruff, a witness for the defense said Mrs. Mathias had had improper relations with different men, with the knowledge and consent of her husband. Mathias arose and said: "You're a liar, —— you," and in the same instant raised a chair to assault the witness. Mathias is a powerful man, and it required several baliffs to disarm him. A hundred men started toward the witness, and several revolvers were flourished. Some time elapsed before order was restored.

Killed by the Lymph.

George M. Bradley, who was the first patient in this country to receive the Koch treatment, died at New Haven, Conn., and the son of Prof. Blake, another lymph patient, who has been under treatment for nearly two months, is at the point of death. Bradley was not in an advanced stage of consumption when he began receiving treatment. The inoculation had a distressing effect upon his throat, making it difficult and extremely painful for him to take any nourishment, and his physicians state that his death was undoubtedly hastened by his condition.

Smuggling in Chinamen.

Wholesale smuggling of Chinamen into the United States has been going on at West Superior, all winter. The celestials are brought to Canadian ports from China and then make their way to Port Arthur. They are provided with transportation into the United States in sleighs and wagons, in most cases being brought a distance of about 300 miles to Two Harbors, Minn., at which point the Duluth and Iron Range Railroad conveys them to their ultimate destination. Arrests will probably be made in a day or two.

Sullivan on a Drunk.

A special from Janesville, Wis., says John L. Sullivan created a panic among the members of his theatrical company near Harvard on his way to Freeport. He insulted one of the women of the troupe, threshed the man who protested, and took possession of the train. When the train stopped he drove all the passengers and the trainmen from the depot platform. Traveling Passenger Agent Gibson, of the Chicago and Northwestern road, finally coaxed him into a private car and took him to Rockford to sober up.

Killed by Electricity.

At the Edgar Thompson Tool Works, at Pittsburgh, Pa., William Brown and Charles King were sent to the rear of the converting-room to do some work. A loose electric wire was hanging near them and they began fooling with it. The dynamo was not in operation, but while they were fooling the current was turned on. Brown was killed instantly, and King was thrown several feet and severely burned. Brown leaves a widow and two children.

A Murderer Confesses.

Columbia, (S.C.) special: Waite Martin, colored, confessed to the murder of Alice McLeod, who mysteriously disappeared recently. Heretofore he has denied all knowledge of the woman's whereabouts. The woman's body was found in the river and when Martin was informed of this fact he weakened. He confessed that he chocked her to death in a fit of rage, tied rocks to her body, kissed her cold lips, and pushed her into the river.

Sixteen Lives Lost.

Capt. Borne, of the schooner Georgiana, reports three shipwrecks in the lower Gulf of Mexico during the last days of December. The first was the foundering of a bark at Cayma Brac, December 25, name unknown; six of the crew were lost. The American schooner Maggie E. Gray, wrecked on Little Cayman Island, vessel and cargo a total loss. The schooner Contest, from Ruatan for Samaica, capsized on the 23rd. Ten lives were lost, including the Captain's wife.

Another Mine Horror.

A part of the Chapin mine, at Iron Mountain, the largest and most productive in Michigan, caught fire at the sixth level. The fire has spread to an alarming extent and smoke is pouring from all the shafts of the mine. Eight men are under ground without any possible escape. It is thought that they have probably succumbed to the smoke. How the fire started is not known. The tops of the shafts are being covered to prevent the air from entering them.

A Youthful Thief.

The boy, George Green, who was arrested in Saginaw, Mich., at the request of the New York police, is wanted for stealing $7,000 worth of diamonds from the room of Miss Patterson, of Michigan, who was a guest of the Fifth Avenue Hotel during New Year's week. Miss Patterson is now in Michigan. Inspector Byrnes declines to give the place of her residence.

Crushed to a Pulp.

As William Hildenbrand was returning home from Jackson, Ohio, near the Tropic Furnace, he was struck by an engine on the Ohio Southern Railroad, and was caught under the wheels, his lower extremities being ground into a pulp. The engine and fourteen coal cars passed over him. He lived twenty-five minutes. He was about sixty-five years old, and was a widower.

Three Negroes Burned in a Jail.

Friars' Point, (Miss.) special: Early Tuesday morning the town jail was discovered to be in flames, and the prisoners were heard shrieking for rescue. The marshal, who had the key, lived some distance from the jail, and before his arrival the prison was entirely destroyed, and three negro prisoners were burned to death. The prisoners started the fire by trying to burn the door in order to effect their escape.

Bursted for $100,000.

At Butte, Mont., an attachment was levied on the store of James B. Boyce & Co., one of the largest and oldest dry goods houses in the West, at the instance of the First National Bank. The attachment was levied to force an assignment, which was made near midnight to D. P. Porter the book keeper of the bank. The assets are stated to be $125,000. The gross liabilities are estimated at $100,000.

Life Imprisonment for a Paltry Sum.

John Coleman, who murdered William Roberts in August last in a quarrel originating over $1.25, and was captured in St. Louis, was found guilty of murder at Indianapolis, the jury returning a life sentence. Seven jurors voted for several hours to hang the defendant. Both men are colored.

Burned to Death.

A fire started in the town of Cygnet, Ohio, and six blocks of buildings were destroyed and three persons burned to death. The names of the victims are: P. Moleny, Frank Satterly, and Gertrude Satterly. It is feared that two others have perished. The loss is estimated at $100,000, with little or no insurance.

Twenty-Five People Killed.

Dispatches from Greece tell of a horrible disaster wrought by an avalanche. One of these huge masses of snow, ice, and earth came rolling down from the mountain upon the town of Athamana with terrible results. Twenty-five persons were killed outright and many were injured, while eighty houses were destroyed.

It Will Fly.

The air ship is a success. So at least a large audience that witnessed a test at the Chicago Exposition Building were decidedly inclined to declare. To all appearance it was thoroughly demonstrated that a craft has at least been invented that permits feats of navigation never before accomplished, propelling and steering.

Terrible Railroad Accident.

A terrible railroad accident is reported a few miles from Griffin, Ga. No details can be learned, but it is reported that seventeen persons are killed and many injured.

Serious Collision.

A mixed train on the Utah Northern from Butte and the regular passenger north-bound came into collision a half mile from Dillon. Engineer Frost and Fireman Tussell were killed and several passengers injured.

Blown to Atoms.

A wagon load of nitro-glycerine exploded near St. Mary's, Ohio. The drivers, horses, and wagon were blown to atoms. A big hole in the ground was all that told the story.

Insurgents Badly Defeated.

A decided engagement had taken place off Aceud between the fleets of the Chilian Government and those of the insurgents, in which the former was victorious.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

THE following bills were introduced in the Senate, January 26: Amending the gravel road law; amending an act relative to the distribution of decedents' estates; prohibiting other than relatives or those having official authority from visiting certain wards in the insane asylums; also, making it discretionary with the Superintendents of such asylums whether visitors shall be admitted to any of the wards; providing for surveys for and improvements of drains; amending an act governing the construction of street railways; providing for the distribution of an excess of funds assessed and collected for the construction of free gravel roads. Committee on Roads. Also: To provide for the transfer of insane convicts from the State prisons or reformatory institutions to the insane asylums; protecting domestic animals, and to provide for the registration of dogs; making the gravel roads within the corporate limits of cities bordered by lands used for agricultural purposes a part of the free gravel-road system of the county; legalizing conveyances made by trustees of estates to creditors. The House passed a resolution refusing to appropriate money for a World's Fair exhibit as long as there is a probability of the election bill becoming a law.

IN the Senate, January 27, a bill prohibiting the use of natural gas in flambeaus was ordered engrossed. The entire afternoon was devoted to a discussion of the concurrent resolution passed by the House withholding appropriations for the World's Fair until the United States Senate has disposed of the force bill. The resolution was adopted by a strict party vote.

IN the House there was a favorable report from the Judiciary Committee on Mr. Gleasner's bill for the regulation of insanity inquests, and the care of those thus adjudged insane, and the bill was ordered engrossed. Other bills, coming from this committee, were disposed of as indicated: Mr. Baker's, concerning grand and petit juries, indefinitely postponed; Mr. Smith's, regarding vacancies in the offices of Justice of the Peace, indefinitely postponed. Mr. Linemuth, amending the law regarding changes of venue, engrossed.

THE Senate, January 28, passed the following bills: Abolishing the office of State Mine Inspector and creating the office of State Inspector of Mines; requiring manufacturing and mercantile establishments to furnish chairs for their women and girl employes when the latter are not engaged at their work; requiring corporations to pay their employes every two weeks and prohibiting the use of scrip; reducing the rate of interest on school-fund loans from 8 per cent. to 6; providing for recording in its pendents record orders of court affecting the disposition of real estate; providing that constables may arrest horse-thieves without warrant and hold them until a warrant can be procured. A large number of unimportant bills were passed by the House and a few new ones introduced.

THE following bills were passed by the Senate, Jan. 29: Legalizing the acts of deputy county officials under age; defining rape and providing penalties; making decisions of the Supreme Court evidence in certain cases; making more specific the provisions of the Barret law for the improvement of streets and alleys and construction of sewers; giving town trustees the same authority in the matter of making street improvements as that possessed by township trustees and road supervisors; legalizing the incorporation of Leavenworth, Crawford County. The following bills were read a third time and passed: In the House. Amending the law relating to mortgages so as to allow but fifteen days to record mortgages after they are made. The present law allows forty-five days to make such record. Abolishing the office of State Inspector of Oils and creating the office of State Supervisor of Oil Inspection, enabling cities and incorporated towns to license junk dealers, pawnbrokers and second hand dealers; to require them to keep registers of all pawns, purchases and exchanges, which registers shall be open at all times to the authorities, and making it unlawful for such dealers to buy, exchange or accept from persons under 18 years of age any articles or pawns except upon a written order from parents. This bill is designed to put a stop to petty thieving. Amending the act relating to the Plainfield Reformatory.

IN the Senate, Jan. 30, memorial from Farmer's Alliance and various labor organizations, asking for a number of reforms, among them being the passage of a fee and salary bill, and the enactment of a law taxing corporations to increase the State Revenue. Bills were introduced amending the Grubbs libel law, making Prosecuting Attorneys ex-officio members of Boards of County Commissioners. The Judiciary Committee reported favorable on a bill providing for the employment of five amanuenses by the Judges of the Supreme Court. Adjourned till Monday at 11 a. m. In the House, apportionment bills introduced. Chicago "pot hunters" to be excluded from the Kankakee regions. Adjourned till Monday, 2 p. m.

Started the Graveyard.

Out in the Erie coal fields near Burlington, Col., a few years ago a lean, freckle-faced fellow, with Spanish heels on his boots, walked into the Stone and Quartz saloon, at Burlington, and leaning his long body on his bony arms on the bar, turned round to the half dozen loiterers in the place, and with a drawl drew his lantern jaw down on his flannel shirt and said:

"How long has this yer camp been a runnin'?"

"Two years," replied the bartender, without raising his eyes.

"Graveyard begun yit?"

"Not yet."

"'Bout time the camp had one. S'pose I start one?"

One bony arm left the bar. It never reached it's owner's belt. There was a noise that sounded like a man dropping a log chain in an empty hardware store, and this noise was followed by a crash of exploding six shooters from the holsters. A curtain of white smoke rolled up against the ceiling. The man at the bar made a lurch and then fell upon the floor. Six bullets were in his body.

A graveyard was started in Burlington next morning. The lean man started it himself. Burlington is now wiped out, but high up on Boar Rib Butte is one grave. It is the only one the camp left. —N. Y. Dispatch.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

IN the Senate, on the 27th, House bill providing for the payment of Indian depredations claims was considered until 2 o'clock, when the apportionment bill was taken up as the unfinished business, the question being on Mr. Davis' amendment to increase the total number of Representatives from 356 (as proposed in the House bill) to 360, and giving an additional member to each of the States of Arkansas, Minnesota, Missouri and New York. Mr. Davis explained and advocated the amendment. In the House a bill passed for a railway bridge over the Missouri between Council Bluffs and Omaha. The House then went into committee on the military academy appropriation bill. In the course of the general debate, Mr. Rogers of Arkansas, referred to the recent Indian war as unprovoked and indefensible. If the report of the massacre at Wounded Knee were correct, the massacre was the most shameful murder in the annals of our national history. If they were true, the committee to whom the resolution of inquiry had been referred should lose no time in providing for a thorough investigation.

THERE remain but twenty-nine days of the session and the two houses will be required to work with industry to properly complete the necessary legislation within that period. In order to make up some of the time lost the Senate will hereafter meet at 11 o'clock and as the Senate, when it does settle down to work, proceeds with commendable earnestness, ignoring trifles and technicalities, the belated appropriation bills and other measures that are considered urgent will be speedily disposed of. The Senate has five of the thirteen general appropriation bills, of which three are on the calendar, namely, pension, fortifications and army. In addition to these the Senate Committee has in course of examination and will soon be ready to report the navy and District of Columbia bills. Before these are reported the House will have completed seveṭal others of the supply bills that are now on the calendar of that body.

SENATORS GORMAN, Gibson and Faulkner, on the 29th, informed the Democratic leaders in the House that they had been formally notified by the Republican Senators in charge of the elections bill that no further effort would be made to bring up either the bill or the closure resolutions. The death of the bill is certain to be followed by the demise of free coinage. It is now doubtful if the free coinage measure will get out of the Coinage Committee unless the House takes it out. The Senate, by a strict party vote passed the apportionment bill just as it came from the House. Four amendments were introduced to increase by one each the Representatives in Congress from Arkansas, Minnesota, Missouri and New York. All were defeated.

THE solemn and impressive duty of announcing the death of Secretary Windom to the Senate was performed by Mr. Morrill, the venerable "Father of the Senate." When the Senate was called to order on the morning of the 30th, nearly every Senator was in his seat, and it was obvious from the air of solemnity that pervaded the chamber that something out of the ordinary had occurred. There was also an air of sadness in the House, and unusual attention was paid to the prayer of the Chaplain. Resolutions of respect were adopted and a committee appointed to attend the funeral. Both houses then adjourned until after the interment.

IN the Senate, on the 31st, a number of bill were reported from committees and introduced. Mr. Cullom presented the resolutions of the House of Representatives of Illinois instructing the Senators from that State to vote against the Lodge bill and for the free coinage bill. He said he regarded the resolutions in the nature of petitions and asked that they be filed in the records of the Senate. So ordered. Mr. Morrill offered a resolution for the appointment of a committee of seven Senators to join the House in attending the funeral of Secretary Windom. The resolution was agreed to and Messrs. Morrill, Washburn, Allison, Harris, Payne and Gorman were appointed. The army appropriation bill was then taken up and passed. The House, on the same date, passed the military academy appropriation bill and immediately went into committee of the whole on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Walking Fishes.

It may seem absurd to speak of fishes as walking. The flying-fish is well known, but its flight looks much like swimming in the air. We naturally think of fishes as living all the time in water; as being incapable, in fact, of living anywhere else. But nature maintains no hard and fast lines of distinction between animal life which belongs on the land and that which belongs to the water. If we can believe the accounts of naturalists and there are no grounds for doubting them—there are fishes that traverse dry land and others that walk on the bottom of the sea.

It is reported that Dr. Francis Day, of India, has collected several instances of the migration of fishes by land from one piece of water to another. Layard once met some perch-like fishes traveling along a hot and dusty gravel road at midday. Humboldt saw a species of dorus leaping over the dry ground, supported by its pectoral fins; and he was told of another specimen that had climbed a hillock over twenty feet in height.

A French naturalist published in the "Transactions of the Linnæan Society of Normandy," 1842, an account of his observations on the ambulatory movements of the gurnard at the bottom of the sea. He observed these movements in one of the artificial sea-ponds or fishing-traps, surrounded by nets, on the shore of Normandy.

He saw a score of gurnards close their fins against their sides like the wings of a fly in repose, and, without any movement of their tails, walk along the bottom by means of six free rays, three on each pectoral fin, which they placed successively on the ground.

They moved rapidly forward and backward, to the right and left, groping in all directions with these rays, as if in search of small crabs. Their great heads and bodies seemed to throw hardly any weight on the slender rays, or feet, being suspended in water, and having their weight further diminished by their swimming bladders.

When the naturalist moved in the water the fish swam away rapidly to the extremity of the pond; when he stood still they resumed their walking and came between his legs.

On dissection the three anterior rays on each pectoral fin are found to be supported each with a strong muscular apparatus to direct its movements, apart from the muscles that are connected with the smaller rays of the pectoral fin.

Through the Weary Hours

Of many a night, made doubly long by its protracted agony, the rheumatic sufferer tosses to and fro on his sleepless couch, vainly praying for that rest which only comes by fits and starts. His malady is one which ordinary medicines too often fail to relieve, but there is ample evidence to prove that the efficient blood depurent, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, affords the rheumatic a reliable means of relief. Check the malady in its incipient stages, when the first premonitory twinges come on, with this agreeable medicine, and avoid years of torture. Whatever be the rationale of the active influence of the Bitters upon this malady, certain it is that no evidence relating to its effect is more direct and positive than that which relates to its action in cases of rheumatism. Like all sterling remedies, however, it deserves a protracted, systematic trial, and should not be abandoned because not at once remedial. It is equally efficacious in dyspepsia, indigestion and kindred diseases.

No one doubts that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy really cures Catarrh, whether the disease be recent or of long standing, because the makers of it clinch their faith in it with a $500 guarantee, which isn't a mere newspaper guarantee, but "on call" in a moment.

That moment is when you prove that its makers can't cure you.

The reason for their faith is this:

Dr. Sage's remedy has proved itself the right cure for ninety-nine out of one hundred cases of Catarrh in the Head, and the World's Dispensary Medical Association can afford to take the risk of your being the one hundredth.

The only question is—are you willing to make the test, if the makers are willing to take the risk?

If so, the rest is easy. You pay your druggist 50 cents and the trial begins.

If you're wanting the $500 you'll get something better—a cure!

SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE.

If you dread that insidious disease Consumption, use it. Ask your Druggist for SHILOH'S CURE, Price 10 cts., 50 cts. and $1.00. If your Lungs are sore or Back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster, Price 25 cts.

PRICKLY ASH BITTERS

One of the most important organs of the human body is the LIVER. When it fails to properly perform its functions the entire system becomes deranged. The BRAIN, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS, all refuse to perform their work. DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, RHEUMATISM, KIDNEY DISEASE, etc., are the results, unless something is done to assist Nature in throwing off the impurities caused by the inaction of a TORPID LIVER. This assistance so necessary will be found in

Prickly Ash Bitters!

It acts directly on the LIVER, STOMACH and KIDNEYS, and by its mild and cathartic effect and general tonic qualities restores these organs to a sound, healthy condition, and cures all diseases arising from these causes. LOVE OR DEATH.

BY WM. W. LONG.

You cannot send me from you, sweet—better
To smite me where I stand dead at your Feet! I have no fear—see, with all my life's Great love, my breast I bear, white as a woman's,
And as pure as God—death at your feet
Will be supremely grand. Strike! strike deep!
Let your dagger's point go to my heart's red
Core up to the hilt. Pause not, but Strike—strike swift; set the keen point here
Where my heart's pulse rise and fall doth
Only beat for you. Strike to the bright blade's
Rim, and let the rich blood of great Love
With crimson stain my body's death. I
Am not of this puny race of men—half devil,
Half God am I, therefore slay me, or give yourself
To me, for all my heart toward you
Aches; my soul is fed with love of you: my Body burns with love's desire for you—if then
I be not worthy of your love, give me what
Most men fear—death, here at your feet,
Else will I tear you from Lust's arms,
Who long hath ravished your pure body to
His beastly need, though hell gapped red, and
All the earth did cry: "Murder have you done
Most foul!" Strike! else I claim you mine.

PALMYRA, Va.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XVIII—Continued.

Then a violently storm was raging.

The storm was, strange to say, the first that had occurred in the evening since his night view of the haunted tower, and its dancing demon, just five weeks before.

Not wishing to be seen by any of the inmates, he did not venture out until after nine o'clock. Then the wild wind and drenching rain served to retard his progress so much that it was full quarter to ten before he felt the worn pathway, and crept behind the clump of thick, wet bushes, where, once concealed from view, he paused to light a small dark lantern he had wisely brought with him.

By the aid of this he proceeded to examine what seemed only a dull, blank wall.

Close inspection, however, revealed a a large stone that was loose, which he easily drew forth, making a clean, unobstructed passageway, through which a man could creep, and without hesitation, in he went, landing directly upon an old but still passable floor.

Lowering his light, he paused to examine this floor, and found, to his surprise, wet tracks upon it, that told plainly that very recent footsteps had passed that way.

Following these, the young man walked in a direct line across the building, until he reached a door, which, upon trying, he found, to his chagrin, securely fastened.

Even while he paused to reflect upon his next movement distant footsteps fell upon his ear, just beyond the door, and hurriedly he darted back, extinguishing his light as he did so.

Just in time was this movement made, for a hand unhooked the fastening, opened the door, and there, to his unmitigated surprise, stood Ethel Nevergail, the girl so much the object of his thoughts since that narrow escape of hers a day or two before, with a lighted candle in her hand, peering into the darkness beyond.

Had she seen him? he asked himself; creeping like a thief toward this unfortunate house, and, hearing his steps, had she come to warn him away?

No; the thought was absurd, and he soon saw that she came seeking merely a covered basket, not observed until then, standing just beyond the door.

How pale she looked, as he viewed for one moment her sad face, and—yes, surely those were tears that fell from her beautiful hazel eyes upon her cheek!

The sight of those tears caused him to take one step toward her, but she fortunately did not see him, but drew to the door, after securing the basket, and he then heard her little feet start down the corridor.

Resolved not to be balked in his efforts to unravel, this night, one mystery at least, Dr. Elfenstein pushed again toward the door, and to his joy it this time yielded to his touch.

Poor Ethel! this night for the first time had been required by Sir Reginald Glendenning, to visit the tower, and follow out directions he gave her in full, for producing the illusions that were to terrify the unsuspecting public.

In great agitation then, and still weeping, she had proceeded to the fulfillment of her loathsome duty, and in her grief and excitement, for the first time forgot to fasten the door, after possessing herself of the food.

This forgetfulness accounts for the entrance of the Doctor into the corridor, and enabled him to follow her advancing figure, softly in the distance.

CHAPTER XIX.

A TERRIBLE FRIGHT.

Wiping away her tears, poor Ethel placed the basket of food and knife upon the floor, by the entrance of the tower, as Sir Reginald had told her to attend to the business in that quarter before administering to the wants of the concealed quadruped.

The wind raged furiously without; the thunder rolled, and lurid lightning flashes entered the windows of the tower as she crept up the stairs, on and on, up and up, ever up, while her heart beat faster and faster, as she thought of the loathsome task before her.

At last the weary steps were climbed, and she stood panting on the broad landing, just below the upper windows of the place.

It was standing on this landing that her part of the ghostly work was to be performed.

Taking then a long-handled torch, with which the colored lights above were to be touched in order to light them, she applied the candle to it, and reaching up soon had every one illuminated and flaming away in the usual unearthly looking glare.

In doing so she never observed the tall, silent figure of the man who had crept after her and now stood in the shade below, intently watching her every motion.

The stuffed form before her was next to be attended to. Taking, therefore, the lamp from within the head she lighted it, and putting it back almost exclaimed at the effect the colored light gave the eyes.

Winding the crank slowly, she saw that it worked as she supposed it would, and soon the impish figure was swung aloft, and stood dancing to and fro, to the terror and dismay of all outward beholders.

With tears still falling over her pale cheeks, Ethel stood with her eyes fastened above upon the swaying motions of that frightful-looking image, when her heart almost stopped within her, and a wild cry burst from her lips as these words fell upon her ears:

"Is it possible that this is the occupation of Miss Ethel Nevergail this stormy night?"

Turning, she saw advancing toward her, and fully revealed by the lights above, the form of Dr. Elfenstein.

"Oh, Doctor," she wailed, as she buried her face in her hands, and burst into low sobs of pain and dismay, "how came you here to witness my disgraceful work?"

Then suddenly remembering her charge, and true to the interests of her employer, she again seized the crank and, lowering the image, extinguished that head lamp, as well as the others, leaving everything in darkness but for the feeble flare of one little candle she had placed upon the floor.

Then turning she faced her accuser.

"I came, no matter how; suffice it that I was determined to unmask this daring fraud, and so allay the fears of timid women and children. Certainly, in doing this, I never expected to discover that Miss Nevergail was the prime mover in this outrageous piece of work!"

Ethel listened to the cold, hard words in utter despair, then fluttering like a wounded bird to the side of the indignant man, she laid one small, white hand on his arm, which was shaken off in disdain before she could utter one of the following words:

"It is the first time I ever did this thing. Oh, believe me; surely you must remember that I was in Liverpool when you saw that sight, the time when it last appeared?"

"Yes, that is true; I had forgotten. But that does not absolve you from tonight's ghastly deception," was the still cold reply.

"But Sir Reginald compelled me to do it. I begged and entreated him to excuse me; I told him it was sinful, but he flew into a passion, and bade me disobey him on the peril of his everlasting displeasure. Sir, I was homeless, and he was sick! What was I to do?"

"Forgive me! You poor little girl, I was harsh and cruel in my judgment. You were, indeed, obliged to execute the vile plans of the baronet. There," added he, tenderly, as he drew her hands from her face, and with his handkerchief wiped away her tears, "weep no more; you were not to blame. Child, give me your hand in token of forgiveness."

Laying her trembling hand in his, she murmured:

"Then you do not despise me?"

"Despise you? No! no! I only," he stopped; he was about to say "love you," but remembering his vow, he added softly, "pity you!"

"Yes, you may pity me! Oh, auntie, auntie! why did I ever promise you to come to this wretched place?" was her wailing cry.

Still holding her hand in his, and also taking from her the candle, he turned and led her down the long, steep stairs.

Only once did Ethel speak, then she merely said:

"Sir Reginald will be very angry, if he hears of your entrance here! Must he be told?"

"I will think it over, and let you know to-morrow. You must sleep to-night, and so recover from this nervousness."

They soon reached the bottom stair, and entered the corridor.

Then Ethel remembered that her work was but half done, and the rest could not be accomplished until Dr. Elfenstein had left her.

Turning to him, she said:

"Will you kindly tell me how you entered this place? You must leave me now, going silently as you came."

"I will. I came through the ruins. I saw you open a door, and reach for a basket, then I instantly entered."

"But surely, I fastened it again?"

"You were so agitated you forgot to do it. I certainly opened it, without difficulty, and crept after you, eager to solve the mystery of the haunted tower, which I then, for the first time, began to connect with your movements. But you are weary now, so I will leave you, and return as I came."

Giving back the candle, he took her hand and was just saying, "Good-night, Miss Nevergail," when suddenly both stopped short in their walk; both turned deadly pale, as a short, strange, loud report, close by their ears, startled and confounded them.

Then, to their horror, something darted toward them, a huge form swooped past, dashing the candle to the ground, thus extinguishing it, leaving them in total darkness and gloom.

"Oh, what is it, what is it?" cried the terrified girl, as she nestled close to her companion, while he, scarcely realizing what he did, threw his arms around her form, to protect her from he knew not what.

Suddenly, a wild, unearthly laugh or yell floated to them from the other end of the corridor, and as it passed, Dr. Elfenstein pressed the girl he held closer to his heart, and laid his cheek against her frightened face.

"What can it be? Is it imp or——"

"Devil, I guess," interrupted the Doctor. Then, gently raising her, he said:

"But this will not do; I must strike a light and see what this can be."

Stooping to find the candle, another eldritch-like wail came, this time as if from the ruins, and with the first sound Ethel darted toward the man beside her, crying:

"Oh, do not leave me! I shall die, I shall die!"

Gathering her once more in his arms, the Doctor whispered:

"I will not. You are not so afraid now, and thus, close to me, are you, dear?"

"No; not so fearfully afraid as I was."

Gently stroking her hair, the young man felt, even in the terror inspired by their dreadful position, a feeling almost of rapture steal over him as he held her thus close in his arms, with hers clinging to his waist.

But, suddenly, calmer reflections came; he felt this thing must be seen to; whatever presence had been near him must be discovered, and that he ought to follow up the sound.

"Child!" he whispered, "whatever has been near us, I know by that last cry, has escaped into the ruins, through the door by which I entered. That being so, I must in duty carry you to a place of safety, then search around to see what it could have been."

Instantly, then, it flashed over Ethel's mind that the ape, Sir Reginald's choice concealed treasure, had escaped, and that the knife she had so carelessly given him had done the deed.

He had cut his way out.

Oh, the terror this thought thrust into her heart was almost unbearable!

At once she became, as it were, a dead weight again in the Doctor's arms.

Then another thought came that imparted new life.

Her oath had been taken never to reveal the existence of that animal, nor of the concealed room.

In order to keep this vow Dr. Elfenstein must not examine the premises.

She knew well now the meaning of that first report.

The beast had knocked down the iron shelves burst open the panels, and in consequence a light would show the Doctor that opening and the room beyond.

No. He must never examine this corridor.

Nerving herself for a new task, she said:

"Doctor, I cannot consent to being left a moment here alone! Nor will I consent to your exposing yourself further to-night. Take me, then, to my room, and we will lock up this place, and you can steal softly from the house another way."

"But, Miss Nevergail, surely, this ought to be investigated."

"Oh, no, please do not investigate! I cannot allow it—cannot endure it!"

As she spoke, a long, deep shudder passed over her frame, and the Doctor, noticing it, knew at once that her nervous system could stand no more, and therefore felt it was best to yield.

"Shall I not, at least, light the candle?"

"No, no! I cannot bear it!" murmured the poor girl, horrified at the thought of what a light might reveal.

"Tell me, then, which way your room lies, and I shall carry you thither at once!"

"Straight! Just beyond the door by which you entered, through a passageway; my room lies opposite its door," she returned. "But, indeed, Doctor, I can walk, if you will only let me hold your arm. I would rather."

"Well, be it so!" returned the man, releasing her, yet still retaining her hand, which he drew under his arm.

When they neared the door of the ruin, however, Ethel felt a strong current of air upon her cheek, which revealed the fact that it stood wide open, and instantly a deadly fear of the horrible creature that had escaped, being still near, seized her, and again she shrank closer to her friend, while her faltering steps told of departing strength.

Without a word, Earle Elfenstein once more lifted her in his arms, and so passed into the passageway.

Remembering that his presence there must be kept a secret, the young girl whispered:

"Step softly; let no one hear."

"I will," he breathed back, and, guided by the dim light under the door indicated, he passed through, emerging from the open wardrobe into the bedroom beyond.

Placing her in a large easy chair, he stepped back, closed and fastened both doors, then returned to her side.

"Please, Doctor," she murmured, "examine every part of this room, before you go, to be sure the dreadful—the dreadful——" she hesitated.

"Yes, I know," he interrupted, "and you will soon see that you are perfectly safe."

Obeying her wish, he then made a thorough search of room and closet. But, as he supposed, nothing was to be seen.

"Now, how will you you leave the house?" she murmured, anxiously.

A sly look back toward the corridor caused her to exclaim, in a whisper, as she laid her hand entreatingly on his arm:

"Not there, Doctor; promise me you will not return to that place this night, but will go directly home."

Again Earle yielded to the pleading of the sweet girl beside him, and again answered:

"Then I must either drop from your window or go through the hall. Stay! I see a strong strap around your trunk. It is the very thing! I will fasten it to balcony, and so slip down by its aid to the ground. Are you willing?"

"Perfectly, Doctor," she whispered; "do you know I should have died from fright had you not been there?"

"Yes, I know; and now, before I say good-night, I shall mix you a composing draught, and then you must promise me to go instantly to your bed as soon as you take in the strap and close the window, and the last thing, swallow the preparation I shall leave. Will you do this, in return for my not investigating further what I see you do not wish explained?"

Ethel hesitated, then, remembering that she could not see Sir Reginald that night, she gave the promise.

A moment more passed, and then the strap had been fastened, the Doctor had whispered, "Good-night, and God bless you," and she watched him disappear amid the darkness and storm.

Darting out, she secured the strap without trouble, fastened down the window, and soon slept under the effects of the anodyne he had so thoughtfully left for her use.

Well indeed was it for her that she could sleep, for without some rest she could never have borne the terrible excitement that awaited her in the nearing hours of the coming day. But why anticipate new troubles? Ah, why, when the words of inspiration say, so pointedly, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

The First Customer.

"Put that up as soon as possible," he said, handing the druggist a prescription.

"Give me two 2-cent stamps," said a lady just as the druggist was about to note the contents.

Dropping the paper, he procured the stamps and changed a dollar. Then a flaxen-haired girl accosted him with:

"Quarter of caramels, quick! I want to catch the picnic car."

The caramels were weighed, done up, and a 50-cent piece changed, when a portly man entered, and said, rather peremptorily:

"Let me see your directory, please."

The directory was procured from a back-room.

"Say, ain't it about time you tended to my prescription?" asked the first customer.

"Oh, yes; excuse me. I almost——"

"Oh, do give us girls some soda, quick! We're parched; we're going to the picnic."

"I want vanilla."

"I want strawberry."

"I want lemon."

The druggist began to arrange the glasses.

"You brute!" yelled the first customer, "give me that prescription."

The druggist seized the paper, and reading it, replied:

"It won't take a minute; it's only brandy."

"Brandy!" yelled the first customer, "and that infernal quack sent me here for brandy, and I a wholesale liquor dealer."—Chicago Press Bureau.

RAILWAY collisions, from the inability to stop the locomotive, are likely to be made impossible when the electric light is substituted for the oil lamps now in use. Recent experiments prove that the electric headlight casts light from half to three-quarters of a mile ahead. A train going at the rate of sixty miles an hour can thus be stopped in time to prevent any accident.

Mrs. Geo. Shaffer, of Auburn, was called here last Tuesday by the illness of her mother.

Last week, Miss Belle Tomlinson, of Butler visited with Rev. Snyder's family for a few days.

Rev. Mr. Hayes' meetings held in the Presbyterian church last week, resulted in eleven accessions.

Report says that three couples were married in Waterloo on last Monday night. Who can beat that.

The order to reduce the force at the station resulted in Cary Duncan having a lay off for a month or two.

Mrs. Taylor, mother of Mrs. Harper, who has been here for some weeks, returned to her home in Orland Tuesday.

The Methodist people held their quarterly meeting last Sunday and Elder Simpson, of Goshen conducted the service.

Miss Kunz and Miss Rice, of Toledo, Ohio, who have been visiting with Geo. Shoner's family, returned to their homes Monday.

The L. M. C. held their regular session Tuesday evening, Feb. 3, with Mrs. Florence Waterman. Election of officers took place.

Mrs. J. B. Taylor, of Kendallville, visited last week in Waterloo among her relatives and old acquaintances. She has returned home.

There has been somewhat of a change in the Presbyterian choir recently. The same gentlemen sing as before. Prof. Davis presides at the organ.

Dr. Latta, of Goshen, was called here Saturday to assist in the case of Mr. Graham, the gentleman who was hurt by falling from a train some time since.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Crane arrived Friday morning from Pueblo, Col., where they have been visiting with their daughter, Mrs. Rose Shull since last November.

Giles Abbey has bought the Zimmerman property on the corner of South Railroad and Franklin Sts., and is fitting up the building on it for a dwelling. Mart Rhinehart is doing the work.

The meetings conducted by the Liberals of the U. B. church closed last Tuesday with eight added to the membership, with several others who will undoubtedly be added to the number.

Mr. Dell. Locke is improving. It became necessary that the baby should be cared for out of the house during the father's sickness, and Mrs. Lehman has had charge of it in her own home for some time.

February 2d, was a warm, rainy day, and the old groundhog came out and hunted for his shadow till afternoon, when the sun came out brightly and he saw his shadow, and went back into his den. The result was that before morning a snow storm came up, and it turned cold, and the thermometer indicated 20 degrees. Now if any one says that the ground hog has no power let us hear from him.

Rev. Mr. Hays, pastor of the Presbyterian church preached last Thursday evening, being the first of a series of services which still continues. Mr. Hays is an earnest man, an active worker and seems calculated to do much good for the Master.

The M. E social at the parsonage last Thursday evening was well attended, considering the stormy day and evening. The supper consisted of a variety of well prepared dishes, and was thoroughly enjoyed. Only ten cents for such a supper! No marvel that large numbers are attracted.

Last Saturday evening, Miss Olive Thompson gave a grand costume recital in the opera house. Miss Thompson has a fine reputation, and no doubt pleased those so fortunate as to hear her. Her audience would perhaps have been larger but there were services in two if not more of the churches that evening.

BUTLER.

M. T. Campbell is spending a few days in Detroit on business and pleasure.

George Holling, of whose serious illness mention has previously been made, is reported much better.

Isaac Helwig and Master Luther, of Fairfield, paid a visit to their many friends in Butler last week.

The U. B. and Lutheran friends are each striving for mastery in the field of revivals. Both are making vigorous efforts, with fair success.

The M. E. revival that has been in session nearly one month has not yet closed at this writing. About twenty-five accessions to the church are reported.

Geo. Casebeer has retired from the "P. I." store, and C. H. Thurston will have to manage the P. I's alone. We hope he may have plenty of trade and succeed.

Eugene Mock, Knisely Brothers efficient and accommodating book keeper is prostrated with serious illness at his home on the south side. Latest reports say he is improving.

The McNabb House is about to undergo expensive changes, the old part will be moved south to give way to a new brick structure that will be erected the coming summer. We congratulate them upon the success that has attended their efforts in the old house.

Knisely Brothers, after a successful career of many years and having proved themselves a survival of the fittest, and distanced all competition in our place, retired from trade in the old name this week and will hereafter be known as, "Knisely Dry goods Co." The firm will consist of the old members and M. L. Wilkinson and M. C. Evertts.

CONCORD.

Alice Draggoo was at Auburn Wednesday.

Grant Keller was at Garrett Wednesday last.

Four lady friends visited Mrs. Nancy Wyatt Tuesday.

S. S. Stanton and wife were called to Kendallville last Monday by the serious accident of Mrs. S's father.

Mrs. Mat Hay, Mrs. Deats, and daughter, and Mrs. Will Brown visited Mrs. Eva Dove, of Spencerville, Tuesday.

S. G. Brown and wife and Mrs. Maggie Andrews, of Ashland, Ohio, were the guests of Mrs. B. Baker last Sabbath.

Marion Baughman sold his nice horse to Mr. Showalter last week. Marion how will you take your girl buggy riding now?

James Draggoo, of Auburn, was the guest of his brother G. W. last Friday and Saturday, it being pay day at the hub factory.

John Timmerman had a wreck with his horse and buggy Sunday night. His Birdie did not fly but clung to the buggy receiving slight injuries.

NEWVILLE.

Young Fitzsimmons has cooled down.

Sena Parks will move to Butler, with her mother Mrs. Keller.

Our old friend Tom Rudd, can get a good, fat coon of Richards.

What has become of Beck's butter and egg wagon? The same widow is here yet.

Prindle and Hendricks' party was a success. They expect to try again next week.

S. H. Bartlett is improving slowly. He is battling with a serious attack of typhoid fever.

Dave is still down in old Leipsic, where he met Pete Darling and Jim Blackburn on the base line.

Miss Mary Quincy is home from Chicago, where she has been since her divorcement from Quincy.

One stormy night last week Jake was awakened by squalls. It's a girl, and John Quincy is grandpa.

Poultry Boney has divided his business with another barber shop, making hair dressing a specialty.

Moses cut a cord of wood in three days all told, but Rube beat that, he cut the same amount in four days.

We learn that two of our young men contemplate the starting of a general plating business among the farmers.

Chubb Richmond has given up in despair, as none of the girls seem to be inclined to go with him to the Chubb dance.

How can young men be so utterly regardless of the respect due their parents, by lounging around with no other object in view than indulgence around the card-table? Surely they have higher capabilities.

SPENCERVILLE.

Mrs. Lyda Furnish is very low with consumption.

Elery Kimes has moved into the Johnson property on Mill street.

Tom Goodwin, of Goshen has been a guest of the Hotel Baltz, during the past week.

J. F. Baltz and family went to Ft. Wayne Saturday to get the family photographed.

E. B. Chaney will move to Corunna, instead of Concord, as reported in the COURIER last week.

The missionary society of the Lutheran church was entertained by Miss Lyda Case last Thursday.

The revival services in the M. E. church will continue during the present week. A spirit commendable exists among the christian people of all denominations.

The woman's missionary society of the M. E. church will be entertained at the residence of Mrs. J. J. Fred Saturday afternoon. A cordial invitation is extended to all interested in missionary work.

As Mrs. Holsbaugh, Mrs. Silberg and Mrs. Bishop were going into the country one day last week the horse became unmanageable and upset the buggy, bruising Mrs. Holsbaugh and Mrs. Silberg, and seriously injuring Mrs. Bishop.

UNION CHAPEL.

Miss Ona Neiswander is now in LaOtto.

Zay Cooper is busy hauling bolts to Concord.

Evrybody attends the literaries at Mudsock.

For barbering, call on Frank Pyles; also for matrimonial ties.

William Hoodelmier acts the part of "John Streblo" in "Off to Canada".

Miss Gertrude Krise is taking an active part in the literaries at Mudsock.

Miss Jennie Hoffman has just returned from a prolonged visit at Ligonier.

People that were not at Mudsock last Friday evening missed a great deal of pleasure. The most affecting scene of the whole evening was "Off to Canada", acted by Miss Gertrude Krise, as Kate Russel, Miss Jennie Hoffman as Dot Lester, Miss Anna Culler as Little Blanche, C. R. Grimm, as Gilbert Russel, Frank Pyles, as Matthew Thornton, Ed. Cole, as Isaacs, Lewis Stewart, as Detective Brown, Twite Hoodelmier, as Messenger, William Hoodlemier, as John Streblo. It was very affecting and there was scarcely a dry eye in the house. After the play the choir sang Auld Lang Syne.

GARRETT.

Tom Carpenter spent last week with friends and relatives.

Masquerade dance Thursday evening, a grand time is expected.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart and daughter Effie, are visiting in Kendallville.

Frank Rosen well known to our citizens as a theatrical man and painter is reported to have killed his wife and then himself at Detroit, Mich., lately.

A stabbing affray occured at Altona a week ago in which one Gregory was stabbed twice in the back by unknown person. Mr. Gregory is able to be around.

The Archbold Milling Co. composed of Messrs Levy, Hirsch, Vernier and Hawley are doing a big business since their purchase of the Garrett mill last July. Mr. Hawley, the manager, is a wide awake business man and lets nothing go undone. They have customers among the grocers and bakers of Auburn, Kendallville and Waterloo, as well as their local trade at home which is increasing every day. Their flour is second to none now on the market. Their custom work is gradually increasing and the best of satisfaction prevails.

LINES.

In Memory of May Richards, who Died January 22nd, 1890.

A YEAR IN HEAVEN.

A year in heaven for her; what is she learning?
Of holy things; of things divine and true;
What glorious visions are still unfolding,
Which here she never knew.

Did angels wait her coming?
Did angel faces greet her with a smile?
Were the dear ones eager to receive her,
Whom she had lost awhile?

And has she seen the loving Jesus,
Sat at his feet or felt his fond embrace?
Or can it be that she is able,
To see her Father's face?

A year in heaven; we, without her presence—
A year of loneliness, grief and pain;
But we smile 'mid tears in thinking,
Our loss is her gain.

We miss her in our joys and sorrows:
She was our life, center and sun,
Yet we would not call her back, but whispe
"Oh, God, thy will be done."

For heaven and earth are close together;
She is there, hence she's not far away.
She could not leave the dear ones, loved so fondly,
Even in heaven to stay!

Still her spirit, like a guardian angel,
Is bending o'er us, with tenderest care,
And sometimes heaven seems so near us,
We almost think we're there.

A year in heaven; for her of rest and blessing—
For us a year on earth, with her above;
But heaven and earth are together blending,
And over all is Love.

"Some lives are like Horse shoes the more worn the brighter."

Busy wives who use SAPOLIO never seem to grow old. Try a cake...

A complete wreck of domestic happiness has often resulted from badly washed dishes, from an unclean kitchen, or from trifles which seemed light as air. But by these things a man often judges of his wife's devotion to her family, and charges her with general neglect when he finds her careless in these particulars. Many a home owes a large part of its thrifty neatness and its consequent happiness to SAPOLIO.

☞ Grocers often substitute cheaper goods for SAPOLIO, to make a better profit. Send back such articles, and insist on having just what you ordered. ☜

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

A tide of settlers with families, young men of enterprise in search of occupation and speculators looking for lots and land to buy drifted westward through Indiana to Illinois, through Michigan to Wisconsin and beyond there to Iowa.

In this year of migration, New York and Ohio lost a valuable portion of their population which singly and in colonies laid the foundation for future towns and cities and gave to them the names of the places whence they had come.

Fairfield township was this year organized although it is said that there were at the time but half a dozen voters within its boundaries.

The chaos of forest had been broken by spots of clearings, surveyed roads so named by courtesy but often almost impassable, had emphasized or taken the place of Indian tribes. The pirogue floated up and down the St. Joe river and the ferry boat was the only means of crossing.

Gradually the enterprise of settlers was manifest in taking such action as in their opinions was thought advisable for their present welfare and such as the needs of the future would inevitably require. While they worked hard to clear their farms and build for themselves comfortable though humble homes, they did not forget to make provision for educating their children and for enjoying the comforts of religion, by selecting sites for, and erecting the school house and the church.

On March 30, citizens of school district No. 1, Concord township met at the school house of Orange town and selected town lots No. 6 and 7, for a site to a proposed church to be used for school purposes when not occupied for public worship.

About the same time a meeting was held at Cole's school house for the election of trustees for a Methodist Episcopal church At this meeting Rev. Isaac G. Clark presided and Wm. R. McAnally acted as clerk. McAnally, Peter Rhodenbaugh, James Cole, William Day and Stephen H. Clark were chosen trustees to receive a deed for a church site and on which a meeting house was to be built by subscriptions.

These instances taken at random from measures of this kind serve to illustrate the facility with which the settlers in pure democratic style supplied their own and the public want of school, church, burying ground and other necessary improvements.

The necessities of the times compelled settlers to avail themselves of the proffer of money help to pay for expenses incurred in land purchase and improvement In this connection, the mortgage on farms had that beginning which has spread through all succeeding years till it rests as an incubus upon hundreds of farms in the county.

To those who remember Alonzo Lockwood as the wealthiest citizen and largest land owner in the county at the time of his death, it will be of interest to read that on Oct. 28, 1844, he gave a mortgage on eighty acres located on the east half of the southwest quarter of section eighteen, township 33, range 13 east, or Jackson township, to secure the payment of a loan of $50 with seven per cent annual interest. From such small beginning did that rugged, resolute man build up the fortune bequeathed to his descendants, during half a century of persistent, self-denying effort.

The first writing in record book "A" in the office of the county recorder was done by John F. Coburn as recorder, Sept. 6, 1837. On the first page of this plain, cheap book appears the copy of the bond of Mr. Coburn with Benjamin Alton, Samuel Headley and John Clemmer as sureties in the sum of $2500, for faithful discharge of duties and obligations as county clerk. This bond was approved by A. Walden and T. Yates.

Seven years later, on Aug. 5, '44, Samuel W. Sprott gave bond in the sum of $10,000, or four times the amount of Coburn's bond for the same office with A. D. Gœtschius, John Blair, Wm. C. Roberts, G. S. Walden and R. J. Dawson on his bond. These items indicate growth of business in the office and so represent progress of settlement of the county. "Major" Sprott, as he was called, was a prominent figure at the county seat in those days and it is said that he was on emergency called to perform work in most of the county offices. Mr. A. D. Gœtschius, recently returned from the west where he has lived some years, is the sole survivor, principal and surety, of all those mentioned. The old gentleman at one time county commissioner is one of the few to whom pioneer scenes and incidents were once so habitually familiar.

DeKalb's Representative.

Hon. Freeman Kelley was at home over Sunday, and on returning Monday, stopped off at Auburn between trains. He managed to meet and talk with a number of people here, and among them with the COURIER folks. We are always glad to meet Mr. Kelley, for we believe he is doing what he considers his duty, and that in the main, he is right. We have watched his course in both sessions carefully, and feel that his votes have expressed the sentiments of the majority of our people, and this is a great part of the duty of a representative. He has been fearless in advocating what he believes in, and though it is not possible for a member to get all he asks for, he has been as successful as the average. He was thoughtful enough, while here, to correct us as to that mileage question. We had put in an item that contained a compliment to the DeKalb boy for getting ahead every time. The Sentinel had reported that the committee on mileage of members had fixed Mr. Kelley's at 316, and that of Mr. Brown, of Steuben, at 260, and we made the statement that DeKalb men usually got the best of everything. This innocent statement the Press took up, and carried the idea that Mr. Kelley was not dealing honestly with the state. The fact is, the Sentinel's proof reader had made a mistake. The Steuben man's allowance should have been for 360 instead of 260. The distance allowed sheriffs from Auburn is 152 miles. Kelley lives seven miles farther north, or 159 miles. Double this and you have 318, or two more than he has been allowed. If either gets too much, it is the Steuben member. Of course Mr. Kelley is able to take care of himself, but it is worthy of remark that a republican paper will strain a point any time, for the sake of making a personal attack on a democrat. Mr. Kelley believes the fee and salary bill will pass, substantially as it now stands, though he is not in favor of putting the county superintendent down to $3. Like all democrats, up this way at least, he is solid for good school work. It should be remembered in passing, that Mr. Kelley was one of those who fought earnestly to cut down the number and wages of the employes of the House, and, regrets that the senate did not follow their good example fully.

CONSUMPTION,

IN its first stages, can be successfully checked by the prompt use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Even in the later periods of that disease, the cough is wonderfully relieved by this medicine.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with the best effect in my practice. This wonderful preparation once saved my life. I had a constant cough, night sweats, was greatly reduced in flesh, and given up by my physician. One bottle and a half of the Pectoral cured me."—A. J. Eidson, M. D., Middleton, Tennessee.

"Several years ago I was severely ill. The doctors said I was in consumption, and that they could do nothing for me, but advised me, as a last resort, to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking this medicine two or three months I was cured, and my health remains good to the present day."—James Birchard, Darien, Conn.

"Several years ago, on a passage home from California, by water, I contracted so severe a cold that for some days I was confined to my state-room, and a physician on board considered my life in danger. Happening to have a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, I used it freely, and my lungs were soon restored to a healthy condition. Since then I have invariably recommended this preparation."—J. B. Chandler, Junction, Va.

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with neuralgia and rheumatism, his stomach was disordered, his liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shephard, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely, Sold by Robbins & McCord 3

"May I not aspire to your hand!" he asked earnestly. "Permit me," she said positively, "to assure you that this is a lone hand."

Remarkable Facts.

Heart disease is usually supposed to be incurable, but when properly treated a large proportion of cases can be cured. Thus Mrs. Elmira Hatch, of Elkhart, Ind., and Mrs. L Baker, of Ovid, Mich., were cured after suffering 20 years. S. C. Limburger, druggist at San Jose, Ill., says that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, which caused the former, "worked wonders for the wife." Levi Logan, of Buchanan, Mich., who had heart disease for thirty years, says two bottles made him "feel like a new man." Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold and guaranteed by F. E. Davenport. Book of wonderful testimonials free. 4

The Pulpit and the Stage.

Rev. F. M. Shrout, pastor United Brethren church, Blue Mound, Kan., says: I feel it my duty to tell what wonders Dr. King's New Discovery has done for me. My lungs were badly diseased, and my parishoners thought I could live only a few weeks. I took five bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery and am sound and well, gaining 26 lbs. in weight." Arthur Love, Manager Love's Funny Folks Combination, writes: "After a thorough trial and convincing evidence, I am confident Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, beats 'em all, and cures when everything else fails. The greatest kindness I can do my many thousand friends is to urge them to try it." Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord,s drug store Regular sizes 50c. and $1.00. 3

The Dr. Marshall Medicine Co.

Gentlemen: Permit me to inform you that the medicine which I purchased of you, Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, is the best medicine I ever used for bronchitis, asthma coughs. I have for many years been troubled with bronchial affections and asthma, and I never found anything that so effectually removes these difficulties as Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. I consider it the best remedy known for bronchitis, asthma and coughs, all of which I am willing to attest by affidavit if demanded.

Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C. Feb. 6, 1891.

Mr. Harrison made a last desperate attempt, through Senator Hoar, in behalf of the Force bill at a caucus of republican senators held last night. In order to give the senators who had voted against the old bill an opportunity of returning to the ranks a new bill was presented to the caucus, shorter and without some of the objectionable features of the Lodge bill. Stories differ as to the conclusion arrived at. Some say that it was decided to pass the new bill in a few days and others that no definite conclusion was reached. One republican senator, who voted with the democrats to lay aside the gag-rule resolution, is reported to have said that if it would be any satisfaction to the radical members of his party he would vote for the new bill, because he was satisfied that there was not enough time remaining to get it through the House.

The republicans seem to be getting the worst of the silver pool investigation, in spite of the evident intention of the committee to find out as little as possible. No democratic member of either branch of congress has been implicated, while two prominent republicans—Senator Cameron and Representative Taylor, of Illinois, have admitted their guilt, and another one, Representative Ketcham, of New York—is expected to do likewise. The greatest farce of the investigation was enacted this week when Owenby, the man who claimed to have been a member of a silver pool, was brought from Chicago under arrest and put on the stand. Almost before he began his testimony the committee decided that he must not mention the names of senators or representives that he had heard named by other people as speculating in silver. That practically shut out all that portion of his evidence that might have led to finding out something, and it is believed that it was intended to have just that very effect.

The free coinage bill has been the cause of some very plain talk this week, and unless all signs fail it is going to bring on a big row in the House. Senator Cockerell said that the opposition to the bill which has sprung into life, in various sections, but principally in the east, was inspired by telegrams from the capital; and Representative Bland charged Representative Walker, who is a Massachusetts banker, with trying to smother the bill in committee by granting endless hearings to all who asked for them. The vote of the committee shows that the bill will get no favors there, and all that the free coinage men can now do is to await a favorable opportunity to bring it directly before the House.

Congress has granted Mr. Harrrison's request and passed a bill extending the time during which an assistant may act as the head of any executive department of the government from ten to thirty days, and now that gentleman is up to his ears in the recommendations of various would be secretaries of the treasury. All the big republicans from Gen. Alger and Chauncey Depew down to "me too" Platt, who is himself a candidate, are flitting in and out of Washington like restless ghosts. It is stated by republicans that Mr. Harrison has promised not to give the place to a silver man. He'll have a hard time to fill the shoes of the late Secretary Windom; several of those who might do so satisfactorily to the country would under no circumstances connect themselves with the present unpopular administration.

Senator Turpie, in accordance with the resolution recently adopted by the Indiana legislature has offered a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution of the United States, for the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people.

It looks now as if the Fifty-first congress would come to an end before the committee which has been for lo these many months making an alleged investigation of the Pension office and Commissioner Raum, makes its report. It is thought that the report is held back to keep Raum in his place as long as possible, as he is almost certain to be removed when the report goes to Mr. Harrison.

The National Legislative Council, which was provided for at the late Ocala convention of the National Farmers' Alliance, is now holding its first session here. It is composed of the presidents of the state organizations and the national president. Its principal duties are to prepare the bills that the Alliance will ask the next congress to pass. There is a rumor that the council has already decided upon a material modification of the sub-treasury scheme.

Speaker Reed's action in having refused to give the House committee on foreign affairs a day for the consideration of measures favorable reported from that committee makes it practically impossible for us to make a single step towards the reciprocity now extended by the Canadian government. Well, there's one consolation, Reed will be a deposed Czar in a very short time.

A PROTECTED STATE.

THE FARMING POPULATION OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The Census Returns for New Hampshire Show a Decline in the Farming Towns—Manufacturing Cities Are Growing—What Protection Is Doing for the Farmer—A Case Where the Home Market Theory Does Not Work.

The Census Bureau has recently published the details of the census of the State of New Hampshire; and the figures afford an interesting comparison with those of 1880. New Hampshire is largely a manufacturing State, and as such it ought to give the protectionists an excellent field in which to show how protection helps the farmer by developing manufactures and creating a market right at his doors for his farm products.

The census figures of the State, as sent out by Robert P. Porter, show that while the population increased from 346,991 to 376,530, or at the rate of 48½ per cent., three-fourths of all the towns, or townships, in the State have declined in population since 1880. A highly interesting comparison of the population in ten of the twelve counties of the State by towns, or townships, is made in the following table, showing the number of towns in each county which reports an increase or a decrease:

Counties.	No. towns showing increase.	No. towns showing decrease.
Belknap	3	8
Carroll	7	11
Cheshire	10	13
Coos	17	8
Grafton	11	28
Hillsborough	11	20
Merrimack	8	19
Rockingham	15	22
Stafford	6	7
Sullivan	3	12
Total	91	148

When the census report is examined more closely it is seen that the decrease in population is in the smaller or agricultural towns, while the increase is in the larger or manufacturing towns and cities. The decrease has been the greatest in the towns with the smallest population, the towns with less than 1,000 inhabitants having suffered a loss of 10 per cent. since 1880.

These changes are exhibited in the following table for the 249 towns and cities of the State:

Towns and cities classified according to population in 1890. Population	No. of such towns.	Population. 1870.	Population. 1880.	Percentage of grain or loss.
Over 20,000	1	44,126	32,630	†35.23
10,000 to 20,000	3	49,105	38,927	†26.15
4,000 to 10,000	8	50,953	43,172	†18.02
2,000 to 4,000	23	63,271	52,609	†20.26
1,500 to 2,000	20	34,184	32,867	†4.01
1,000 to 1,500	49	59,168	61,734	*4.16
Under 1,000	145	72,723	85,052	*10.97
Total	249	376,530	346,991	†8.51

†Increase. *Decrease.

In the four largest cities of the State the population has increased nearly one-third in ten years. Towns having between 2,000 and 4,000 have increased almost one-fifth; those between 1,000 and 2,000 have slightly decreased; and those below 1,000 have lost almost one-ninth of their population.

This decay of agricultural life in New Hampshire, as compared with manufacturing industry, has been going on for forty years, and has become more marked under the reign of the very protection which always promises to make the farmer prosperous by making the manufacturer rich.

The following table shows the changes of population for forty years:

Date of census.	Population. Of 35 towns having upward of 2,000 inhabitants each in 1890.	Of 69 towns having between 1,000 and 2,000 inhabitants each in 1890.	Of 145 towns having less than 1,000 inhabitants each in 1890.	Per cent. of total population. In towns over 2,000.	In towns between 1,000 and 2,000.	In towns under 1,000.
1890	207,455	93,352	75,723	55.10	24.79	20.11
1880	167,338	94,601	85,051	48.23	27.26	24.51
1870	137,440	92,314	88,555	43.18	29.00	27.82
1860	126,235	97,815	102,020	38.71	30.00	31.29
1850	113,566	97,828	106,842	35.69	30.71	33.60

The cause of this decline of the farming communities of New Hampshire is not far to seek. The farmer is not protected and there is no possible way to make protection of any general benefit to him. The manufacturer, on the other hand, has his market shut up, sealed and delivered to him by a high tariff, and, besides, he usually has a trust to help him gather up the tariff spoils.

The case of New Hampshire is the same as that of New Jersey, another great manufacturing State. Last winter Mr. Franklin Dye, Secretary of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture, was before the McKinley committee, and told the high-tariff solons about the decay of agriculture in his State. The following words from his testimony afford an interesting comment upon the facts above given in regard to the population of New Hampshire:

"I think the year President Cleveland was elected I was in one of the pottery establishments in Trenton, and told the manufacturer that he was taking all our farm hands from us. He said: 'You must pay them the same wages.' I said: 'We cannot do it; we pay all the wages we can afford to pay at the price of farm productions.' Then I said: 'You are protected; you know just what you are going to get, what it costs to put the material in shape for market, and, consequently, you know what wages you can afford to pay.' What labor is left around Trenton and other manufacturing centers now is largely a poor class of colored people, and now and then Hungarians. For you know the great tide of travel has been westward. Moreover, to give continous protection to manufacturing industries, whereby they have been enabled to reap good-paying—and in many cases enormous—profits, while not equally protecting the farmer in his products, has resulted adversely to our farmers in several particulars."

The Barbed Wire Trust.

The farmers will probably soon have as great a grievance against the barbed wire trust as they have had against the binder-twine trust.

The barbed-wire trust has been trying to get all the manufacturers of barbed-wire into it, in order to have complete control of the home market, and to be able to raise prices to the farmers.

The trust has just purchased certain patents for $400,000, and these are to be used for the purpose of crushing out the manufacturers who are not in the trust, or else to compel them to join it. A member of the trust tells very frankly what it proposes to do with the patents.

He says: "We have purchased the patents from the Washburn-Moen Company for $400,000, and that firm, like any other member of the pool, will be compelled to pay a royalty into the treasury of the association to be used as a sinking fund. The royalty per ton will probably not amount to more than 2 cents to members. Up to to-day $1 per ton was demanded. It has been as high as $15. But manufacturers not members of the pool will be asked to pay a rather stiff price for the privilege of using the patents now controlled by the pool. We can charge $125 per ton if we want to. This simply means that a manufacturer not a member of the pool cannot do business. He must come into the fold or quit making barbed wire."

When the "fold" has thus been completed and there are no outside rivals, the farmers may expect to pay high prices for barbed wire.

These men have a right to their patent; possibly they have a legal right to combine themselves into a trust. There is at least one thing they have no right to, and that is the McKinley protection duty of $13.44 a ton on barbed wire. The farmers have themselves to blame for permitting the trust to have this duty.

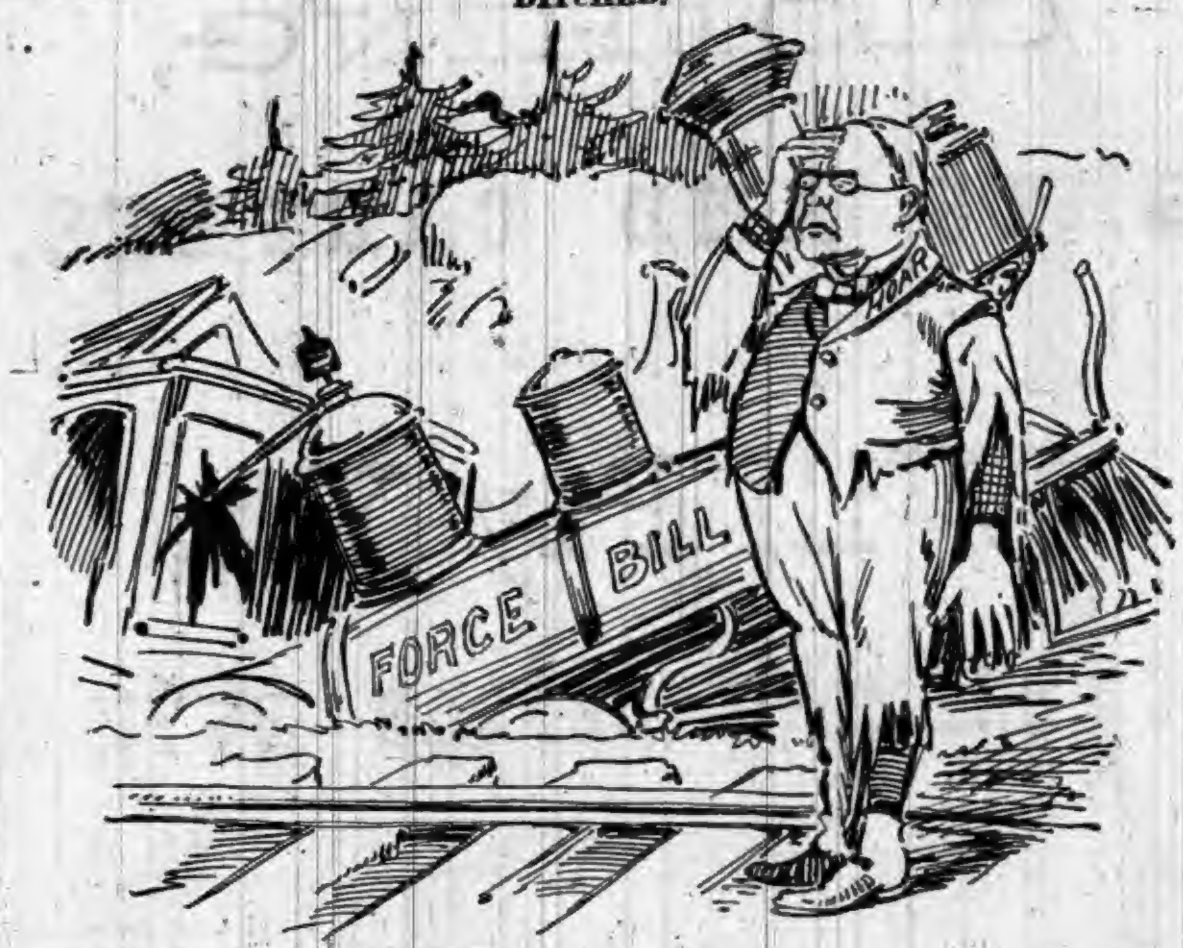
SHALL TEA BE TAXED?

THAT IS WHAT A FEW IMPORTERS WANT.

A Tax on Tea Wanted to Keep Up Prices—The Consumer Left Out of the Calculation—Reciprocity with a Vengeance—Shall the Breakfast Table Remain Free?

Last year, when everybody was trying to get higher protection on every conceivable thing, a movement was undertaken to have a duty put on all tea imported from places west of the Cape of Good Hope. This was an attempt to revive an old law which was abolished in 1883. This law imposed a duty of 10 per cent. on all tea coming from places west of Cape of Good Hope.

DITCHED.



Granny Hoar's sad predicament.

The original purpose of the law was to promote the direct shipment of tea from China, Japan and the East Indies to our ports and thus to encourage American shipping. By "places west of the Cape of Good Hope," the old law meant London and Liverpool.

The present demand for the re-enactment of this old law comes from a few importers of tea, and it is not based on the idea of preventing direct importation. There is another object in view, an object which is frankly avowed. Out of a total of 79,575,984 pounds of tea imported in 1889, only 4,673,864 pounds came in by way of England. Why should our importers fear this small amount coming from England upon a second shipment and in competition with the bulk of our consumption which is imported direct from China and Japan? The answer to this question may be seen from an extract from a recent number of Bradstreet's, as follows:

"The stock of tea in this country is at present very heavy, and prices are in consequence lower here than in England. Hence London merchants are now buying tea in New York. The promoters of the new legislative agitation hope by means of it to buoy up prices and prevent a further decline. But many dealers have been free to predict that no such legislation will be passed by the present Congress. It is claimed by the advocates of the measure that under free entry London merchants are able to place here large quantities of tea whenever the market shows a tendency to advance."

The importers of tea who are pushing the measure in question are wonderfully frank. They do not talk about "protection to American interests," they have nothing to say about increasing anybody's wages, and do not promise that competition in the home market will make tea cheaper to the American consumer than ever before. They frankly confess that they want this law for their own benefit When they succeed in raising prices here, they will have no tea coming in from London in seven or eight days to bring down prices again. China and Japan are a long way off, and if the importers here can raise the price of tea it would take considerable time for other people to get cargoes of tea from those countries into our ports. The few importers here would meanwhile reap extra benefits from higher prices. But the danger of quick importations from London must be got rid of; and hence this movement of a small number of tea importers to get the law affecting "places west of the Cape of Good Hope."

The New York Merchants' Review denounces the whole thing as "nothing but a scheme to advance prices when conditions are favorable." The New England Grocer of Boston also condemns the proposed tax in stormy language. "It is simply an effort," it says, "of a few concerns to dictate to 60,000,000 of people where they shall buy their teas, no question of protection being involved. The whole effect of such a law would be to advance teas which would be controlled by a few large concerns, while the smaller dealer, who can only purchase small lots, would have to pay higher prices because he would be cut off from purchasing in lots to suit his convenience from English markets, as he can do now. Such a law will be an oppression to every retail grocer and every consumer in the United States of America."

Let not the consumer suppose that these few importers are the only men in this country who stand ready to tax tea and make it dearer to every housewife in the land. Some years ago, when it first began to be realized that the war tariff was producing revenues in excess of the needs of the Government, the protectionist leaders saw that something would have to be done to get rid of unnecessary taxation, and at the same time "save the protective system." Accordingly, the cry of "a free breakfast table" was raised, and off went the duties on tea and coffee.

Now a new tariff law has been born into this tariff-ridden land. It is a cross between Chinese Wall McKinley and Reciprocity Blaine. In this cross-breed tariff law it is coolly proposed to tax every breakfast table in the land again, unless tea-producing countries shall grant us such reciprocal advantages in trade as shall satisfy the President. This is reciprocity with a vengeance. The tax was removed to lighten the burdens on our own people. Now our lawmakers stand ready to reimpose that tax upon our people if China and Japan do not grant us such terms of admission to their ports as shall satisfy the President.

Higher Wages.

In these days of McKinleyism, much is heard about lower wages and about strikes. It seldom happens that one hears anything now about higher wages. One such case, however, is reported by the New York Record and Guide:

On January 1 masons in New York were getting $5 a day, which was 75 cents to $1 higher than in January 1890. Stone-cutters are now earning $3.50 and $4.50 a day, against $3.50 and $4.00 a year ago.

This is one case of higher wages; but walls of brick and stone cannot be protected by the wall of McKinleyism; and stone-cutting is equally out of reach of the tariff-makers. Increased wages in this case are certainly not "McKinley wages."

American Pork in Germany.

Germany has again refused to admit American pork; but it seems to be generally admitted that the time is now not far distant when the prohibition will be removed. It is very probable that, if we had not so recently passed the two McKinley bills, which are very unpopular in Germany, the late vote in the Reichstag would have been in favor of American pork. Our farmers may judge of the value of the German market to them by the fact that our exports of hog products to Germany in 1881, before our pork was excluded, amounted to more than $11,000,000. Lard is now the only hog product which we sell to Germany in any considerable quantities. Our exports of lard to Germany in 1889 amounted to $3,840,000, and last year to $7,815,000.

The German working people are anxious for our pork, and for want of it they consume a large quantity of our lard, eating it as we eat butter.

It is the protection sentiment in Germany that keeps our pork out of the country. It was the rich nobles owning large country estates on which hogs are raised for the market who were the prime movers in excluding American pork, and who still keep it out of the country. It is a case of extreme protection applied to us.

REDUCED PROTECTION WAGES.

A Nail Mill Cuts Down Wages and Starts Up Again.

Another protected concern has just demonstrated the inability of the tariff to keep wages high and make the wage-earner happy. This is the nail works at Bellefonte, Pa. A recent dispatch from that place reads as follows:

"A general 25 per cent. reduction of wages was agreed to to-day at the nail works, and they will start up at their full capacity to-morrow. The works have been partially shut down for some time."

Our nail industry has undergone an enormous expansion within recent years. A Pennsylvania nail manufacturer is authority for the statement that our nail mills have a capacity of 9,000,000 kegs per annum, but that our home consumption is only 4,000,000 kegs. Notwithstanding the great development of the nail industry, it is still treated by the high tariff McKinleyites as an "infant industry" and a prohibitory duty of one cent per pound, which is now equal to about 50 per cent. ad valorem, is levied on nails.

This looks like a wanton piece of tariff folly; when it is remembered that in 1889 we exported 13,400,000 pounds of nails and spikes (including cut nails, wire nails, horse-shoe and wrought nails), and 14,400,000 pounds in 1890. The largest buyers of these nails are Mexico, Chili, and Cuba. It is thus seen that our nails are able to meet the competition of the world in neutral markets, and, notwithstanding this fact, the high tariff wall is kept up to protect the nail-makers from foreign competition.

They compete successfully with foreigners in neutral markets, often by selling at figures much lower than in the home market. An investigation of this subject reveals the fact that our nail-makers make an "export discount" on at least some classes of their product, as the following table will show:

Horse Nails.	In "Home Market."	To Foreigners.
Essex Horse Nails No. 6, per lb.	$0.17	$0.14
No. 8, per lb.	.15	.13¾
No. 10	.14	.12¾
Lyra Horse Nails, No. 6	.12½	.10
No. 8	.11	.09 1-5

The protectionists lay claim to the nail industry as one of the jewels in the crown of the protective system. But a few positive facts about this industry ought to be stated. It is pointed out by David A. Wells in his "Recent Economic Changes" that owing to the great prosperity of the nail business from 1881 to 1884, many establishment increased their capacity, and some more than doubled it. Many new mills were built East and West and the producing power of the country was nearly doubled; but consumption increased by only one-fifth. In this way the market was over-stocked and prices were forced down in some cases below the cost of production. The result was that a combination or agreement was entered into by the manufacturers for the purpose of restricting production; in this way prices were again in a measure restored.

Trusts, as some of the protectionists are beginning to confess, are "the deadly enemies of the protective system." Are they willing to claim the nail trust as one of the offsprings of protection? And are they willing to sanction its cheaper prices to foreigners than to Americans?

Is Consumption Contagious.

The belief now prevails among the ablest scientific physicians that it is contagious, and further, that the germ which conveys it has been detected. Such diseases as measles, scarlet fever, small-pox, diphtheria, typhoid fever, cholera, yellow fever, and consumption are regarded as "germ" diseases, and the near future will doubtless bring into use methods for controlling them in a large degree. It is the hope of Dr. Koch, of Berlin, and many of his eminent medical friends that he has indicated a line of investigation which may result in a discovery of a cure for consumption.

BALANCE of power, to assure the independence of states and control the ambitions of sovereigns, was first laid down as a principle by Italian politicians of the fifteenth century, on the invasion of Charles VIII. of France, A. D. 1494.

THE NATIONAL SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Lawmakers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

IN the Senate, among the bills reported and placed on the calendar on the 4th were the following: Senate bill, to provide for the inspection of vessels carrying export cattle from the United States to foreign countries; Senate bill, to prevent adulterations of food and drugs. Mr. Blair presented the credentials of his successor, Jacob H. Gallinger, and they were placed on file. After a short executive session the doors were reopened, and legislative business was resumed. In the House Mr. Dingley of Maine reported from the Silver Pool Committee a resolution discharging J. A. Owenby from the custody of the Sergeant-at-arms. Adopted. Mr. McKinley asked unanimous consent that during the remainder of the session the House shall meet at 11 o'clock a. m. Mr. Rogers of Arkansas objected. The House then went into executive committee of the whole on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

IN the House, on the 5th, it was ordered that during the remainder of the session the hour of meeting shall be at 11 o'clock a. m. Mr. Boothman, of Ohio, reported a resolution for the printing of a digest of the election cases decided by the Fifty-first Congress, which was adopted, and the House went into committee of the whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill. The Senate took up the pension appropriation bill. It appropriates for pensions for the year $133,175,085; for fees and expenses of examining surgeons, $1,500,000; for salaries of eighteen pension agents, $72,000; for clerk hire, $300,000. The latter item is increased by an amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to $400,000. Another amendment reported from the committee strikes out the proviso limiting to $2 the compensation of a pension attorney, and inserts in lieu of it a proviso limiting such compensation to $5. There was a long discussion on the latter amendment.

IN the House, on the 6th, Messrs. Flower, Wilson, Vaux, and others pitched into World's Fair matters in a vicious way. They denounced the whole managerial machinery as extravagant, cumbersome and blundering, and attacked the constitutionality of any appropriation by Congress. Mr. Vaux's performance was so amusing that his time was extended two or three minutes. The old gentleman was in his quaintest mood. He told stories on General Jackson, cracked jokes at the expense of the Farmers' Alliance, and for fifteen minutes kept the House in uproarious laughter. Free coinage is believed to be killed by the decision of the Speaker that no amendment of existing laws can be made in an appropriation bill. In the Senate Mr. Morrill made a speech in opposition to the eight-hour bill. He said that he was convinced that the eight-hour law of 1868 was wrong, and that it would inflict upon the class it was specially intended to benefit a grave and possibly an irreparable injury. The House passed the Senate bill amending the land forfeiture act of Sept. 29, 1890.

BUT little was done by Congress on the 7th, except to consider World's Fair matters. After a long discussion concerning salaries of officials, Col. Davis, Director General, was awarded $7,500 per year, and his position was made a national one. The President will be paid $5,000, Vice President $4,000, the Secretary $3,000, and $8,000 will be devoted to clerk hire. These figures are greatly reduced; but the action of the House in recognizing the Director General as a national officer is regarded by the Fair officials as a great victory, as it stamps the enterprise as a national one and will give assurance to foreign exhibitors that private interests do not control it. President Palmer regards the action of reducing salaries with disfavor, but says he should work as hard for nothing as he would for a big figure; and he says the exhibit is to be the grandest the world ever saw.

The Science of Smuggling.

With what skill adulterators sometimes utilize the resources of chemistry or physics in order to imitate natural substances or to sophisticate manufactured products is well known. The genius of smugglers knows no less limit. We have recently been apprised manufactured products is well known. The genius of smugglers know no less limit. We have recently been apprised of a fact which appears to us to cap the climax. We regret it for the sake of our neighbors across the Rhine, but it is a question of a German fraud.

The Longwy custom house seized a German car that had started from the Luxemburg station, carrying so-called dressed stone. From one of the blocks there was oozing a liquid that was recognized by the inspector as 96 degree alcohol. The car was put on the wharf, and the stone was taken off and broken, when it was observed that the interior, which was hollow, held a zinc box of 1 m. by 0.7 m. by 0.4 m., containing 297 liters of alcohol. The other blocks were found in the same condition. The screw cap was carefully concealed under a layer of cement uniformly marked with the letter D. The numbers succeeded each other, and upon each stone there was found another mark indicating the contents in liters.—Scientific American.

Good Manners.

NEVER try to outshine, but to please.

NEVER press a favor where it seems undesired.

NEVER intrude ill-health, pains, losses, or misfortunes.

NEVER unavoidably wound the feelings of a human being.

DO NOT ask another to do what you would not be glad to do under similar circumstances.

NEVER omit to perform a kind act when it can be done with any reasonable amount of exertion.

NEVER needlessly wound the vanity of another or dilate unnecessarily upon disagreeable subjects.

NEVER talk aloud so that others than the one addressed can hear, in public places or upon the street.

DO NOT make witticisms at the expense of others which you would not wish to have made upon yourself.

REMEMBER that good manners are thoughts filled with kindness and refinement and then translated into behavior.

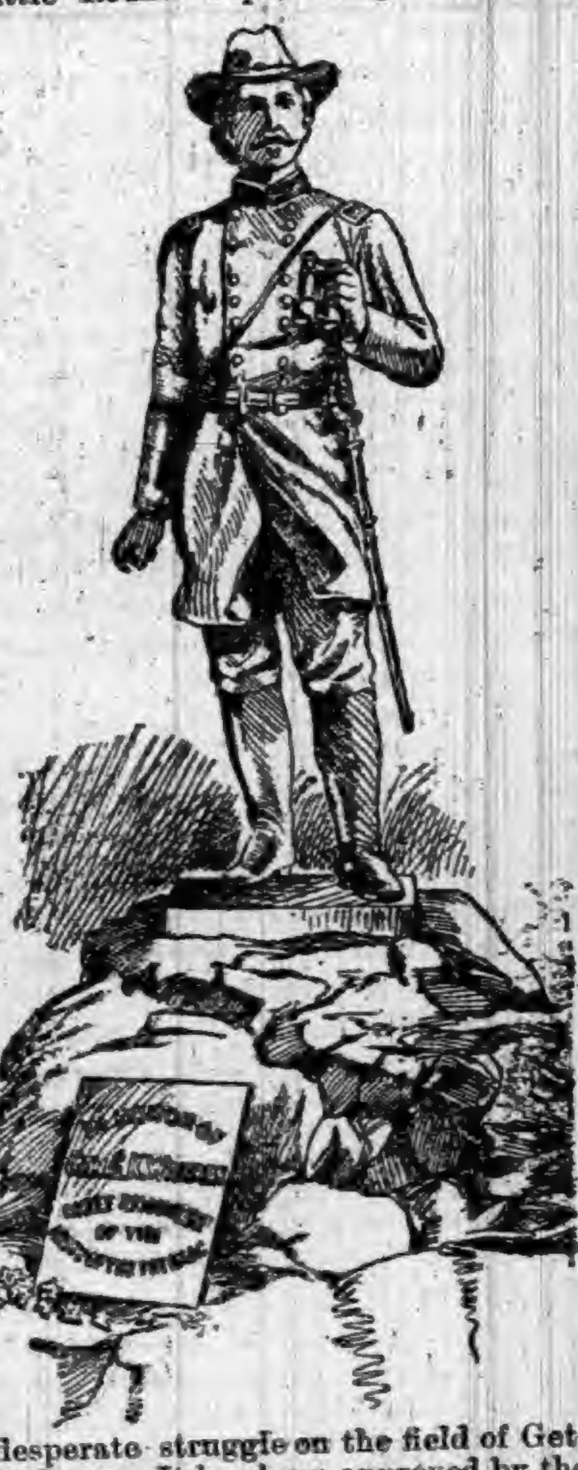
BE not ostentations in dress or deportment; nothing can be more vulgar. See that costumes fit the time and occasion.

Cleanliness of the Japanese.

In his article upon Japan, in the January number of Scribner's Magazine, Sir Edwin Arnold says: "There are eight or nine hundred public baths in Tokio, where 300 persons bathe daily, at a charge of one sen three rin (about a cent) per head, and less than a farthing each for children. The poorest may, therefore, bathe, and always do; so that, lately, in the time of dear rice, when money was given to the poor, a tenth-part was allotted to bathing tickets. Besides the public bathing establishments, every good house also possesses its own bath. The Japanese have a proverb: 'Everything can be cured by a bath except love.' They are the greatest lovers of 'the tub' in the world, and undoubtedly the cleanest of all known people. A Japanese crowd has no odor whatever, and your jinrikisha man perspires profusely without the smallest offense to the nicest sense of his fare close behind. True, they wear no underlinen and put on the same garment after the bath, but these articles of clothing are constantly being washed."

STATUE TO GEN. G. K. WARREN.

Remarkable success has attended the movement undertaken a little more than two months ago by G. K. Warren Post, G. A. R., of Brooklyn, to secure the erection of a monument to the soldier after whom the post was named, and who was the chief engineer officer of the Army of the Potomac. After an invitation to several sculptors of established reputations, the model of Henry Baerer, herewith represented, was selected as a graphic expression of Warren's attitude on Little Round Top during the most desperate struggle on the field of Gettysburg. It has been approved by the General's widow. While spirited and even dramatic in pose, it is faithful in portraiture, the military and defiant feature of his elastic figure being very pronounced.



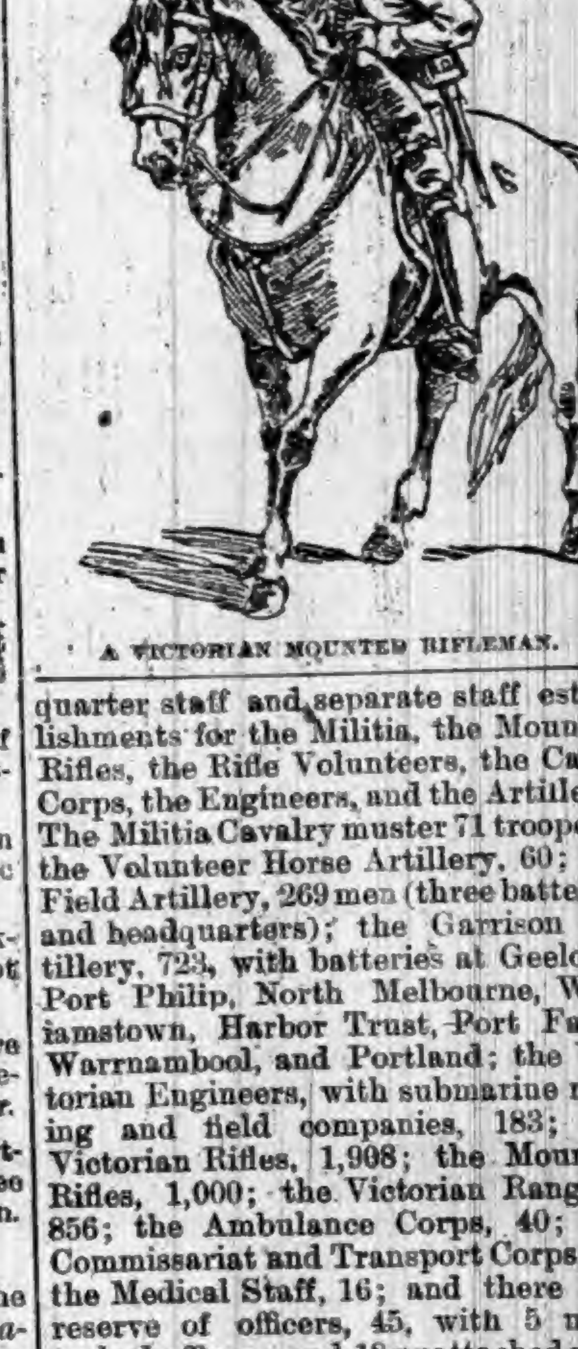
The figure will be of bronze, heroic in size—that is, seven and a half feet high—and will stand on a mass of granite bowlders taken from the historic spot of Little Round Top itself with the consent of the Gettysburg Battlefield Association.

General Warren was chief topographical engineer under General Hooker during the Gettysburg fight, and went to Little Round Top on the morning of the second day of the battle. He found the signal corps gathering their flags to leave the hill. He also discovered that Hood's Texans were flanking Sickles' corps and threatened disaster to the Union army. General Warren, by a ruse de guerre, made the enemy believe we were stronger than we were, and dashed down the height in search of troops. He secured a brigade and battery, and led them up to the scene just as Hood's men were coming up the other side of the summit, and then ensued a bloody hand-to-hand fight, which remains, perhaps, the thrilling incident of the war. Mr. Baerer has wrought the face and attitude of this statue with a determination and eagerness to excel that make it one of the best productions of the sculptor's art serving to commemorate the brave and signal deeds of either Confederate or Union soldier.

VICTORIA MOUNTED RIFLES.

An Effective and Popular Military Force in Australia.

The military forces of the colony of Victoria consist of a permanent force of militia and volunteers, with a headquarter staff and separate staff establishments for the Militia, the Mounted Rifles, the Rifle Volunteers, the Cadet Corps, the Engineers, and the Artillery. The Militia Cavalry muster 71 troopers; the Volunteer Horse Artillery, 60; the Field Artillery, 269 men (three batteries and headquarters); the Garrison Artillery, 723, with batteries at Geelong, Port Philip, North Melbourne, Williamstown, Harbor Trust, Port Fairy, Warrnambool, and Portland; the Victorian Engineers, with submarine mining and field companies, 183; the Victorian Rifles, 1,908; the Mounted Rifles, 1,000; the Victorian Rangers, 856; the Ambulance Corps, 40; the Commissariat and Transport Corps, 64; the Medical Staff, 16; and there is a reserve of officers, 45, with 5 unattached officers, and 18 unattached medical officers; making a total of 5,594. The artillery possesses 177 guns of different kinds.



A VICTORIAN MOUNTED RIFLEMAN.

The Victorian Mounted Rifles are a regiment that was raised in 1885 at the request of the Government. It is 1,000 strong, but is to be increased to 1,200, divided into two battalions. The force is extremely popular, and there is never any lack of recruits from all parts of the colony; it is said to be the best equipped mounted infantry corps in the British Empire. The service is purely voluntary, each man finding his own horse and saddle, while the Government finds his equipment. Each effective earns £3 for his company, which is funded and devoted to company expenditure for military duty. The uniform is plain and serviceable, of khakee, with crimson facings and brown leather appointments, the uniform of all ranks being assimilated as much as possible in order to avoid officers being picked off.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

AND

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.
My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 1[illegible] pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. [illegible] I not received this remedy. My customers [illegible] it gives great satisfaction."

It is said that the health fad people are going to work up a craze over the onion as one of the most health-giving vegetables in the world. Just why King Kalakaua should burn with desire to visit this country for the purpose of making the acquaintance of our politicians is hard to understand. Unless there be something in it for the politicians his royal nibs will have a hard time getting on in the world. A Brunswick, Me., physician tells the Brunswick Telegraph that the pecuniary loss for the past year in that town arising from a loss of time, paid for physicians, medicine, etc., from typhoid fever alone, would pay the interest on a system of sewers for Brunswick. The same is probably true of other places. This is one of the arithmetical facts that cannot be brought to public attention too often.

Moderation and temperance in all things, whether of work or pleasure, should be more cultivated. A little more time for meals and the social amenities of life, a little more method in all that we do, together with a self-repression of nervousness, a cultivation of open-air freedom and exercise and a better division of the hours of labor, would make stronger and steadier men and women, fuller purses and happier homes.

It is not often that a lost art is recovered, but it is said that the chemists have triumphed in the matter of the ancient "Alexander blue." This blue, the ideal of painters and decorators, was a peculiar and remarkably durable color. Every year the country has a periodical attack of morality. It begins with a revival the first week of the year, and usually lasts until the end of the month. It is due here now. Things that you will be allowed to do at any other time of the year, and that are thought harmless, will bring down prayers and exhortations on your head if you attempt to do them now. A wave of wickedness often sweeps over the country. The wave of morality is due but once a year.

Gen. Francis E. Spinner, ex-Treasurer of the United States, has been a great sufferer for so long that death is doubtless a happy release to him. A faithful and honored servant of the people in a post of high public trust, he has left the whole world an example of fortitude in the way in which he faced a lingering and repulsive death for years. Neither Gen. Grant nor Emperor Frederick was outwardly disfigured by his cancer, but Gen. Spinner bore nobly the awful misery of having his very face eaten away.

The day after the tobacco factory in Madrid was burned 10,000 women invaded the palace court yard, and Queen Christine gave orders that a delegation should be allowed to come to her. It was a strange sight, says an eyewitness, to see those cigarieres, with their shawls crossed on their hips and their red foulard handkerchiefs on their heads, mounting the staircase of Charles V.—never before so invaded. They brought with them a little boy about the age of the young king, who, mounted on the shoulders of his mother, lisped out a little speech to the queen. Queen Christine, much touched, took the young fellow on her knee and kissed him several times. The queen promised help, and in the meantime gave $2,000 to the cigarieres.

A PRETTY BALANCING TRICK.

The Articles Are a Ladle, Knife and Tumbler of Water.

This is an easy and pretty balancing trick. Take an ordinary basting ladle and hook it over the blade of a knife, close to the haft, as shown in the engraving. It should be made fast with a piece of cork, or by bending, so as to prevent it from slipping. The combination may then be balanced on the finger or on the edge of a table, or, more surprising still, on the edge of a tumbler filled with water.

GRIM RUSSIA'S OUTRAGE

AMERICAN SAILORS IMPRISONED IN HER COAL MINES.

They Were Poachers, and Have No Redress—Forced to Dig Coal—They Had No Knowledge of the Testimony at the Trial—Captives for Three Years.

[Boston dispatch.]

One of the greatest outrages ever inflicted upon American citizens by the decree of a foreign power has been the imprisonment of four New England sailors—one of them born in Boston—for two years and ten months in a Siberian coal mine. One American died, after starving upon rice soup and being eaten by vermin. This seems also to have been the fate of the twelve or fifteen Japanese who made up the rest of the crew. The first member of this little party to reach home after being mourned as dead is Capt. Joseph W. Morris, of this city. He suffered unheard-of cruelty as punishment for poaching in Russian territory, and is one of two survivors of the awful punishment inflicted upon the crew. The fact that he was poaching invalidates his claim for indemnity from the Russian Government.

He had made one successful expedition to the islands in Behring Sea, and then he tried it again. The second time he had an experience which has effectually cured him of poaching in Russian territory. The schooner made a successful run to the islands, secured a full cargo of skins, and was headed for Yokohama, when a Russian man-of-war overhauled her. The man-of-war proved to be the Rasabonach. It took the schooner in tow and reached Vladivostock without incident.

The trial was conducted in Russian. They told their stories in English, and they were translated for the benefit of the court, but were ignorant of the testimony against them. They were taken to the town jail, a small stone building with cemented floor. Their cells were 16x20 feet, walled with stone and lighted with slits in the wall with bars across. At the end of a week they were taken out, wet and hungry, and started on the road for Nicolaski, 150 miles to the northward, near the Gulf of Penjinsk.

When they reached Nicolaski they learned that they were sentenced to work in the mines three years. Capt. Morris was the first to go down, and he did not again see the light of day for two years and ten months.

When Morris came out he found F. C. Crocker, of Searsport, Me., one of his crew, had just been released. Together they walked 150 miles to Vladivostock, the Russians refusing them transportation. An American vessel took them to Nagasaki, where the United States Consul provided them with clothing, and they took their first hot bath in three years.

PENNY POSTAGE.

A Bill Introduced for the Establishment of a Parcels Post.

The annual report of the Postmaster General has provoked considerable inquiry as to the necessity for reform in postal rates. The ideas advanced by different writers upon the subject as to the most desirable changes that could be made are generally prompted by personal or business interests. Many believe that the public generally will take the view that the Postal Department was established for the safe and rapid transmission of letters of a business or personal nature, and for the prompt dissemination of news matter, and that all other undertakings of the Postal Department should be secondary to this. The public demand not only the rapid and safe transmission of letters and news matter, but that the rates on this legitimate class of mail matter shall be placed at the lowest figure consistent with its cost. The report of the Postmaster General shows that the present 2 cent per ounce rate on letters yielded the Government during the last year, $38,000,000, and that the actual cost of carrying and delivering such letters for the same period was but $8,000,000, leaving a clear profit of $30,000,000. But the final balance shown in the report shows that, instead of there being a profit of $30,000,000, there was an actual deficiency or loss of $5,768,300. Inquiry into the causes of this deficiency discloses the fact that it is due—

First, to carrying through the mails, at rates largely under cost, tons of matter composed principally of advertising schemes and dodges of every character, and merchandise packages of every nature, overburdening the already overtaxed facilities of the mails to such an extent as to render the prompt transmission and delivery of legitimate mail matter almost an impossibility.

Second, to the shipment through the mails of Government freight that could and should be forwarded through other channels at much lower cost.

In the face of this report a bill has been introduced in Congress for the establishment of a parcels post, which proposes still lower postal rates than are now in effect on a class of business that has been largely instrumental in reducing a profit of $30,000,000 to an actual loss of $5,768,300. It is not of as much importance to the average citizen that the cost for the transmission of a package of merchandise or other articles of like character through the mails shall be less than the government pays for transporting it, as that the rates of postage on regularly established newspapers and personal and business letters which are the province and property of all shall be placed within the reach of all.

The revenue of the Postal Department, if properly applied, fully justifies the reduction of rates on letter postage, and it is undoubtedly the duty of every voter to urge upon their Representatives in Congress to legislate for penny postage on letters and for the continuance of the present reasonable rates that are afforded the legitimate newspaper interests of the country. The surplus revenues of the Postal Department should be used for this purpose, and for the improvement of the facilities for local delivery of letters and newspapers, and for the extension of mail routes to regions of the country not already favored with acceptable postal communications, and they should not be used to build up a branch of public service that is not required by the public, and which experience has demonstrated will exhaust the revenues and absorb the facilities needed for other and more important branches of the postal service.—Chicago Eagle.

A THRILLING EXPERIENCE.

Remarkable Statement of Personal Danger and Providential Escape.

The following story—which is attracting wide attention from the press—is so remarkable that we cannot excuse ourselves if we do not lay it before our readers entire:

To the editor Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat:

SIR—On the first day of June, 1881, I lay at my residence in this city surrounded by my friends and waiting for death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous any one had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, and weighed over 200 pounds, and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times that they are unusually tired and cannot account for it. They feel dull pains in various parts of the body and do not understand why. Or they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me first began. Still I thought nothing of it; that probably I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a heavy, and at times neuralgic, pain in one side of my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid little attention to it. Then my stomach would get out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet, even as a physician, I did not think that these things meant anything serious. I fancied I was suffering from malaria and doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I next noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that a persistent froth and scum appeared on the surface, and a sediment settled. And yet I did not realize my danger, for, indeed, seeing these symptoms continually, I finally became accustomed to them, and my suspicion was wholly disarmed by the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I cannot understand.

I consulted the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the famed mineral springs in America, and traveled from Maine to California. Still I grew worse. No two physicians agreed as to my malady. One said I was troubled with spinal irritation; another, dyspepsia; another, heart disease; another, general debility; another, congestion of the base of the brain; and so on through a long list of common diseases, the symptoms of many of which I really had. In this way several years passed, during which time I was steadily growing worse. My condition had really become pitiable. The slight symptoms I had at first experienced were developed into terrible and constant disorders. My weight had been reduced from 207 to 130 pounds. My life was a burden to myself and friends. I could retain no food on my stomach, and lived wholly by injections. I was a living mass of pain. My pulse was uncontrollable. In my agony I frequently fell to the floor and clutched the carpet, and prayed for death. Morphine had little or no effect in deadening the pain. For six days and nights I had the death-premonitory hiccoughs constantly. My water was filled with tube-casts and albumen. I was struggling with Bright's Disease of the kidneys in the last stages!

While suffering thus I received a call from my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, at that time rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of this city. I felt that it was our last interview, but in the course of conversation Dr. Foote detailed to me the many remarkable cures of cases like my own which had come under his observation. As a practicing physician and a graduate of the schools, I derided the idea of any medicine outside the regular channels being in the least beneficial. So solicitous, however, was Dr. Foote, that I finally promised I would waive my prejudice. I began its use on the first day of June, 1881, and took it according to directions. At first it sickened me; but this I thought was a good sign for one in my debilitated condition. I continued to take it; the sickening sensation departed, and I was finally able to retain food upon my stomach. In a few days I noticed a decided change for the better, as also did my wife and friends. My hiccoughs ceased, and I experienced less pain than formerly. I was so rejoiced at this improved condition that, upon what I had believed but a few days before was my dying bed, I vowed, in the presence of my family and friends, should I recover, I would both publicly and privately make known this remedy for the good of humanity, wherever and whenever I had an opportunity, and this letter is in fulfillment of that vow. My improvement was constant from that time, and in less than three months I had gained 26 pounds in flesh, became entirely free from pain, and I believe I owe my life and present condition wholly to Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy which I used.

Since my recovery I have thoroughly re-investigated the subject of kidney difficulties and Bright's disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately, and as a physician, that I believe more than one-half the deaths which occur in America are caused by Bright's disease of the kidneys. This may sound like a rash statement, but I am prepared to fully verify it. Bright's disease has no distinctive features of its own (indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity), but has the symptoms of nearly every other common complaint. Hundreds of people die daily, whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate as occurring from "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," and other common complaints, when in reality it is Bright's disease of the kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence if at all by the commonest symptoms and fastens itself in the constitution before the victim is aware of it. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, from convulsions, apoplexy or heart disease. As one who has suffered, and knows by bitter experience what he says, I implore everyone who reads those words not to neglect the slightest symptoms of kidney difficulty. No one can afford to hazard such chances.

I make the foregoing statements based upon facts which I can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may possibly be sufferers such as I was, is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if can successfully warn others from the dangerous path in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all professional and personal consequences.

The Sort of Telegram She Would Send.

The difficulty which boys and girls experience in expressing their ideas in writing is notorious. An examiner at a seminary for young ladies requested one of them the other day to give him her notion of what sort of telegram she would send to her father in the event of her having met with a railway accident. It was a thing that might occur, of course, and the lesson proved useful, but in any case, it would give an idea of her mental resources. He threw out no hints, but with the proviso that it should be as brief as possible, left the whole composition to the young lady's imagination. This was the telegram: "Dear papa—Dear mamma is killed; Jane" (her sister) "and I are in the refreshment room."

Many people think that the word "Bitters" can be used only in connection with an intoxicating beverage. This is a mistake, as the best remedy for all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys, etc., is Prickly Ash Bitters. It is purely a medicine and every article used in its manufacture is of vegetable origin of known curative qualities.

To Be Robbed of Health

By a pestilential climate, by a vocation entailing constant exposure, physical overwork, or sedentary drudgery at the desk is a hard lot. Yet many persons originally possessed of a fair constitution suffer this deprivation before the meridian of life is passed. To any and all subject to conditions inimical to health, no purer or more agreeable preservative of the greatest earthly blessings can be recommended than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which inures the system to climatic changes, physical fatigue, and mental exhaustion. It eradicates dyspepsia, the bane of sedentary brain workers, preserves and restores regularity of the bowels and liver, when disordered from any cause, annihilates fever and ague and prevents it, checks the growth of a tendency to rheumatism and gout, and neutralizes the danger to be apprehended from causes productive of kidney, bladder, and uterine ailments. To be convinced of the truth of these statements, it is only necessary to give this sterling preparation an impartial trial.

A Hint for a Loving Wife.

The average man wants to cock his feet up. If you said to the piazza group, "Make yourselves unreservedly comfortable," they'd all tilt their chairs back and hoist their feet to the railing.

My friend next door had the foot hoisting habit so badly that he wore the paper off the wall; so his wife thought out a biting, caustic piece of sarcasm, and one morning nailed on the wall right where the tell tale marks were a pair of slippers. But he misunderstood the motive completely, kissed her for her thoughtfulness, and forthwith titled his chair back and up went his feet to the most comfortable attitude he had struck in a long time, his heel held in the slippers.—Exchange.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

The Indian Question

Has been the absorbing topic lately. A facetious correspondent says: "If the agents, instead of dosing the poor Indians with cough cures, to the disgust of their palates and destruction of their stomachs, had sold them Shiloh's Consumption Cure, the only reliable cough cure, palatable to the taste and instantaneous in effect, they would all be on the reservations yet." This is doubtful, but certainly nothing creates more alarm than a cough—nothing cures so quickly as Shiloh's Cure. It was the first guaranteed cure for coughs, asthma and consumption. It is the first in the estimation of all who have used it in throat or lung trouble. Remember Shiloh's Cure.

Prevention

Is better than cure, and people who are subject to rheumatism, can prevent attacks by keeping the blood pure and free from the acid which causes the disease. This suggests the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla, unquestionably the best blood purifier, and which has been used with great success for this very purpose by many people.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has also cured innumerable cases of rheumatism of the severest sort, by its powerful effect in neutralizing acidity of the blood, and in enabling the kidneys and liver to properly remove the waste of the system. Try it.

The Oldest Medicine in the World is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE-WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription, and has been in constant use for nearly a century. There are few diseases to which mankind are subject more distressing than sore eyes, and none, perhaps, for which more remedies have been tried without success. For all external inflammation of the eyes it is an infallible remedy. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. MEISSONNIER, the famous painter died last Saturday.

ALBERT GALL became treasurer of state Tuesday.

SPAIN now on the eve of a revolution. Wants to be a republic.

COLORED republicans ask Harrison to appoint a colored man to succeed Treasurer Windom.

RICH ARABS, are going to locate a new city somewhere in the southern states It will be a purely oriental town in all respects.

THREE Italians in New York threw dice last week to see which should marry a girl Bootblack won, and he and the girl hugged each other for joy.

EMPLOYES of the Pennsylvania railway have been stealing freight, and other things from the cars on their lines. They are being overhauled for it.

A WELL in Kansas became so hot at sixty feet, the men could dig no further. Supposed to be the hole into which the men threw the late lamented Ingalls.

TURPIE has taken the first step in the senate, asking that the U. S. Senators be elected by the people. Several states besides Indiana are moving for the same thing.

HARRISON may appoint John C. New, late of Indianapolis, and present consul general at London, to be secretary of the treasury. He has been assistant secretary.

DURING blizzard the other day some miners at New Haven. Conn., put their frozen dynamite on the stove while they ate their lunch. All heard it when it thawed.

FARMERS now propose to build up ocean commerce by allowing American ships that carry home goods, to land their return goods without paying duty. Pretty good plan.

GIRL at Amboy, N. J. has just come out of a year's trance. Could hear and remember nearly all that was said around her, but could not move. She took but little food all the time. Will now recover.

SAM JONES the noted preacher had offended the mayor of Palestine, Texas. The mayor, laid in wait for Sam, and attacked him with a big cane. The preacher defended himself took the cane from the mayor, and gave the latter an awful thrashing.

OHIO and Indiana are once more trying to find the correct boundary line between the two states.

MRS. ANNA M. EDDY, widow of the late Col. Norman Eddy, died last week at her home in South Bend. Her husband was colonel of the 48th Indiana, and died a few years ago while serving as secretary of state. He was always a prominent democrat in his section.

THE B. & O. road has bought the Pittsburg & Western road, that runs from Pittsburg to Akron. Then they have a new line from Akron to Chicago Junction. These two changes will make them a strong competitor for the Pennsylvania road.

WHITE caps in this state have been up to various outrages lately. When Gray was governor republican papers used to complain every time, that if he were of any use he would put a stop to these outrages. But some how they don't seem to think Gov. Hovey has any duty to perform in the matter. Queer, ain't it?

A STRANGE accident occurred last week in two coal mines in Pennsylvania, and on the same day. In each case men working down in the mines, cut through the rocky wall between them and an unused shaft now filled to the top with water. The water rushed in with great force, and some lives were lost though some of the men got out.

DURING the blizzard last week, about 200 of the men who were fishing on the ice in Saginaw Bay, found the ice breaking between them and the shore, and themselves and the entire fishing village going toward the lake. A few managed to get to the shore, but most of them could not, and were on the floating ice two or three days, suffering from cold, hunger, and fright. The ice fields finally ran against some islands, and they were rescued.

WARDEN MURDOCK, of the Michigan City prison, has been investigated and all his accounts were found correct. This report was signed by all the committee without regard to politics. A committee of expert accountants, including Bruce Carr, for four years republican auditor of state found everything all right. The prison has not only sustained itself, but has paid large sums to the state, $18,000 being now ready to turn into the treasury.

THE force bill appears to be dead. But the queer thing about it is, that the common people of either party, never cared to see it pass. No one wanted it but the leaders who hoped to get from it some party advantage. It is now believed that if it comes up again, there will be several more republican senators, who will join the democrats in defeating it. As to the "Cloture bill" by the help of which they hoped to get the force bill through, there seemed no desire to have this become the senate's general rule. They seemed to want it only for this one occasion.

Mr. L. Conkle, treasurer of Defiance Co., Ohio, and his wife, stopped Tuesday in Waterloo on their way home from Pleasant Lake, to visit Dr. T. J. Carpenter's family.

Sunday evening Feb. 8th, the Y. P. S. C. E. held their anniversary in the Presbyterian church. The services were responsive and interesting. The singing was good, especially the solo by Lucy Harper.

Last Friday eve'g, at the home of Dr. Broughten, a surprise party was given by the young people, to Benj. and Leon Loewenstein, who have now gone to Philadelphia, where the elder will engage in business with a relative.

Last week, Wednesday evening a pound surprise party was given to Rev L. A. Retts and family. It proved a pleasant occasion to all concerned. Besides numerous smaller gifts, some of the older members of the M. E. church combined and presented Mrs. Retts with a fine plush cloak.

At Mrs. Florence Waterman's last week Tuesday evening the election of officers of the L. M. C. resulted as follows: Pres., Rose Blair; Vice-President, Florence Waterman; Sec'y, Mattie Maxson; Treas., Rena Smith; Critic, Mattie Beidler; Custodian of Queries, S. C. S. Winslow.

The missionary tea at the residence of Mr and Mrs Jasper Waterman was well attended and was a complete success. The supper was abundant and unusually fine. Without exception everything was perfectly prepared. During the evening a very interesting letter from Miss Matson, teacher in Scotia seminary and a niece of Mrs. Waterman was well read by Mrs. Hattie Dickinson.

Monday evening of this week, Hon. Van Bennet, the "Kansas Cyclone," delivered a prohibition address at the Evangelical church to a packed house Mr Bennett is a cultured gentleman in appearance, manner and language He is never rough or boisterous, nor calls anyone hard names, not even the liquor sellers whom he is fighting. In no sense can he be called a "cyclone" except in his working for the destruction of intemperance—nothing else will suffer at his hands; so he is a well behaved "cyclone." The key note to his discourse was "strike at the root," cutting off a branch here and there availeth nothing; the evil grows and will continue to grow until completely rooted out. That he continually made telling points was shown by the applause of the audience The music by the Arion Quartet, of Auburn, was of itself enough to draw a crowd. That it was thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed was evident.

BUTLER.

Showalter & Ireson lost a $2000 horse last week. No insurance.

Rev. Diffinbach continues his meetings with a fair measure of success.

It is expected that the new mill will be ready to operate in about two weeks.

Farmers' Institute.

EDITOR: Will you please announce in your paper of this week that arrangements have been made for the holding of a Farmers' Institute on Wednesday and Thursday, Feb 25 and 26, at the opera house in Waterloo. This is designed to be the grand round-up institute for the 16th Agricultural District of Indiana, composed of the counties of Allen, DeKalb Steuben, Lagrange and Noble, under the management of Prof. W. C. Latta, the State superintendent of Farmers' Institute work. It is expected that at least two men or women from each of the counties will be placed on the program to take part in the work. We also have the promise of some able workers from other parts of the state. The Fremont Orchestra composed of eight persons, and having at its head the well-known and renowned musicians, Profs. Heath and Holbrook, have consented to be with us. In addition to the grand music that will be rendered by them at intervals during the institute, they will on Wednesday evening give an operatic entertainment free to all attending the institute. We extend a cordial invitation to everyone to come and enjoy this institute with us. Reduced fare will be secured on the Lake Shore road from all directions.

Respectfully, R. M. LOCKHART.
Local Manager.

Bills Introduced.

Since our last issue we note the following:

A bill was offered to make all prosecuting attorney members of the commissioners' court to act as the board's adviser, etc.; a bill to amend the infamous Grubb's libel law, which makes a crime and punishment on purpose for newspaper men, and for no others—to punish for entering a horse for premium under an assumed name—that no ducks or game shall be killed on the Kankakee Marshes by "pot hunters" from Chicago, between sunrise and sunset of any day—to accept the gift to the state, of the Hendricks Monument—to make the crime of seduction, a penitentiary offense of two to fourteen years—to create a county board of three drainage commissioners—the apportionment bill for congressional districts leaves the districts about as they now are. The legislative districts they think of giving us a joint member with Allen, and another with Noble. Up to Saturday 450 bills had been introduced into the House, and 220 in the Senate. About one in ten will pass. One to require hunters to obtain consent of land owner, before going on his premises—one to give persons who have been whipped, etc., by white caps, a right to sue the county for damages—to have all additions to town plats submitted to town council—to tax all dogs—to make 25 years a life sentence in the penitentiary—to have property assessed at cash value—By O. Z. Hubbell, to allow women to vote at municipal and township elections. (The miners' bill of two years ago, and which the governor signed without its having an enacting clause is up again, and will likely pass.) —One to exempt from city taxes, any plot of over five acres of land.

MAN-O-TEE,

(INDIAN DOCTOR)

CURES CHRONIC DISEASES.

Read the Evidence and judge for Yourself.

HUNTINGTON, Ind., June 30, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
Two months ago I began to use your medicine; at that time I had had headaches, poor appetite, was weak and unable to do any work, felt tired and nervous and was troubled with severe neuralgic pains in different parts of the body; am now entirely free from pain, can eat well, sleep well and work without tiring. I can gladly recommend you to any who may be sick.
Yours truly,
GEO. HELSER.

NEBO, Ind., July 4, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
I have been troubled with Dispepsia for years. My symptoms were severe pains in the stomach after eating, bloating, poor appetite, constipation, palpitation of the heart, dull headache, dizzy spells, tired feeling, no strength, restless dreamy sleep, and being extremely nervous. This was my condition when I put my case in your care four months ago. I am a well and hearty man to day, and this result has been brought about by the use of your treatment during that time, for which I am truly thankful.
Respectfully,
F. M. JONES.

EPILEPSY CAN BE CURED.
PINE, Ind., Aug. 18, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
My son, Cyrus, has had Epilepsy for many years; would have as many as ten distinct fits in twelve hours, and they were growing worse on him day by day. I tried several doctors with no permanent benefit. Placed him under your treatment, and he is now well and hearty, and has had no attack for over one year. The fits are entirely cured. I consider that your treatment is positively reliable in these cases, and that you have saved my boy years of suffering from this most terrible of maladies. Yours truly,
JAMES E. KINZIE.

WABASH, Ind., July 5, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
If I could induce all ladies who are suffering from disease peculiar to their sex, to visit you, I would be glad to do so, for the benefit I have obtained from your treatment is a great comfort to me, and I gladly add my testimony to that of many others who have been cured.

WARSAW, Ind., Nov. 21st, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
Your treatment cured me of Rheumatism of over 20 years' standing. During the last five years was scarcely able to walk. Am now a well and hearty man.
Yours truly,
E. B. LEEDY.

WARSAW, Ind., Oct. 1st, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
Your treatment has cured me of the worst case of Catarrh I ever saw or heard of. Many say that catarrh can not be cured, but you have demonstrated that such is not the case, for you have cured me and many others here.
MRS. LOU BECKWITH.

VANDALIA, Mich., Aug. 6, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
I have been afflicted with Bleeding Piles for ten years; was so bad with them could not work half of the time; suffered severe pain day day and night, and was rapidly losing flesh and strength. Used your treatment four months, and am perfectly cured. Can work hard, have no pain and am in as good health as I ever was in my life. I recommend you to any who may be suffering.
Respectfully,
JNO. N. BONINE

ROANOKE, Ind., June 30, 1890.
To Whom it may Concern:
I have been treated during the last four months by Dr. Man-O-Tee, the Indian Doctor, for Catarrh, Headache and Nervous Debility. When I went to him, was scarcely able to be up and around. He helped me from the start, and I am now in better health than I have been for years. I consider Dr. Man-O-Tee a skillful physician and recommend him to all who may require medical treatment.
Respectfully,
MRS. ANNA WARNER.

HAS SUFFERED FOR YEARS.
GOSHEN, Ind., June 19, 1890.
DR. MAN-O-TEE:
During the past three months I have used your medicine for headache, cough, brouchitis and general debility, and can not speak too highly of you. No person ever suffered more from neuralgia and headache than I have, and I cannot thank you enough for the relief you have given me.
Yours respectfully,
MRS. ELIZABETH MCDOWELL.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Many of you who are sick can be cured if given proper remedies. The above facts prove this. Twelve years extensive Hospital and private practice — 3 years INDIAN MEDICINE MAN. I use Roots, Barks and Herbs — Nature's remedies. Next visit to Bro. Sheffer of the Kendallville News, is quite a chicken fancier. He is not only a leading spirit of the Steuben poultry show, but was a strong exhibitor at the great poultry fair at Ft. Wayne and took a number of premiums. An editor can do almost anything if he knows how.

Rudolph H. Fromm, from Rochester, Ind., is here getting up an abstract of the titles of DeKalb county. He expects to remain here till some time in March, when he starts for Europe, leaving an assistant to complete the work here.

Mrs. D. S. Ober, Mrs. E. T. Mr. Smith's father and mother (Wm Smith) were also present and all all had a nice visit.

We acknowledge a pleasant call from Geo W. Carper, one of our intelligent young farmers, last week. There is no class on which so much of the future of our country depends as on the young, the intelligent and industrious of those who are making their way in life by their own efforts. We see a good deal of idleness in this day and generation, and therefore feel all the greater pleasure in saying a kind word for those who are pushing their own way.

Miss Lettie Meese returned Thursday last from Ft. Wayne, where she has been attending the Conservatory of Music and the Taylor University in order to perfect herself in music as she will make music teaching her profession. She will enter on this work at once and organize classes in piano or organ, as desired, both in town and in the country. She has taught several classes already, with marked success. Those who wish for information should call on her, at her home, the residence of Rev. W. L. Meese in Auburn.

Quite a little excitement was caused Monday morning on West Seventh St, by the sudden appearance of what Tom. Hood would call "a lost looking, crying child." It was a little fellow who had strayed from home, and become bewildered. He could only realize one thing, and that was, he "wanted mamma." With tears running down his cheeks, he would dart into a house, hoping to find her, but the strange surroundings sent him back into the street again. The street was hurriedly canvassed, and it was found he was Mr. Willis' child residing in the J. R. Lanning property, and he was soon happy at home, where he had as yet not been missed.

To morrow evening the gentlemen's social at the Presbyterian church. A nice supper, including oysters for 25 cents. All come, and you will be royally entertained.

Mr. Kelley, in a speech in the House Indianapolis, formally nominated Cleveland for the presidency in '92. The announcement was greeted with cheers from the democratic side.

There was quite an attendance at the Union temperance meeting at the Lutheran church Sunday afternoon. The principal address was by Mr Kain, and the Arions furnished the singing.

New offices have been made for the express company and for Brown & Culbertson, at their rooms north of the public square. Herb and Charley Weaver of course, occupy the express part, and B. & C. the other. It will be found very convenient for both parties.

Dr. Nusbaum went out into the country to see some patients Sunday, and took J. A. Potter along so as to give the latter a little pleasure trip. When some miles out, the tongue of the carriage broke off, and the horses ran away, leaving the Doctor and Mr. Potter sitting in the buggy. They footed it home, and now they are "down on pleasure rides."

Huntington Democrat: The man who endeavors to acquire a reputation for generosity in a good cause by putting a "promise to pay" on the collection plate and then seeks to repudiate it on the ground that the subscription was made on Sunday will in future be obliged to make it good and pay court costs in addition. This is the just decision of the supreme court of the state of Indiana handed down Wednesday, and an alleged philanthropist who tried the little game will have to go deep in his pocket and pay up. Any man who is mean enough to try to get the better of the Lord in such a transparent way should be taught a lesson of this sort. It will do him and others of his penurious kind a great deal of good.

Hon. A. P. Edgerton is giving the Hicksville papers some valuable ideas—his ideas are always valuable. One of his latest articles refers to the proposed removal of the soldiers monument, from its present location in the cemetery to a point up town. While he doubts the legal right to make the proposed removal and the locating of the monument in a public street, yet if it is to be done it should be placed at the crossing of the two main streets. To those who have noticed what a prominent point this is, and how easily the spot could be made sightly and beautiful, the justice of Mr. Edgerton's suggestions will be fully seen. A monument of this sort, should, we believe, be in a prominent public place, if it can be so located.

We have a late copy of the Ontario Record, sent by J. P. Ensley, one of these big papers they issue about once a year, to tell about the big oranges and lemons, till they make the ordinary chap's mouth water so, that he goes right over to the grocery and invests ten cents for three common plug oranges And yet we suppose the boys out there get so they don't care any more for this luscious fruit than we do for apples in a good apple year. And then, apples are about as scarce as oranges here now, in fact more so. We note in the paper also, among the business firms, "D. S. Cochran, contractor." So we suppose he is alive as usual. Now that Dr. Ford, Mrs. Spooner and Miss Kelley have reached there, we suppose Lottie, Mary and the "boys" will not be so very lonesome in that land of fruit and flowers.

As will be seen in our notice of the masquerade, the musician, who had the middle seat in the orchestra, was Roger R Houlton, late of Franklin township in this county. He is the youngest son of John Houlton the first settler of DeKalb and who built the first log cabin in the county on the present home farm, in 1833. Roger, the youngest son, always had a taste for music, and could play well on the violin, even as a boy, when we first met him at his home, and when his father was yet alive. When he became of age, he gave himself up, largely to his passion for music, which he has given full rein in later years. For a time he traveled with a show, but for a few years past, has been located in Ft. Wayne, where he is a leading spirit in orchestra and similar music, and parties from all about send to them for the supply needed for parties, etc. Mr. Houlton, also does a great deal in the way of copying music, teaching bands and instrumental music. He is also a composer of ability, having furnished some choice original pieces. It was quite a surprise and a pleasure to meet our young friend again last Friday evening, for we had not see him since he was a boy.

Two Sheriffs.

Sheriff McNabb of Whitley county came up here Monday, bringing with him the prisoner, Mease, who was captured with Kuhns, and who was being taken to Tiffin as a witness in Kuhns' trial. On reaching our jail, McNabb met our sheriff, Phil. Plum, and at once recognized him, as his old school teacher of years ago. It took Mr. Plum awhile to recall his former pupil, but it turned out that Sheriff McNabb had been his pupil about twenty five years ago, when Mr. Plum taught school in Fairfield township, though the two had not met since. Now, both teacher and pupil occupy the same honorable office in different counties. Of course they had a pleasant talk about old times. Sheriff McNabb is a brother of Warren McNabb, of Garrett. And again the DeKalb boy gets a good place.

D. D. Moody's Law Office.

Miss Woodhull's Recital.

The recital given by the pupils of Miss Woodhull's class, at the residence of J. L. Davis, last Thursday evening, was a most enjoyable affair. They were those she had been instructing in vocal and instrumental music, and the work they did, showed the thoroughness of the training they had received. Each had something to do. The selections were from the choicest of the masters in music, and were well executed. Johnnie Richards sang two pieces, and did well. Little Aileen Garwood and Miss Edna Davis, had prepared to sing, but owing to severe colds, both were unable to do so. They gave other work instead. Mary Baxter, Reba Houser and Jessie Boland gave fine pieces on the piano, all playing with ease and grace. Interspersed with the work of the classes, Miss Woodhull, assisted by Mrs. D. A. Garwood, gave choice selections of vocal and instrumental music. Among these, was a musical selection in Italian, given by Miss Woodhull, and though her audience could not understand the words, they enjoyed the fine singing in the strange, musical tongue. Both have highly cultured voices and are masters of the piano, and the fortunate guests enjoyed the occasion greatly. Miss Woodhull as is well known, is a master of her profession, and they are fortunate who can be under her instruction. About thirty invited guests enjoyed the recital, and feel greatly pleased with the entertainment.

Consolidation.

The two monthly papers of this county "The Camp Fire Companion," published in Auburn by Weeks Brothers, and the "American Home," published in Butler by A. W. Ash, have been consolidated, and will hereafter be published as one paper under both names. The size and form will be that of the Companion, and the price put at 50 cents a year. The new proprietor, Mr. W. S. Sewell, of Auburn, will manage and edit the paper, which will be issued once a month, about the middle of the month as heretofore. It will combine the features of both papers, and subscribers to both will receive the paper the full time. We believe Mr. Sewell will make it a worthy magazine.

Thanks to Pioneers.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me space in your newsy paper for a few words of praise for the pioneers of the county, who so liberally responded to our call for help on our new church. Ever may their works be kept in full remembrance. And not for one moment would we forget the editor, Mr. Barns, who lent so much valuable aid, and also Mr. M. B. Willis for his generosity. Please accept thanks.

MASQUERADE.

There were three musicians in fact, instead of four, as our artist has it, and they were not masked exactly like this, though many of the dancers were. The musicians too, were supposed to be "Three Italians," but they were in the main "Italians from Cork," for two were Irish or of Irish descent, and but one Italian. But they made good music, and played to give the money's worth. They succeeded finely. They were R. R. Houlton, son of DeKalb county's first settler, who played first violin, James Conley, second violin, and Frank Cassel, who played the harp. We should also say right here, that this pleasant masquerade party was given by the bachelor members of the Jolite Club, the three who are not housekeepers, and so could not invite the club to their homes. They are Editor W. B. Campbell, of the Dispatch, Will Schaab of the firm of Schaab & Brother and Hovey Hanna. These young men bore all the expense, issued the invitations, rented the hall and paid the musicians. The guests were necessarily limited in number, but all felt honored by the privilege of attending what proved the nicest little party of the kind ever seen here. A costumer from Ft. Wayne had furnished costumes to a great many, while others, especially the ladies had fitted up neat disguises of their own invention. The masking has never been equaled here before. They were in good taste and in general complete disguises. A man would not know his own wife nor the wife her husband. The first man we were able to "swear to" was Henry Wolf, and he wasn't disguised. One should see them to appreciate all the enjoyable things one might say about them. We mention such as we can remember, and who became visible after unmasking. W. B. Campbell and Mrs. H. A. Stevens represented a bride and groom, Mrs Rogers was a Greek lady, Mrs. Rakestraw was a May Queen, Mrs. Grund a Russian spinner, Alza Ralston was Little Red Riding Hood, also Miss Alza Reynolds, of Butler, was the same, Helen Ralston and Mrs. Lizzie Kelley were Scotch lassies, Mabel Hartman and Nellie Barns represented Folly, Mrs. Wash Askew and Della Shugers were school girls, Mrs. Perrine and Mrs. Chas. Schaab were flower girls, Edna Davis and Mrs. Wils. McClellan represented night, Mrs. Ernest Sheets was winter, Mrs. Anice Leas was drummer boy, Mrs. Garwood Roumanian peasant girl, Mrs Bert Robbins, a tambourine girl, Mrs. Zent, witch, Jessie Weaver, Mrs. Herb Weaver and Mrs. Ina McDowell fancy costumes, Mira Watson Italian fruit vender, Mrs. Mart Sheets represented a belle, Mrs. H. A. Lesh snow. Fred Davis and Charlie Wood were cavaliers, Walter Hartman was a French Nobleman, G. Yesbera was resplendent as "Your Uncle Sam," Jake Raut and Hugh Culbertson were Dutchmen of various degrees, and both very funny, Herb Weaver and Van Perrine were sailors. One of the many cute rigs was Ed Freygang. He was the double man, a sort of Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde. He had faces both ways, clothes fronting both ways and even shoes that were double, and with toes each way. He was a puzzle, especially in dancing, when his partner was at a loss to tell whether he was coming towards her or to the lady opposite. Then there were Japs, Chinese and other strange people. George Ralston represented a cook, Bert Robbins was a ghost. There was Chauncy Depew, and another that but for lack of a crooked eye would have been an exact picture of Col. Maynard, late editor in chief of the Indianapolis Sentinel. There were also a number of base ball boys all ready to play. But an attempt to describe all, must fail for the mind gets confused. To those who would like to enjoy such a scene of innocent gaiety, we can only say, "Be good like the editor of the COURIER and so deserve an invitation from these enterprising young men," to the next one, which we feel sure they will be obliged to give at some future date. In the meantime gaze on our picture and imagine yourselves there, listening to the sweet strains of the orchestra and taking in the scene of grace and beauty, and young manhood and womanhood, until the sense are full of the enjoyment of this moving panorama and then join with us in a compliment to the young men who made it such a pleasant success.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes sleep all night, cough gone, gained 17 pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

GREAT GRIST OF NEWS.

THREE PERSONS KILLED IN A RAILROAD COLLISION.

Twenty Thousand Tons of Coal Burned—Redpath's Death—An American Schooner Lost—Harrison's Southern Tour.

THREE KILLED.

A Collision Wrecks Two Trains and Kills Three Trainmen.

A west-bound Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad passenger train was wrecked at Gloveland, N. Y. Two persons were killed and several injured.

The accident was caused by the collision of express train No. 8 with wild cat engine No. 18. The train was going at a high rate of speed when it collided with the engine just as the latter was moving off from the main track to a switch. The express engine was thrown to the east side of the track and completely turned over, its tender on the other side, the wild cat engine likewise being demolished and was on the west side of the track. The passengers all received a severe shaking up. The engineer of the express train, James Powers, was badly crushed and was removed in a dying condition. His fireman, name unknown, was fatally injured. James Powers, nephew of the engineer, who was employed on the wild-cat engine was badly injured internally and died within half an hour. Albert Englehart, the fireman of the wild cat engine, was also killed. The engineer was also badly hurt, but will probably recover.

Slavin-Sullivan.

The Police Gazette was advised by a special cable from their London representative recently that the Ormonde Club had offered a purse of £2,000 for a twelve-round glove contest between Frank P. Slavin, the Australian champion, and John L. Sullivan, champion of the world. Slavin has accepted the offer, and it only remains for Sullivan to be of the same mind in order to produce one of the greatest glove contests on record. The Bostonian has been notified by Mr. Richard K. Fox of the offer. Should the pair meet the Australian will carry a lot of English money in bets.

Harrison's Southern Tour.

It is understood, says a Washington dispatch, that the President intends making a journey through the South shortly after the adjournment of Congress. The exact date or the points to be visited have not yet been fully determined upon, but it is probable that the trip will include Richmond, Atlanta, Birmingham, Charleston, Jacksonville, New Orleans, and Galveston, and the return trip by way of the Mississippi Valley cities, and perhaps Nashville and Chattanooga.

An American Schooner Lost.

The crew of the American schooner Amanda C. Parker, which was abandoned January 26, in latitude 38 and longitude 68, has been landed at Liverpool by the steamship Darial, from Philadelphia. The Amanda C. Parker sailed from Ship Island on December 20, for Wilmington, Del. After encountering terrific weather for a month, the crew were compelled to abandon the schooner, which was water-logged and dismasted. Soon after being deserted the vessel foundered.

Suicide by Hanging.

James McCord, a farmer residing at Manson, Ind., committed suicide by hanging. He went to feed his stock and being absent some time a search was made by his family, who found him hanging to a rafter in the barn. McCord was a man 67 years of age, and a few months ago traded his farm for a patent right on a washing machine. The trade proving a disappointment the old man brooded over his troubles until his mind became affected.

Relieving the Destitute.

At a meeting of the Fargo, N. D., board of trade, a communication was presented from the County Commissioners os McIntosh County appealing for aid for the destitute there. It was represented that 150 families in that county are in need of immediate assistance in the way of food to prevent absolute suffering and starvation. The board of trade has arranged for the shipment of a car load of flour at once.

Death of Redpath.

James Redpath, the famous Irish Nationalist; journalist and lecturer, and the Vice-President of the Anti-Poverty Society, who was run down by a Fifth Avenue horse car opposite the postoffice, New York, last week, died at St. Luke's hospital from the effects of his injuries. Mr. Redpath was born in Berwick-on-Tweed, Scotland, in 1833, and came to this country with his parents in 1848.

Eleven Drowned.

The steamer Chiswick, bound from Cardiff to St. Nazaire, with a cargo of coal, struck a sand bank off the Scilly Island and sank. The Captain and ten seamen were drowned. Eight men, who had life belts around them, clung to an overturned lifeboat for seven hours, until they were rescued by boats from a light-ship. A steamer conveyed them to Penzance.

New Hitch in Irish Affairs.

A new hitch has arisen in the Irish negotiations in consequence of Parnell's insistance that Sir William Vernon Harcourt shall be expressly included as acquiescing in the assurances given by the Liberal leaders with regard to a home rule progress.

Burglars' Big Haul.

A burglary at the wholesale house of Joseph A. Bigel & Co., Cincinnati, is reported, where silks and velvets valued at $50,000 were stolen.

$50,000 for Annexation.

It is stated that the Canadian Pacific company has subscribed $50,000 toward the Conservative election fund. Cardinal Tascheraau's organ is out warning the faithful against the reciprocity policy, which it claims is the first step toward annexation.

20,000 Tons of Coal Burned.

Wilkesbarre (Pa.) special: The fire in slope No. 4 of the Nanticoke mine is still raging fiercely. Five million gallons of water have already been pumped in. It is estimated that twenty thousand tons of the best anthracite coal have already been consumed.

An Increase of $57,000,000.

The purchase of silver at the rate of $4,500,000 per month since August 13 has resulted in a total output by the treasury of $28,804,000 of new United States treasury notes authorized by the act of July 14, 1890. Of this amount there were in the treasury on January 31, $3,702,294, thus leaving $25,101,706 outstanding, and being that much increase of the circulating medium. In the same time the amount of gold certificates in circulation, exclusive of those held in the treasury, has increased $31,456,910 to a total of $155,839,449. This increase of nearly $57,000,000 of circulating paper money in a little over five months may naturally be expected to have an influence on prices generally, but especially upon rates of interest, and consequently on the prices of interest and dividend paying securities.

Shattered the Shanty.

A gang of blasters employed on the Air line division of the New York and New Haven Railroad placed a piece of dynamite on the forge in their shanty to thaw out while they ate their dinners. Shortly after there was a tremendous explosion, shattering the shanty and injuring all of the men.

The foreman, Chancellor L. Barbour, of Colchester, will lose the sight of both eyes, is badly cut about the head and may die.

Michael Kelly, of Willimantic, face and head badly injured.

Daniel Sullivan, of Willimantic, slightly injured.

John Sullivan No. 2 (so called), of Willimantic, head badly injured and will probably lose one eye.

John Sullivan No. 3 (so called), of Willimantic, badly burned about the face and shoulders.

An Unknown's Fatal Jump.

An unknown man was killed by being run over by a south-bound freight train at the Maple street crossing, Eaton, Ohio. He was seen to jump from the train and fall back toward the track. His right shoulder and arm were crushed by the wheels, and he died in a few minutes. He and an other man were seen about town, and were both under the influence of liquor. Marshal Jefferson arrested the man who was seen with the deceased a short time before he was killed. He gives his name as Pety Baker, and his home Columbus, Ohio. He claims to know nothing about the dead man further than they met a few days ago. The deceased was about thirty years of age, five feet five inches in height, dark hair, and weight 145 pounds.

Exhorter in Trouble.

David M. Daniels is in jail at Uniontown, Pa., the two chief witnesses against him being the woman who was supposed to be his wife and her 17-year-old daughter. Joseph H. Evans, a well-known resident, is the prosecutor, charging that Daniels has a wife and family in Wales. At the hearing the woman testified that she was the wife of Charles Evans, of Pittsburgh, and that Daniels, who boarded with them, had induced her to elope. Some time ago she discovered that Daniels was having improper relations with her daughter, and the latter confessed to this at the hearing. Daniels was remanded to jail to await trial on three charges. Since being in Uniontown he has been an exhorter at the church services.

Sir Charles Tupper's Arrival.

Sir Charles Tupper, the Canadian High Commissioner, of London, England, arrived at New York, on the steamer Teutonic from Liverpool. The story from Ottawa, printed in the morning papers, touching upon the Canadian government's proposals to the United States on the question of reciprocity, was shown to Sir Charles, and he said:

"I am perfectly familiar with the ground covered by the Governor-General of Canada, in his communication to the Colonial Secretary in England. I was present when that dispatch was received in London by Lord Knutsford. I think the proposition which it contains is of the most practicable and satisfactory character ever submitted for consideration between the two countries."

Fatal Carriage Accident.

A party returning to Shenandoah, Pa., from a funeral met with a thrilling accident while descending the steep mountain road from Frackville. The road was very icy and the driver lost control of the horses. The animals were dashed against the stout fence surrounding a mine-hole at the side of the road, and carriage and the occupants were pitched upon them. The party consisted of Mine Foreman R. C. Church and wife, William Swint, wife and child, and John Sheldon, the driver. The two children were picked up unconscious and are fatally injured. The others will recover. The two horses were found dead. It is miraculous that any of the party escaped alive.

After the Gamblers.

Chicago special: Three constables and five private detectives made a descent upon a Clark street gambling house, with warrants for the arrest of the proprietors on complaint of Herman Miller, who alleged that he had been cheated out of $4,500 in the place. The heavy doors were barricaded, but the officers of the law beat them down with sledge hammers. A free fight which lasted nearly an hour followed; the officers on one side and the gamblers on the other. Several persons on both sides were badly hurt and the constables were finally forced to withdraw their forces without having succeeded in serving their warrants.

Arrested for Smuggling.

Max Gibbs, an Indianapolis jeweler, who arrived in New York on the German Lloyd steamship Ems, was relieved by custom officers of seven fine gold watches, a quaint silver watch, half a dozen pairs of undressed kid gloves, and a half-dozen gold finished fruit knives, the whole valued at $2,000, which he is charged with smuggling. Gibbs said that some time ago he went abroad, and brought back a quantity of watches and jewelry, but the duties consumed the profits. Then his brother-in-law suggested that he bring in the next lot in his pocket, and omit the formality of paying custom duties. He is sorry he tried it.

Attempted Train Robbery.

Passenger train No. 17 was boarded by robbers at Alili, Cal., and, under cover of their pistols, Engineer Thorne and Fireman Radcliffe were forced to pull out to a point about a mile east and halt. The engineer and fireman were then taken back to the express car. The messenger saw what was up and blew out his lights, and instead of opening the door commenced firing at the robbers. Many shots were exchanged, one of which struck Messenger Passwell in the forehead, causing a slight wound, and the other striking the fireman in the side, producing a fatal wound. The robbers were beaten off, and abandoned the undertaking.

Gen. Sherman Taken Very Ill.

New York special: Gen. W. T. Sherman, who has been ill for several days, was suddenly taken worse and is now under the care of two physicians. His daughter has been summoned home from Washington. Gen. Sherman had not been out of the house for several days, and the relapse coming at the venerable age of the old hero when he was quite weak from prostration is regarded as making his condition extremely critical.

Stanley's Generosity.

Major Pond, Henry M. Stanley's manager, announces that Stanley had decided to give all the gifts which he has received from the crowned heads of Europe, and other admirers, to Gen. Booth, of the Salvation Army, for the cause of helping the poor of London. These gifts are valued at nearly $500,000. They consist of pearls of rare value, gold cups, and kindred articles. A number of them were received from Queen Victoria.

Houses Wrecked by Ground Settling.

It is estimated that during the past year damage aggregating $35,000 has been done to buildings in Ashland, Pa., by the settling of the ground. Some have been wrecked so badly that they had to be torn down and rebuilt. The cause is supposed to be the removal of the pillars of coal in the tunnel colliery which runs under the southern end of the town. The mine is said to be almost worked out.

Another Girl Killed by Jack the Ripper.

London special: The dead and horribly mutilated body of a 15-year-old girl was found by employes of the Midland Railroad lying beside the track at Cricklewood. Her face had been cut away, both legs and arms were severed from the body, and her brains were scattered over the rails. Stab wounds inflicted by some sharp instrument were found on the back and head. Complete mystery surrounds the ghastly crime, and the police seem powerless to secure any clew to the perpetrator. The murder has created profound horror and great excitement.

Hundreds Thrown Out of Employment.

Wilkesbarre, (Pa.) special: The Nanticoke Gas feeder in No. 7 lift of No. 4 slope was ignited by the men driving new openings. The feeder rapidly increased until the flames spread along the face of the workings, setting fire to the coal and driving the men to the surface. All escaped. A trough 2,700 feet long was thrown down the slope to carry the water into the mine. A large volume of water is now being poured down the slope. The work of flooding the mine may require months, meantime hundreds of miners will be thrown idle.

Two Men-of-War Sent to Chile.

The Navy Department has ordered the Pensacola, which is stationed at Montevideo, to proceed to Chile, and the Baltimore, at Toulon, to proceed to the same coast. There are now no United States men-of-war in Chilean waters and the recent troubles suggested the propriety of having a naval force there for the protection of American citizens in case of emergency. None of the vessels on the Pacific station were available for this purpose. The Pensacola will have to round Cape Horn and is not expected to reach Chile for three weeks, while the Baltimore will not reach Chile for about four weeks.

The Wages of Sin.

A Vincennes (Ind.) special dispatch says that Sanford H. Waland and Miss Lillie Hampton, who eloped from Harrodsburg, Ky., a few months ago, he leaving a wife and three children and she a husband and three children, were arrested there, where they have been living together as W. S. Brown and wife. After the arrest the woman shot herself and fired at Waland, exclaiming, "Let us die together." Mrs. Hampton cannot live. Waland was not hurt. It is said that Mr. Hampton became insane because his wife deserted him and has wandered away and been lost.

Steamer Lost.

Another steamer is reported sunk almost on the same spot where the ill-fated Viscaya went down a few months ago, longitude 73 degrees 58 minutes, latitude 39 degrees 19 minutes. The vessel is supposed to be the Norwegian fruit steamer Simon Durmois, which left New York for Cuba. As yet nothing has been heard of or from any of the crew. Her cargo, valued at about $22,000, consisted of hardware and provisions. Captain Julian Karnitz was in charge, with a crew of sixteen men. Mantanzas, Cuba, was the vessel's destination.

Mrs. McCabe's Escape.

It is reported that Mrs. McCabe, the murderess of County Judge Stein, of Hildago, Texas, whose sensational statements as to the occurrence that led to that crime have excited the sympathy of the people, has escaped from jail in Matamoras. She had been convicted of murder by the County Court, but had not been sentenced. It is supposed her escape was brought through the connivance of the jail officials.

Ingalls to Lecture for $1,000 a Night.

It is stated that members of Senator Ingalls' family have said that the Senator will return to Kansas soon after the 4th of March and rest for six months. Of the numerous business propositions which he has received he will probably accept the one which best suits his tastes, the lecture proposition. He will receive $1,000 a night and expenses will be paid. He is still to remain in politics.

Lottery Letters Seized.

Postmaster Browning, of Camden, N. J., made a third seizure of lottery letters. The lot numbers between two hundred and three hundred letters addressed to people in Camden. They contained circulars and instructions of a Mexican State lottery, of which W. Basseth is manager, and were mailed in the City of Mexico.

Skinned Alive.

An Italian child, burned in New York, by pulling a pot of boiling water over itself, it is alleged, was treated with some ointment not prescribed by a physician, and was literally skinned alive by it, dying in terrible agony.

Yardmen's Strike.

The yardmen of the New England road went out on strike at Hartford, Conn., because of reduction of wages from $2.50 to $1.25 per day. A blockade of freight in the yards exists as a result.

Indiana's State Printer.

Christ. H. Stein, of Indianapolis, has been appointed State Printer to succeed C. A. Bookwalter, of Fort Wayne.

The Fire Fiend.

The Music Hall block at Piqua, Ohio, was entirely destroyed by fire.

—Ora Gonder lost both eyes by a blast at limestone quarry, near Utica.

—Thomas McGowan seriously injured by falling tree near Martinsville.

—Mrs. James Allen, aged 75, was found dead in bed at Greencastle.

—A child of Thomas Wilson, aged 4, was burned to death at Lexington.

—Winter wheat all over the State looks better than last year, 'tis said.

—Measles and scarlet fever are alarmingly epidemic in Terre Haute.

—Moses Fulwider, aged 80, a pioneer of Boone County, died very suddenly.

—Fruit and wheat about Seymour thought to be killed by zero weather.

—Delaware County Commissioners refuse to pay bill for washing prisoners' bed-clothes.

—Charles Coombs, of Crawfordsville, will be held for the murder of young Walter McClure.

—Mrs. Jack Huffman's family, Greencastle, came near crossing over. All ate poisoned head cheese.

—Hiram Terry Bush, Mishawaka, one time a man of wealth and influence, is dying in county asylum.

—John Newlin, of Plainfield, aged 20, fell forty feet from the top of a derrick and was fatally injured.

—Vincennes Sun thinks newspaper men ought to demand the repeal of Grubbs libel law. Right.

—Shelbyville saloons have got to close at 11 p. m. week days and don't dare to open an inch on Sundays.

—Wicked men broke into Mishawaka Presbyterian Church and cut pulpit chairs and carpet to pieces.

—Grandfather Krug, of Crawfordsville, who was 100 years old on September 20, is lying at the point of death.

—John Goodman, Marco, shot Erastus Frederick with a shot gun, seriously. Said he alienated his wife's affections

—George Casper, Shelbyville, ate twenty-five hard-boiled eggs, shells and all, on a 25-cent wager. Ought to be killed.

—John Pinden, a Washington County farmer, has been crazed by religious zeal, due to the revival at Rush Creek Church.

—George W. Simonds, aged 75 years, fell from a load of hay at Logansport and broke his neck. Death was instantaneous.

—Charles Walton, Shelbyville, has been given ten years in the pen for assaulting and robbing Charles Scheffler, a German farmer.

—H. Bassie, treasurer of Bartholomew County, fell from his stable loft at Columbus and fractured his skull. The injury is not fatal.

—Samuel Cornett, farmer near Washington, was seriously hurt by the discharge of an anvil. He was celebrating a successful fox drive.

—The farmers in the vicinity of Jamestown are being robbed of Chickens by the dozen, and great efforts are being made to trap the thieves.

—George Bennett has been indicted of double murder by the grand jury at Lafayette. Bennett is the man who killed two men last November.

—The Seymour City Council has granted an exclusive street railway franchise for eleven years to B. F. Price, of that city. Work must begin within six months.

—Moses Vadyne was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary for breaking into and robbing a freight car on the Wabash railroad, at North Manchester, last fall.

—David Wright, a colored boy at Jeffersonville, lay in a comatose state for five days, when he coughed up a hunk of cocoanut and proceeded about his business.

—The Montgomery County declamatory contest will take place at Crawfordsville on April 18. The boys will speak in the afternoon and the girls in the evening.

—William Viddie, eccentric Versailles character, spending most of his time in the woods, found a queer stone in a ravine the other day, for which a Cincinnati jeweler offered him $3,000.

—Andrew Kyler died recently at his residence, near South Bend, aged about eighty-five years. He was one of the oldest residents in St. Joseph County, having lived in the county sixty years.

—While a number of young men were racing their horses on the way home from church, at Port Isabel, they collided with a carriage. Mrs. John Langston was thrown out and dangerously hurt. John Day was fatally injured and others were badly bruised.

—George Hoard of Lexington, Scott County, is in deep trouble. He called on his sweetheart, Mrs. John Fitch, to marry her. She had only been divorced a few weeks, and on that account her father, Mr. Robbins, objected. He kicked Hoard out of the house and locked his daughter up, while a son pursued the loving swain with a horse pistol. Hoard escaped being shot and proposes to have the males of the Robbins family indicted. Mrs. Fitch, still under lock and key, swears she will marry Hoard in spite of her father and brother.

—Mrs. Jacob Werner, farmer's wife near Jeffersonville, took the good old family rifle and shot a vicious tramp.

—Workmen digging a well near Edinburg, struck a poplar log at a depth of twenty-four feet, two feet in diameter.

—The Lebanon Patriot, a Republican newspaper of Boone County, changed hands recently, S. J. Thompson & Son retiring and Albion Smith, of Richmond, assuming control.

—The oldest woman in the vicinity of French Lick Springs is Mrs. Mary Flick, who was born in 1778. She weighs 200 pounds and is entirely blind. Her youngest son is aged 67.

—The home of G. W. Acord, at Sanford, was destroyed by an incendiary. Some time ago Acord received a threatening letter, signed, "A White Cap," and mailed from Indianapolis.

—The bondsmen for ex-Treasurer J. J. Field, of Orange County, whose account with said county was $12,701 short, were released by the gentleman and his wife paying the amount in cool cash.

—John B. Floyd, employed in the saw mill of Bevins & Strand, at Boonville, met with a horrible death by falling against a rip-saw. He was simply sliced in two from head to foot.

—Anna Maher, aged 5 years, of Crawfordsville, was playing near the fire and her clothing caught fire. Her clothes were burned off, and she was seriously burned before the flames were extinguished.

—Tramps broke into a freight car on the Monon road at Greencastle and stole a box of raisins. They were found soon afterwards in the sand-house near the depot, where they had taken quarters for the night. The stolen fruit had been devoured. The thieves, nine in all, were held for trial at the ensuing term of court.

—Mary, the 7-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard McKinney, was so badly burned at her home, near Livonia, Washington County, that she died a few hours after. The children of the family had been setting brush-heaps near the house on fire, and by some means the flames were communicated to the clothing of the little one.

—The will of the late Mrs. Abbie Longee, of LaPorte, was probated. Among the bequests was one of $11,000 to the Orphans' Home, a public charity located at Mishawaka, Ind. The institution owns no building of its own, and this money will be used to erect one, and an endeavor will be made to change the location to LaPorte.

—A clever forger has swindled a half dozen business houses of Terre Haute, out of about $60 each. He sent a boy in the evening with a check made payable to Postmaster Greiner and indorsed by Greiner with a note signed by Greiner, all forgeries, asking the firm to cash it, as the postoffice had been drained of cash by paying money orders.

—At Nebraska, a little town on the O. & M., fire broke out in the store of Mrs. Allen. While about fifty people were trying to save the stock, ten barrels of oil and 250 pounds of gunpowder exploded, wrecking the building and bruising several people with flying debris. The burning oil set fire to the residence of Mrs. Elliot, and it also was destroyed. The total loss was $12,000.

—The wall on one side of one of the Diamond Match Company's large buildings at Wabash, fell outward without a moment's warning, leaving a hole thirty-eight feet long and two stories high. Several thousand pounds of paper pulp was ruined. No lives were lost, but several people very narrowly escaped. The fall was probably caused by the uneven settling of the foundation.

—As Mrs. R. C. Smith, of Crawfordsville, was carrying out a pan of hot ashes, her apron caught fire, and it was only with difficulty that she escaped as well as she did. As it was, her dress was burned off, her hair badly scorched, her eyebrows burned and her face blistered. She rolled upon the floor and thus helped to put out the flames, when her mother-in-law came to her assistance.

—The village of Lena, Park County, a small station on the Big Four road, was thrown into great excitement a night or two since by the fate that befell an aged citizen named Robert Bond. His dwelling caught fire shortly after midnight, and before Mr. Bond could be rescued his body was burned to a crisp. He was about 85 years of age. The fire is said to have been the result of his own carelessness.

—An attempt at suicide occurred at Knightstown. Frank Ball, a young married man, repaired to a drug store, purchased 25 cents worth of morphine and took the lot. On his way home again he changed his mind and started for a doctor. Dr. Barnett relieved him of all the superfluous matter he had laid up for the last week or so. Family trouble is thought to have been the cause.

—There is a widow living at Darlington, Montgomery County, who has been the wife of four soldiers, who are all dead, and she has drawn a pension as being the widow of each husband. As soon as she would marry, of course, her pension would cease, but she did not marry a man who was not a soldier, so when he died she would begin to draw another pension as the wife of the last one to die.

—Many of the farmers of Montgomery county have entered into the chicken-raising business on a large scale, and are selling from 600 to 1,000 chickens every year. They says that it pays them better than raising cattle for the market.

—Jennie Ray escaped from the Dearborn County Asylum and fell into the hands of a gang of tramps, who maltreated her shamefully and left her more dead than alive on a straw-pile. Here she lay three days before she was discovered.

—A terrible accident occurred at the New Albany rail-mill recenty. William M. Young was assisting in repairing the battery smoke-stack of the works, being suspended by a block and tackle in the interior of the stack, holding an iron mall to clinch the rivets that were being driven from the outside to fasten a patch upon the stack. By some unknown means the tackle became unhitched, precipitating Mr. Young thirty-five feet to the bottom of the stack. In his descent he encountered a heavy damper set edgewise, breaking his neck and also his back just below the shoulders.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

The Senate, Feb. 2, passed a bill fixing a graded system of penalties for keeping gaming houses. The penalty for the first conviction is from $10 to $500 fine; for the second conviction, $25 to $1,000 fine, with imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, optional with the Court. The third and all subsequent convictions, $50 to $1,000 fine and imprisonment for from thirty days to six months. The Senate also passed a bill prohibiting the use of artificial means to force natural gas from the wells or through pipe lines. This is meant to prevent the piping of gas to Chicago. Three important measures were introduced in the House. The first provides for the establishment of a State Board of Fire Insurance, composed of the Auditor, Secretary, and Attorney General. The duty of the commission is to equalize the cost of insurance and adjust losses. The second requires candidates before conventions to file with County Clerks sworn itemized statements of campaign expenses. The third was a resolution appointing a committee to correspond with the Legislatures of other States to agree upon a lower legal tax rate for all.

In the Senate, February 3, the bill requiring the election of three school trustees, one of whom shall be a woman, was indefinitely postponed after a long discussion. Bill abolishing the State Board of Agriculture and creating an agricultural and industrial board came up on the third reading, and its further consideration was postponed until morning. The House passed the following bills: For the protection of the sorghum industry by preventing adulteration; compelling dealers in cigarettes to pay an annual license of $200 and to make affidavit that all cigarettes sold by them are made of pure tobacco; amending the act relative to public offenses and their punishment, by bringing within the provisions of the section concerning incest children under the age of 16 years, and making sisters competent to testify against their brothers in such cases; requiring officers of reformatory, charitable and benevolent institutions to purchase native live stock for food consumption at such institutions; preventing the adulteration of candy; making it unlawful for officers of State institutions to contract with themselves or other officials of their or other institutions for the purchase or sale, or to appropriate to their own use any of the rights, privileges, payments, slops, offal or immunities of any of said institutions.

The following bills were passed by the Senate, February 4: An act defining arson and prescribing the penalties therefor; to authorize cities and towns to lay out parks and public grounds; prescribing the method of assessing real estate in towns of less than two thousand population to defray the cost of street improvements; requiring corporations of other States acquiring property or doing business in Indiana to file a copy of their charter with the County Recorder for record; legalizing the incorporation and construction of the Lafayette Union Railroad and aid voted to it. The following bills were passed by the House: Appropriating $8,032.31 to pay the Warren-Scharf Asphalt Paving Company for Paving Mississippi street, on the west side of the State-house; providing that Deputy County Surveyors shall have the same powers in certain cases as their chiefs. [Under the present law the construction of ditches must stop during the illness of County Surveyors, because of the inability of the deputies, under the statute, to act for the former.]

The only measure that got through the Senate, February 5, on its way to the statute books was Senator Shockney's bill looking to the breaking of pools and trusts. Having been absent several days on account of sickness, the Senate asked unanimous consent to consider the measure, which was given, and it was read the third time by sections. The main provisions are that all trusts, pools and combinations tending to prevent full and free competition in the production, manufacture or sale of any article produced in any State or country, that seek to regulate the production of price of any commodity, or tend in any way to create a monopoly, are declared to be conspiracies to defraud the public, unlawful, against public policy and void. Any person entering into such combination as principal, stockholder or agent is made guilty of conspiracy to defraud, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000. It is provided that if any corporation or any officer or stockholder, as such, becomes a member of any pool or trust, such corporation shall forfeit its charter. It is further provided that any person or corporation damaged by any pool or trust may bring suit and recover twice the amount of the damage sustained.

The following bills were passed by the House: Reducing the charge for transcribing short-hand notes in criminal cases from ten cents to 6 cents per one hundred words, and providing that, where a litigant is unable to pay for this service the court may, in its discretion, direct the work to be done, the county to bear the expense; providing for the change of venue in all civil actions; for the better protection of miners, regulating the weighing of coal, and providing for uniform screens; to prevent persons not so entitled from wearing badges of the Grand Army, Loyal Legion, Union Veterans and Sons of Veterans, and imposing a fine of not more than $20 for such offense.

There was such a slight attendance of both houses, February 6, that no business of importance was transacted.

He Eats Baby Food Now.

Any able-bodied gentleman in need of $5 and a reputation for bravery will find it to his advantage to travel to Hellertown, Lehigh County, Pa. In that classic hamlet there dwells a certain citizen who numbers among his earthly possessions a chestnut filly from Kentucky, a brother who lives in wicked gotham and a valuable set of false teeth imported from Paris. One day, when the mettlesome filly was feeling unusually jolly, the owner of the teeth took his brother for a drive behind the trotter. Out on the "pike," three miles from Hellertown Court-House, there is a "road spring." It was here that the Hellertown man stopped the filly, and while his brother drank of the bubbling waters he removed his "Paris" teeth and laid them on the grass. Just as he was on the point of taking a drink himself the filly started up the "pike" at two-minute clip. Then, before the gentlemen could understand what it all meant, a huge copper-colored snake glided up, and, to the dismay of the select audience, calmly swallowed the "teeth." Just what the snake did after insulting his digestive organs the gentlemen are not prepared to say, as they made a hurried exit from the vicinity and followed the filly back to town. In proof that the "snake" story is true the disconsolate owner of the teeth has offered $5 for the return of the same, and he now eats baby food.

Nail Furrows.

Nearly twenty years ago Dr. Wilks directed attention to the curious fact that a transverse furrow always appears on the nails after a serious illness. Medical men ignored what they called the visionary opinions of Mr. Wilks, giving the matter but little attention in their medical work. Recently a new interest in the subject has been revived and pathological societies have begun an investigation. One remarkable case shows nail furrows caused by three days' sea-sickness.

The Saffron Industry.

Spain produces annually from 180,000 to 225,000 pounds of saffron, and in exceptional years the product reaches as high as 310,000 pounds. Pithiviers, France, was formerly the center of a great saffron industry, the product sometimes being 340,000 pounds in a year. But a great frost in 1879 cut down the crop, and Spain now controls the market. The saffron plant produces for three, and sometimes four years without renewal. Valentia is the great center of the export trade in saffron. Saffron is largely adulterated before it is put on the market.

"WHAT AN ASS AM I!"

The ass thought himself as fine looking as his neighbor, the horse, until he, one day, saw himself in the looking-glass, when he said "What an ass am I!"

Are there not scores of people who cannot see themselves as others see them? They have bad blood, pimples, blotches, eruptions, and other kindred disfigurements. All these annoying things could be entirely eradicated, and the skin restored to "lily whiteness," if that world-famed remedy, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, were given a fair trial.

It cures all humors, from the ordinary blotch, pimple or eruption to the worst scrofula, or the most inveterate blood-taints, no matter what their nature, or whether they be inherited or acquired. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is the only blood-purifier guaranteed to do just what it is recommended to, or money refunded.

PRICKLY ASH BITTERS

One of the most important organs of the human body is the LIVER. When it fails to properly perform its functions the entire system becomes deranged. The BRAIN, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS, all refuse to perform their work. DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, RHEUMATISM, KIDNEY DISEASE, etc., are the results, unless something is done to assist Nature in throwing off the impurities caused by the inaction of a TORPID LIVER. This assistance so necessary will be found in

Prickly Ash Bitters!

It acts directly on the LIVER, STOMACH and KIDNEYS, and by its mild and cathartic effect and general tonic qualities restores these organs to a sound, healthy condition, and cures all diseases arising from these causes. It PURIFIES THE BLOOD, tones up the system, and restores perfect health. If your druggist does not keep it ask him to order it for you. Send 2c stamp for copy of "THE HORSE TRAINER," published by us.

A LOVER'S EVENING PRAYER.

BY CHARLES C. HAHN.

O, God! I love her, keep her safe,
Although it be Thine all-wise will
That I may never see her more—
Yet keep her safe I pray Thee still.

O, shield her from all evil wiles
And keep her pure in heart within;
For me she may not keep her love,
But keep her from all harm and sin.

Let angels walk with her through day,
Nor leave her with the sun's last gleams;
Let angels watch around her bed
And give her peace and angel dreams.

BY ABBIE C. M'KEEVER.

If I were an artist I would paint
A face so fair, a face so true,
With a hidden something like a saint—
And that face should picture you.

If I were an artist I would know
Just where the strongest light should touch
To bring out all the wonderful glow
In the one face I love so much.

If I were an artist I would give
A hungry soul a crust to eat,
In the long years that I may live
In which, my love, we may not meet.

If I were an artist I would place
Always above my mantel-tree
Thine own sweet face; but it cannot be—
Only my dreams may picture thee.

WILLIAMSBURG, Ohio.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XX.

SIR REGINALD'S RAGE.

The next morning Ethel attempted to rise, as usual, but found herself so ill with a sick headache that the attempt was vain. Every time she lifted her head from her pillow it throbbed wildly, while a blind dizziness came over her to such an extent that she felt it were better to keep still for a while, until it passed away.

She had suffered before in her life from the same cause, and she knew it had been brought about by intense excitement.

She knew also that it would take several hours to restore her to her usual vigor.

While certain of this, the most anxious feelings were aroused at her unhappy position, as regarded Sir Reginald Glendenning's sacred trust.

That the baronet should be at once informed of his dreadful loss, she well knew, in order that steps might be taken for the recovery of the missing treasure.

But with this dreadful pain, how should she reach him?

Finally she decided that the only way before her was to lie still until she was able to rise.

At nine o'clock a servant came to her room, and she sent an excuse to the family for her non-appearance.

About ten a message came from Sir Reginald asking how soon she could come to him.

She returned for answer that her head was still in such pain that she feared not until afternoon.

About five Dr. Elfenstein called to see his patient, and his lordship at once requested him to look after his secretary, saying that she was not able to come to him, while he was most anxious to see her.

Mrs. Fredon was then dispatched to Miss Nevergail's room to prepare her for a visit from the Doctor.

As the young man entered he was really startled to see how wan and pale the excitement of the night before and a few hours' illness had made her.

She had made several attempts to rise, and had succeeded in dressing herself, but the exertion had overcome her, and once more she had been obliged to recline upon the bed, while her large dark eyes and black dress made her cheeks seem almost like snow.

"Oh, Doctor!" she sighed, as he advanced and took her hand in his. "Can you give me something to stop this headache, so that I can go to Sir Reginald? He has wanted me all day, and has sent for me several times, and I must see him, but I cannot seem to get there."

"Are you subject to such headaches?"

"I have had them a number of times."

"You have done right to keep still. I will give you a remedy that I think will cause you relief in an hour's time. Until then you should try to sleep."

Preparing a liquid, he carefully held the tumbler to her lips, saw her drink it, then throwing a light shawl over her, left, saying as he did so:

"If you sleep now, I am almost certain you can visit his lordship in the length of time I mentioned."

It seemed that the medicine and his calm, kind words did soothe her, for at once she fell into the restful sleep so much needed.

The nap proved quite a long one, and it was seven o'clock in the evening before she crept through the hall, and, with a trembling frame but head greatly relieved, entered Sir Reginald's presence.

At once she saw that her illness had discomposed him, and that he was unusually irritable and nervous.

"I am sorry I could not come to you as usual," she began, but he interrupted her by saying, crossly:

"Oh, yes; I dare say. Stop all apologies, and while we are alone tell me if you obeyed my orders last night."

"I did," faltered the poor girl.

"Did the thing work well?" asked he, eagerly.

"It did. I had no trouble in the Tower at all; but, oh, Sir Reginald, something terrible has happened!"

"What?" exclaimed the sick man, starting up in so sudden a manner that it caused him to fall back with a groan, although he kept a firm grip of the arm he had seized in his excitement, regardless of the fact that his tight grasp caused her to turn pale with pain.

"I dread telling you; but just as I left the Tower to push back the panels a frightful noise of a heavy fall came, then a large monster darted out, dashed the candle from my hand, and, with a howl, disappeared."

"My God! Girl, girl!" yelled the infuriated man before her, his face turning purple with rage, "what is this you tell me? Gone! Escaped! Speak!" added he, roughly shaking her by the arm. "Tell me it is a lie—a lie that you said just now!"

"No, Sir Reginald," returned the pallid Ethel; "it is the truth. Whatever you had there got out last night, and ran off through the ruins!"

"You jade! you hussy! What did you do wrong that made this happen? Answer, or I will tear you to pieces!"

"Release my arm, sir. You are cruel in your rage; you hurt me!"

"Speak, then. How did he get out of his prison?"

With a faltering voice, the frightened girl, while writhing in his grasp, murmured:

"I dropped the knife on the shelves a few nights before, and forgot it. It whirled around, and I knew by the cry he gave that he had it."

"Idiot! fool!" returned the enraged being before her, as he gave her arm such a fearful wrench that it dislocated the elbow. "Out of my sight! out of my house this instant! You have ruined me with your cursed carelessness! Not another night shall you sleep under this roof!"

Once again he raised his arm—this time to strike. But fortunately, with a moan of pain at the injury she had already sustained, she had darted back, and so the blow descended on empty air.

Without another look at the man before her the poor young girl crept from his presence, and dragging herself back to her room, fastened herself in, while she sought to prepare for her departure.

With her arm hanging motionless by her side, and nearly wild with pain, she opened her trunks and thrusting her valuables inside as well as she could, with one hand, she locked them, and dropped the key into her pocket.

Fearing, she scarcely knew what, she put the package of papers her aunt had given her, with her purse also, in her pocket, that she might be certain of their safety. Then hastily putting comb, brushes, and night apparel in a hand-sachel, she paused to rest.

Advancing to her window, she found that a heavy rain was still falling, and that darkness was even then over the earth.

Throwing her waterproof over her shoulders, with its hood drawn over her hat, she opened her door and glided through the hall, down the stairs, and out of the front entrance, fortunately without being seen by any of the family.

As she had passed the sick man's room, she knew by the sound of many excited voices within that they had gone to his assistance, and she judged he must have injured his hip by his passionate frenzy.

While she pitied the man, she feared him, and never breathed freely until outside the door.

Then with a hurried step she passed down the ramble.

CHAPTER XXI.

ETHEL'S FLIGHT.

The darkness, as I have said, had come on early, in consequence of the dense clouds and falling rain.

It was after eight when Ethel left the Hall, and then it was so dark under the shading trees that she could not see a step before her.

Unaccustomed to be abroad alone at so late an hour, her heart beat fast and tears coursed over her white cheeks, brought there by her fears as well as the acute pain in her arm.

Once away from the house and beyond the reach of Sir Reginald's wrath, she paused to consider whither she should go, and what she should do.

As she paused one thing seemed plain. She could do nothing until a physician attended to her wounded arm.

In order to have this accomplished it was evident that she must seek Dr. Elfenstein at his home.

She shrank from doing this.

Remembrances of their mutual experiences of the evening before caused her heart to flutter at the very thought.

He might think it bold and unmaidenly thus to push herself into his presence.

Still it could not be helped. Her arm could not be raised, and on that arm she depended now for her daily bread.

Bitterly she upbraided herself for her strange neglect in reference to that knife.

Oh, that she had been more careful, and less easily unnerved.

She ought to have expected movements inside the room, where a wild animal was kept, and therefore counted it silly to have been so overcome as to forget her duty at the first sound she had heard.

Regrets, however, were useless; she must hurry on.

How dark it was, and how difficult to keep in the path!

The rain beat upon her in torrents, and it seemed a weary way before she passed the porter's lodge.

Once in the road beyond, she could see lights in windows of dwelling houses far down the road.

The first of them she knew was where Dr. Elfenstein lived, and hope revived once more, and she pressed on, thinking soon to be there.

But the road seemed very rough. Great ruts had been made in the earth, softened by the long rain, and these caused her to trip and fall twice.

Both times it had jarred her arm, and drawn forth tears of anguish.

Wiping them away, she struggled to her feet and persevered.

At last the gate was reached and opened with difficulty; then again a dizzy feeling came over her, and just as her feet stepped on the porch she fell forward in a long, death-like swoon.

Dr. Elfenstein had gone out into the country, after his call at the baronet's, to visit a rather critical case, and did not return until quite late. As he passed the porter's lodge one of the servants belonging to the Hall stepped out, and hailing him, bade him to drive there at once, as his master was in terrible distress.

Without waiting for a second bidding he turned into the grounds and had just entered Sir Reginald's room when Ethel glided past it in her flight from the house.

It was with surprise and intense wonder that the physician saw the change a few hours had wrought in his patient.

That something of a startling character had produced the effects now manifested was perfectly apparent, and that the good work of the past few weeks had been entirely destroyed in some fit of passion was too obvious to be denied.

At once he saw that Sir Reginald was in a worse condition than he had found him in the first visit he had made after the fall.

"What has done this?" he asked of Lady Constance. "What excitement has he undergone since I left him doing well at 4 this afternoon?"

"No one knows. Miss Nevergail came to his room about 7. We then heard him speaking in a furiously angry way, and after awhile his bell rang a loud peal for assistance. On reaching him, he was alone, suffering as you see him now."

"Where was Miss Nevergail.

"She must have returned to her room. She has been sick all day," was the reply.

"Yes; I know," returned the Doctor.

Not until the clock struck ten could Dr. Elfenstein leave the Hall, and then he was anticipating for the baronet a sleepless night.

He himself felt tired, and greatly unnerved. The strange events of the night before could hardly yet be thought of calmly. All day he had deeply regretted no following up and learning the cause of their mutual flight; but whenever he had thought of it, Ethel's pleading tones and shuddering form had pleaded an eloquent excuse.

How pleasant was the remembrance of her dependence on him in those terrible moments!

Once or twice he found himself longing to be thus able to protect her all the remainder of his life; but then he had been obliged to thrust the yearning from his heart, and remember that his stern duty lay in a rougher channel, and that love could not be his guide, at least for years to come.

So thinking, he had reached his home, given his horse to the man in waiting, and then turned to enter his door,

But what was this he saw lying in a heap upon the porch?

Stooping to discover if it might not be a large, strange dog, his fingers came in contact with a human hand, and from its small size he knew it belonged to child or woman.

Throwing open the door with his latch-key, the light from the hall revealed Ethel Nevergail's pale, unconscious face to his astonished gaze.

"Ethel here senseless! Oh, my darling, my darling!" he murmured, as he lifted her in his arms and bore her to the parlor sofa. "What can this mean?"

Placing her there, he ran to the foot of the stairs and called Mrs. Clum to his assistance.

This person, fortunately, sat reading in her own room, waiting his return, that she might give him some refreshments after his long detention, knowing that he had eaten nothing since noon; therefore she was immediately by his side, and after hearing him state where he had found the poor young girl, proceeded to unbutton and remove the wet waterproof, while Earle brought camphor and other remedies, and then at once devoted himself to her recovery.

With joy, at last, they saw her eyes open; but the cry of pain that followed filled both with surprise.

"My arm! my arm!" she cried. "You hurt my arm."

Seeing that something more serious was the matter than a simple faint, Dr. Elfenstein released the hand he held, as it seemed to pain her, asking, as he did so, "if she had injured herself anywhere?"

"I cannot stir my hand, or arm, and fear it is broken," she moaned in reply. "I came here to show it to you."

"Then it was hurt before you left the Hall?" returned the Doctor, passing his hand over the useless member, in order to see the nature of the injury.

She bowed her head, speaking no word in reply.

"Is it broken, Doctor?" finally she managed to ask.

"Not broken, but dislocated at the elbow. In order to replace it, I fear I must cause you pain. It will be impossible for you to go out again in this storm, therefore Mrs. Clum, my housekeeper, must prepare you a room, and you will remain here to-night. After she has made you comfortable in your bed I must replace the bones, and then you must keep perfectly quiet, or, after all this excitement, you will be thrown into a fever."

Giving Mrs. Clum several instructions, he saw her leave the room to prepare one for poor Ethel's reception; then, and not until then, he bent over the sofa where she lay, and asked her in a low voice:

"Why did you not tell me this instead of coming out in the storm, when I have been at the Hall since eight this evening?"

"I did not know you were there, and could not have seen you if I had known it. Sir Reginald flew into a furious passion as soon as he saw me to-day, and bade me instantly leave his house. As my arm was hurt, I was obliged to come to you."

"Miss Nevergail, how was your arm dislocated? And what means the mark of those fingers which I see upon the surface?"

"Do not ask, Doctor, for I cannot tell you."

"Well, if you cannot tell me that, why did Sir Reginald bid you leave his house?"

"I cannot tell you!" was still her only reply.

"Was it for any willful fault you had committed?"

"No; oh, no! I had met with an accident the nature of which I cannot explain. In short, I had, without intending it, neglected a duty he had charged me with on the day of my fright by the railroad. My nervousness then caused me to forget something. He had just discovered it, and flew in a rage."

"Then the brute seized your arm and gave it this wrench! You need not tell me, child; I know it by instinct. It is well I was not there, for one reason."

"Why?"

"I should have struck him as he lay helpless in bed. I could not have helped it. But you are safe now; he shall never touch you again."

"No; for I shall never go back. But where shall I go? What shall I do now?" she sighed, in reply.

"Stay here, of course, until you are well; then a place will be provided, never fear. Promise me one thing now, which is, not to worry about the future. Leave everything of that nature for time and Providence to make plain, and try to compose yourself in order to recover the sooner. Will you do this?

He took her well hand kindly, almost tenderly, as he spoke; and, meeting his anxious, beseeching gaze bent upon her, she blushed faintly and gave the required promise.

Kansas Philosophy.

The truth never grows by repetition as is the case with a lie.

If people could have their wishes granted, more people would be sent to the other world than would be called back.

It is a wonder a man will run the risk of being known as a liar for the possible chance of being benefited by a lie.

The meanest gossip on earth is the man who conceals his desire to tell a thing behind what he calls a good motive.

There are a thousand reasons why you should not steal, but it is only necessary to mention the one about punishment.

The source of all trouble lies in the fact that a man's repentance for one sin never never lasts until the time of his next temptation.

The Lord loveth whom he chasteneth; but a great many sinners mistake the result of their own sins for the chastening of the Lord.

If Methuselah could give his testimony, it would probably be to the effect that his life was too short to live down the follies of his youth.

When men are as good as their obituaries, and women are as good as the men think they are, the recording angel in heaven can take his long needed vacation.

If a woman is bad, she says a man was the cause of it; if a man is good, he says a woman was the cause of his being good; that is the difference in the way they regard each other.

If it came to a question as to who could walk the faster, a man or a woman, it would be safe to start a hungry man after his dinner, and a woman after a bargain, and then bet money on the woman.—Atchison Globe.

IN every teaspoonful of human blood there are about 15,000,000,000 red corpuscles, but only 30,000,000 white ones. The blood of clams, lobsters and nearly all other invertebrates contains no red cells, but only the white.

"I think I may have to give up the cottage unless you put on a fire escape."

"A fire escape! Why, ma'am, of what use would such a thing be up there?"

"To save our lives, of course. Suppose a fire should start in the night when we were asleep?"

"Well?"

"There is no fire escape."

"But couldn't you open the front or side door and walk out?"

"The doors?"

"Yes; or if cut off from them there are windows within four feet of the ground."

"I see—I see," she stammered. "Yes. I think we could. I never thought of it before, but it looks reasonable and I'll risk it. Good day."—Detroit Free Press.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein James O. Blake is plaintiff and William Sprankle, Mary Sprankle, his wife, John [illegible] Baxter Anna Sprankle, Sarah Myers, August C Trentman, Henry J. [illegible] Robert [illegible] Lane, Charles W Bell and James F. Cummings are defendants requiring me to make the sum of seventeen hundred fifty-three dollars, seventy cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at Public Sale, to the highest bidder, on Saturday, February 28, 1891.

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the Court House in Auburn DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to-wit:

The west half (½) of the northeast quarter (¼) of section twenty [illegible] township thirtyfive (35) north, of range thirteen (13) east, and also twenty-one and fifteen one hundredths acres off the east end of the north half (½) of the northwest quarter (¼) of said section, described as follows, to-wit:

Making the northeast corner fifty-eight rods west of the northeast corner of said lot, thence east to said northeast corner of said lot, thence south to the southeast corner of said lot, thence west forty-five rods, thence north twenty-eight rods in a straight line to the place of beginning. Situated in DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

PHIL. PLAIM,
Sheriff of DeKalb county, Indiana.

OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

What he Sees, Hears and Thinks About.

In going among the enterprising business men, of this city, it was learned that Harter & Co., have secured the services of Mr. S. J. Hallauer, of Columbia City, as salesman. Mr. H., is a comparatively young man with marked ability, and his business qualifications place him in demand. He speaks the German language fluently, and for this fact alone, figures conspicuously among the the large corps of clerks at this popular estalishment.

* * *

The grocery store of H. J. Mossey, is one that presents a scene of business activity. Mr M., is a genial, even-tempered sort of a gentleman, who carries a good stock of goods in his line and is always found ready to accommodate his many customers. As a successor to John Krueger, he has by earnestness and zeal, kept the business up the standard of its former popularity, and it is believed a dollar will go as far at this establishment as at any other in town.

* * *

Story & Henry, meat merchants, on South Main street, are stilll at the front with a line of meats that will satisfy the wants of our people. They are gentlemen of good principle and the public attention is thus called to their place of business

* * *

The famous Lunch Counter, owned by Cora Shugers, should not be passed by unnoticed. At this room is found a very complete line of tobacco, cigars, confectionary, California fruits, canned goods and last, but not least, a first-class lunch counter, where everything in that line can be had at reasonable rates. Mr. S, was formerly a common, every-day farmer until he went into this business. Since his venture in this direction, success has crowned his efforts. He started in partnership with his brother George, but lately has run the institution on his own reponsibility. He now has a lunch room second to none in the city.

The Reading Room sends a greeting to the young people of this vicinity as follows:

Young folks, come to the READING ROOM,
And learn of authors noble and grand,
Who started 'mid youthful bloom,
To grasp knowledge as golden grains of sand.

Bear in mind you've but one life to live,
Through infancy, youth, manhood, and old age,
And it is fitting that you should give,
Intellectual luster to your history's every page

There's room enough for all to read,
The books found on our shelves.
We can supply the readers' every need,
And ask all to come and help themselves.

Our literature is of ancient and modern style,
Tinctured with common lore,
And the papers and magazines will, make you smile—
Once read, you'll wish for more.

There's naught of the repulsive kind,
To defile the mind or corrupt the heart,
But all to virtue are consigned.
And nothing 'gainst true manhood impart.

We extend to all our heartiest greeting,
Giving our great right hand,
Hoping for a pleasant meeting,
Along with our little studious band.

The elegantly fitted up Tonsorial Parlor, of McDowell Bros., on West Eighth street, is quite an extensive business concern. Both are gentlemen of good character, and are artists in their profession, who fully understand the value of square dealing and honest work. Their card is to be seen in the professional column.

As the itinerant got off the train at the Junction, the other day, his attention was somewhat drawn to the singularly attractive appearance of the Hotel de Brunswick. This institution has a prominent location, and is conducted by Mr. George Oberholtzer, who is prepared to meet the demands of a traveling public. He is a gentleman of unquestioned character and business aptitude, and all who patronize this popular house, will receive the benefit of facilities such as are the most likely to promote the comfort and convenience of guests. Mr. O. has been unfortunate in business in the past, and richly deserves all the success and prosperity that may come to him in years which are to follow.

I. H. Nill, the South Side grocer, is still on the green shores of time, and is in a situation to supply the trade with anything found in a first-class grocery He is a gentleman, who fully understands every detail of his business, and by establishing a store here he has met and supplied a long-felt want in the south part of town, and the large patronage he enjoys speaks in terms stronger than common adjectives, of the success he has made, while a citizen of our little city. He has in his employ Mr. Gilliland, a veteran in the business, whose venerable countenance is familiar to almost every boy and girl in town. Country people are gratified in the knowledge that their produce finds a ready market before reaching the central thoroughfares, at prices that justify them in stopping there.

Mr. T. A. Fretz, son of Samuel Fretz, has accepted a position in the moulding department of the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works. He is an intelligent, enterprising and moral young man, and this venture is one that will test his skill for the "artistic," which to say the least, is clearly demonstrated by many pieces of drawing executed by him while yet in school. He assumes the responsibility of this profession with an enviable degree of natural ability, and it is hoped he will some day figure as a master of his chosen profession.

The big crowd in town Saturday spoke favorably of a good business being done. Farmers, their wives, children and country folks generally, were as thick on the streets and in the stores, as black birds in berry-pickin' time. The farmer is a welcome guest among us, with the sign of prosperity plainly visible about them. Their success in life is equivalent to the success of business men of all classes. The fact is, when no corn, wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, hay, fodder, etc., are raised by the horny-handed tillers of the soil, it can be scheduled as a certainty, that all kinds of business will assume a gloomy aspect.

There are but few people in the town of Auburn, who do not know Charley Rickard. He was thrust out into the world to wrestle with its frigid vicissitudes, at an early age, and it must be said in justice to himself, that he, though but a mere child, put his shoulder manfully to the wheel and after a long and severe struggle with disease and adverse fortune, he has at won the victory. He has been interested in various business enterprises since he came to the town with but fair success in any of them. Now, however, he is engaged in an enterprise that is making him some money The people here have been accustomed to carrying their oil cans up town to have them filled. That duty is dispensed with. Charley has a wagon fixed for the purpose, and drives right to the houses and fills the empty cans. In this way nearly a barrel of oil is disposed of each day. Mr Rickard is a worthy young man and we trust that fortune will strew her richest laurels upon his energies.

Samuel Fretz now handles the grip and cracks the jokes of a man on the road drumming up a demand for the patent mill feed that is being manufactured by the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works, and on which they are making a special run just now. Mr. F., is a gentleman well known in DeKalb county, and especially in Auburn, and his experience as a salesman will doubtless be conducive to his success as a representative of this great manufacturing institution.

* * *

How many, oh, how many, poor systems are at this time vainly wrestling with that terrible monster from across the sea, whose "grippe" upon their frailty is dragging them down to a condition of helpless imbecility or the grave. The breath is shortened, chest contracted, voice weakened and the whole physical make-up is debilitated through its destructive influence, and the human family presents a scene whose back-ground, fore-ground, high and low lights are fit subjects for consumption. This is a sad picture certainly, but unto human beings a hope is given. The Giant Oxien Co., have a remedy that they guarantee to cure la grippe and restore the system to its former healthy condition. We have never tried this remedy, but we believe its merits are worth testing.

* * *

Now that the time appointed for the winter season nears its close, every heart is gladdened with the hope of balmy air and spring flowers. It is then, that poor, mortal man can lay aside his heavy mantle that protects his fragile form from the chilling frosts and cutting winds, to don a garb of lighter hue and thinner texture, that bespeaks warmer days when birds sing in the trees, herds low in green pastures, frogs croak in the pond and man mops his brow with a red bandana. But don't get excited! That season will not be here for several months yet, and in the meantime we must face the "grippe" and the stern realities of the present.

* * *

The woods this side of the Junction, are being reduced somewhat to long ranks of stove wood. Messrs. Wes. Showers and John Fretz, two of Auburn's veteran wood cutters, have been felling trees and destroying their magnificence in a way that indicates ability for some time, and it is possible that a better view of the Junction can be had from this point. Messrs. Ensley & Stafford are to be congratulated for their enterprise.

There is at present, considerable discussion among scientists and educators in regard to memory culture. For twenty years there have been numberless theories advanced by men who imagined they had discovered a balm for human inefficiency. But as yet, nothing has been presented that proved a success in developing memory or supplying a lack of it, further than the retention of tricks or peculiar recollections. When we remember that the memory is the pivot upon which all knowledge is centered, it seems strange that its importance has not attracted more attention from professors, who have made "man" a life study. There are but few people, who have not suffered the inconvenience of a bad memory, either within their own heads or the head of somebody else, and it strikes us, that a man who is able to benefit humanity in that one particular, would be considered the world's benefactor, for a time at least.

United Brethren From Principle.

EDITOR COURIER: Please allow me space in your valuable paper to say in reply to Simeon H. Maurer or "A radical from principle" as he terms himself, that I was somewhat amused to see his article in the COURIER as a reply to an article signed by O. A. Radical. It reminds me of a pugilist who at one time boasted of completely whipping a man. When the truth was known, the two bullys were seven miles apart when the so-called fight occurred. Does not S. H. Maurer know that O. A. Radical's article appeared in the Telescope, and was only copied by the COURIER? If he wished to reply, why did he not do so through the Telescope, so that O A. Radical could see it. He also states that there is a "principle in this question," but absolutely fails to explain to your readers the "great moral principles" contained therein. But instead refers your readers to an article, penned by E. C. Wyatt, of Philomath, Oregon, when he knows full well that not the one hundredth part of the readers of the COURIER, will ever be permitted to see the article refered to. He further says that he is sorry O. A. Radical has been so wonderfully deceived by the radical leaders. I am inclined to believe that Simeon feels equally gulled and deceived, by his deluded leaders, but does not wish to confess as did O. A. Radical.

Honest people are easily deceived and misled. Being truthful themselves they naturally suppose others to be so. Hence they are not on their guard and are ready to accept the statements of others unquestioned. That some have been, and still are being misled, with regard to our church troubles is a sad fact. As to why the leaders in the secession, still persist in thus misrepresenting facts, it is difficult to say. They ought to know that a cause sustained by such methods is doomed. It seems that their mad attempt to divide and ruin our church has developed in them a disregard of their solemn obligations to God and man. They try hard to make themselves believe that they are right, (2nd Cor.-10-10) and that all other God-fearing people are wrong. How inconsistent and un-Christlike to fellowship a man as a christian, go to hear him preach, receive the communion at his hands, and bid him God speed on his way to heaven, and then refuse to receive him into the church only because he does not believe, or do, as they do. If his differing from them renders him unfit for membership in the church, why recognize and fellowship him as a christian? Why commune with him or invite him into their homes? "O consistency, where art thou." May the Divine Maker forbid that we as a church shall ever be guilty of turning from our church door anyone whom Christ hath received.

P. P. LOCHNER.

Another Salary Bill.

Another bill has been offered, that will fix all officers on a salary, from governor down. The governor is to have $5,000, other state officers from $1,500 to $4,000 and their clerks and deputies from $600 to $1,200. The counties are divided into nine classes, according to population. DeKalb county comes in the fourth class, or those with 20,000 to 25,000 people. In counties of this class auditors, clerks, sheriffs and treasurers are to have $1,750 with $50 for each additional 1000 over the 20,000. This would be nearly $2,000 in this county. Recorders are to have $1,500 and $50 for each additional 1000 inhabitants. The sheriff may charge, 40 cents a day for boarding criminals, and 10 cents a mile for taking one to the penitentiary. Some fees are reduced, but all fees are to be paid by the officers into the county treasury, and then what is needed will be used to pay the salaries. If not enough to pay the salary is collected, then the salary is that much reduced. This bill was taken up yesterday but it will likely require a week or two, to consider and pass it, as it will be discussed one paragraph at a time.

The New Salary Bill.

We have already alluded to this, and have given, in brief, the salaries proposed for the various officers. In many regards, the bill is a good one, but in others it is not. We believe some of its provisions will not suit the people when the law comes to be tried, and will not be what they have a right to demand. There ought to be a new law on the subject and a reduction in the fees; and in the officers' salaries in some cases. All agree to this. But in other cases, there should be no reduction. There should at least be no reduction in the pay of county superintendent. It is but $4 now, and out of this must come an average of $1. per day for expenses. We don't believe the people demand that it be reduced to $3. Then, in case of fees in the clerk's office, such as are reduced are mainly those to be paid by foreign insurance companies. Who wants to have these fees on foreign companies reduced? We feel sure the people do not. Then there is a provision that the clerk must issue a fee bill as soon as costs are due. As fees remain the same, the parties interested are put to extra trouble by being forced to pay at once and have the expense of the fee bill added to the rest of the costs. We don't believe the people expected this. Again, take the treasurer. If a man who has no real estate fails to pay his taxes on his personal property, the treasurer must immediately proceed to levy on his effects that can be reached and sell them at once. We don't believe any more taxes could be collected by this strict construction than has been done heretofore, when the officer was permitted to use a little leniency. Still, it may be all right, though it does not look so. Then, there is a tendency to attach an emergency clause and have the law go into effect on the day it passes. We doubt the propriety of this. We believe the very earliest date should be when the other laws go into effect, thus giving the present officers time to adjust themselves to the new conditions. If it should wait till New Year, no harm will be done. But the point where most care is to be taken, is as to the result on the county. In many cases, we feel sure the county—the public treasury, and therefore the taxpayers, will feel the burden more than now. It should be made certain that this should not be. The total cost to the county and people at large should be less, not greater. Let our lawmakers study these points with great care for these are delicate questions. We are earnestly in favor of a good salary bill and none of those proposed, will remedy all the evils complained of, unless they are fixed up in different shape at some points. In the meantime let us rely on the wisdom and business capacity of our members, hoping they will give us a law that will be a decided improvement on the old one. Give us one that will not add any new burdens or cause new trouble. Give us one that will reduce our expenses, and not add to them.

Cleveland on the Silver Question.

Cleveland has written a plainly worded letter to show the people that he still stands as he used to stand, opposed to the free coinage of silver. While we cannot agree with him as to any danger from free coinage, we cannot help admiring his sublime courage and sturdy honesty. He knows that the democrats of the nation hold him as their standard bearer, and knows too, that nine out of ten of them believe in free silver. And knowing these things he is honest enough to tell them he does not agree with them, on this, one of the leading questions of the day. He knows that this declaration of his honest belief may cost him the presidency, but he will not swerve a hair from what he believes right, for the sake of even that great prize. Such courage as we said amounts to sublimity. While democrats may not agree with him in this, they cannot help admiring him. Cleveland is no time server. He does not trim his sails to catch any passing breeze that may waft him towards the white house. As in 1887, when he came out for the relief of an overburdened people, by demanding that needless and unjust tariff taxation should be lowered and equalized, he still shows a manly courage, and a desire not to be misunderstood. The hope of an honorable office does not affect him now, more than it did then. It is likely that his demand for a lower tariff set all the great manufacturers against him, and that in '88 he lost the presidency as a result of the stand he took. He never seemed to care for the defeat, but has always had the appearance of being satisfied that he had done his duty. This recent declaration, may lose him the nomination of his party, but he evidently wants his party to know where he honestly stands. It is like him, and people will still admire him for his courage and honesty. But between this and 1892, the silver question may be disposed of. And if not disposed of, the national convention may fix a free coinage plank in the platform, and the people may force Cleveland to be their standard bearer, and it is not likely, that in such a case, he would be found clogging the path that his party had marked out, or delaying that prosperity that we hope to see as the result a freer coinage of a metal that nature has furnished us in such generous abundance.

Was it Grip, or was it Hog Cholera?

At this time the grip and hog cholera seem to hold a prevalence in this part of the country, and in some cases it is rather difficult to say which is the grip or which is the cholera—they are so strikingly similar. It appears the hardest for the farmer boys to distinguish them. A rich joke on this line, comes to us by one of our friends concerning one of the rising young farmers near Sugar Grove, who answers to the name of Henry Mason. Henry had a lot fine hogs, that were prized very highly for their excellent swinelike qualities. These hogs all at once began to sicken and die with what was termed hog cholera. Being a shrewd and careful stockman, he watched every symptom of the dread disease as it progressed with his pigs. He, at the same time was undergoing a siege of what was supposed to be the grip. After watching the dying porkers for awhile he began to get alarmed about his own condition. He sought his brother William at once, and said: "William pray hearken unto me whilst I unfold my situation before thee." Having gained the elder brother's attention, he resumed: "I've been watching those hogs, and they shiver, cough and run at the nose, just like I do. Think you, brother, that I'm 'ketchin' the hog cholera?" We have not learned what consolation Henry got out of the interview, but it is noticed that William's face has become wan and thin, from keeping awake nights trying to figure out whether Hank., had the hog cholera, or whether the hogs had the grip.

Constipation,

IF not remedied in season, is liable to become habitual and chronic. Drastic purgatives, by weakening the bowels, confirm, rather than cure, the evil. Ayer's Pills, being mild, effective, and strengthening in their action, are generally recommended by the faculty as the best of aperients.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills. I deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"I have been taking Ayer's Pills and using them in my family since 1857, and cheerfully recommend them to all in need of a safe but effectual cathartic."—John M. Boggs, Louisville, Ky.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in excellent health."—S. L. Loughbridge, Bryan, Texas.

"Having used Ayer's Pills, with good results, I fully indorse them for the purposes for which they are recommended."—T. Conners, M. D., Centre Bridge, Pa.

A Fatal Mistake.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach, and are of little consequence. Dr. Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary, in his new book on "Heart Disease," which may be had free at F. E Davenport's, who guarantees and recommends Dr. Miles' unequaled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. It cures nervous and organic heart disease, short breath, fluttering, pain or tenderness in the side, arm or shoulders, irregular pulse, fainting, smothering, dropsy, etc. His restorative nervine cures headache, fits, etc. 5

How to Succeed.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck, but the majority from deficient grit—want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirits down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nervine, discovered by the great specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits, and hysteria. Trial bottles and fine book of testimonials free at F. E. Davenport. 5

Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C. Feb. 13, 1891.

Senator Plumb does not agree with the majority of his party upon financial matters, nor upon the tariff, but when it comes to a question of government pap, which is the keystone of the latter day republican arch, he is republican to the backbone. He has just given ample evidence of this by fathering the boldest attempt yet openly made for overiding the sanctimonious fraud known as the civil service law. He has introduced a joint resolution providing that stenographers, clerks, chiefs of divisions, copyists and computers in the census office shall be eligible for transfer to the classified service in any of the government departments. That means that a couple of thousand republicans are, as they are dropped from the rolls of the census bureau, which will be gradually reduced from this time on, to be put into the regular departmental service without going through a civil service examination; it also means that all of the democrats now in the classified service are to be discharged to make room for those whose republicanism Mr. Porter of the census bureau has vouched for under oath. Every one knows that the civil service law is a collossal humbug, and there would be no grief if it was repealed tomorrow, but that is no excuse for such schemes to trample under foot a law of the land as this one is.

He is a pretty thick skinned man who cannot in these days be reached by public opinion. Representative Dingley has found it necessary to defend his silver pool investigating committee from the charge of not attempting to get all of the information possible out of the witness, Owenby, who was before the committee last week. Mr. Dingley's denial is almost a reiteration of the charge. He says the committee was anxious to have Owenby testify to what he had personal knowledge of, but that it objected to his giving hearsay evidence, and yet Mr. Dingley knows very well that the speculations in silver of those two eminent republicans, Senator Cameron and Representative Taylor, of Illinois, were first brought out by hearsay evidence, but perhaps that was the very reason that he objected to any more of it. He doesn't want any more republicans found out, and they are not likely to be, unless some enterprising newspaper man does it.

Mr. Blaine has scored another knock down on McKinley, Reed, and company by concluding the negotiation of a reciprocity treaty with Venezuela. True the trade of Venezuela isn't very great, but it will serve to bring out the iniquities of the McKinley tariff law, and for that reason, if for no other it is desirable.

Mr. Cleveland's letter in opposition to free coinage published here this week, shows that his backbone is as strong as it was when he wrote the famous tariff message upon which the campaign of '88 was fought. Manliness always commands admiration, whether one agrees with its possessor or not.

It is stated that the House coinage committee will next week report the free coinage bill, with a recommendation from the majority of the committee against any silver legislation. This recommendation, if made, will be a bit of sharp parliamentary practice, as it will prevent the bill being placed on the calendar, and make it necessary to obtain the consent of a majority of that committee before it can be called up. In fact it will be equivalent to smothering the bill in committee, which was the first program of the republicans.

Secretary Tracy received a sharp dressing down from members of his own party in the House this week for the manner in which he reprimanded Commander Reiter for his conduct in connection with the killing of Gen. Barrundia.

The Sioux Indians, having testified to their objection to being placed under the care of the war department, which was the principal reason for bringing them here, have been loaded down with presents and sent home, via Philadelphia and Carlisle.

The wrong methods in the conduct of the pension office are constantly being tacitly acknowledged by the authorities by making changes in those methods. If it had not been for the exposures made by such papers as the New York Herald these changes would never have been made. It is the fearless press of the country that always looks out for the real interests of the people.

After the practical killing of the eight hour bill and the copyright bill in the Senate early this week that body and the House have devoted most of the time to the regular appropriation bills. The night sessions of the Senate, as was expected, are a fizzle. There hasn't yet been a quorum at one of them.

The radical republicans are brewing some deviltry in connection with the Force bill, but the democrats are wide awake.

Pronounced Hopeless, Yet Saved.

From a letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hurd of Groton, S. D., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in consumption. Four doctors gave me up saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Savior determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles; it has cured me and thank God I am now a well and hearty woman." Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drugstore, regular size, 50c. and $1. 4

AGRICULTURAL VALUES

SOME STATISTICS OF FARM MORTGAGES.

What Is the Matter with the Farmer?—Protection as a Factor in Agricultural Depression—The Farmer the Universal Burden Bearer.

There has been much controversy of late about the amount of farm mortgages in the United States. The Bankers' Magazine makes the statement that the farm mortgages of Kansas amount to $235,000,000; those of Indiana, $640,000,000; of Iowa, $567,000,000; of Michigan, $500,000,000; of Ohio, $1,431,000,000. At 6 per cent., $200,000,000 would be required to pay the interest on these mortgages, as the total in the five States is $3,431,000,000. The grand total of mortgage indebtedness on farm property in only five States exceeds by $1,846,000,000 the entire national debt, principal and interest, as reported at the close of the fiscal year ending the 3th of last June.

Statistics of the Agricultural Bureau of Illinois show a decrease in the value of farms and farm property in the State during the past year of $4,000,000. Governor Campbell, who is a farmer, says the depreciation of the same kind of property in Ohio, in the past ten years aggregates $80,000,000. Hugh McCulloch, the great Republican financier, who was Secretary of the Treasury under two administrations, declares that while rents in cities and large towns are steadily increasing, agriculture has become so depressed that good farms offer no inducements to tenants to hire them at a rental of 6 per cent on one-third of their assessed value.

In the face of facts like these there are still some Republicans left in the country who vainly try to make the farmer believe that he is in a prosperous condition. They fight against the evident fact that our system of tariff taxation bears with undue weight upon the farming class. In order to escape the acknowledgment of that fact some deny that there is any agricultural depression. A Republican orator has even claimed that farm mortgages, instead of being evidences of distress, are to be taken as proofs that the farmers are prosperous and happy.

But when a man feels pain he does not need a doctor to convince him that nothing hurts him. The pain makes itself felt and can be seen in the agonized expression of the features. No theories of any kind and no so-called proof can remove it for a moment from the consciousness of the sufferer. The best evidence that the farmers are less prosperous than they were is to be found, not in figures of farm mortgages, but in the fact that this lack of prosperity is universally recognized by the farmers themselves. In nearly every corner of the country there is a singular and painful unanimity on that point.

While the causes of this depression are several, there can be little doubt that the main cause is to be found in the protective tariff system. Nothing can be clearer than the fact that the duties on farm products have, in almost every case, no effect whatever in raising the prices of those products, since we are large exporters of nearly every form of farm produce, and our imports from Canada and other countries are so insignificant as to have no effect whatever in reducing prices with us. It is equally clear that the boasted advantage to the farmer of protection's home market is more fanciful than real; for this same home market pays not one cent more for farm produce than the "worn-out and effete nations of Europe" pay, and the farmer seldom even knows whether he is selling for consumption in the home market or in foreign markets.

But protection to manufacturers and miners costs this country an enormous sum every year. Who foots protection's bills? Who but the consumer? But the farmers constitute the largest class of consumers in the land; and when we say that protection is a burden upon the consumer, it is the same thing as to say that the farmers bear the greater part of this burden. Moreover, the burden which protection lays upon the great masses of the people who are neither farmers nor manufacturers and mine owners is itself largely shifted to the farmers and laboring people. The burden which protection lays upon the physician for medicine and for implements of surgery is shifted back upon his patients. In this way the rate of ultimate profit to the non-protected classes, who are not able to shift their burdens back upon others, is largely reduced indirectly by protection, and the former does not know what struck him.

Let not the farmer be deceived by the insincere rubbish about protection causing home competition to bring down prices of manufactured articles. The bull-dog tenacity with which the protected manufacturers fight for their duties, and flock to Washington at great expenditure of time and money to get them, is a sufficent answer to such nonsense.

Our blessed tariff is levied on what a man spends, and the farmer spends all he makes. The tariff, therefore, lays a much greater burden proportionately upon him than upon the prosperous citizen who lays by half of what he makes. Again, the farmer does not buy much of those things which are not affected in price by the tariff. Very few buy wheat, flour, corn, pork, or beef. They all buy clothing, machinery, and tools, crockery, furniture, and a hundred forms of manufactured articles.

The farmer needs only to investigate prices in the markets of the world to discover what the tariff is doing to promote agricultural depression.

Free Trade with Brazil.

The Republican press everywhere is rejoicing in the fact that we are to have partial free trade with Brazil. It is a delightful sight to behold the men who have been denouncing free trade as a wicked British device for ruining American industry now facing about under the enchantment of the "shrewd and weatherwise navigator" of the State Department, and praising absolute free trade with Brazil as a thing highly beneficial to our farmers and manufacturers. The foreign market, which they have been laboring in season and out to prove worthless, unprofitable, uncertain, far away, expensive, and cursed with pauper labor, suddenly looms up as a thing of beauty. McKinley wanted to know only last May "what peculiar sanctity hangs about foreign trade," and already the sanctity is discovered. There is to be an attempt to find "a foreign market for another barrel of pork and another bushel of wheat."

Of course the treaty with Brazil will be a good thing, so far as it will go, but our farmers must not expect it to go too far. The duties on farm products which Brazil will remove on the first of April are very small at present. What those duties are may be seen from the following statement from a commercial company in New York:

"Wheat, free; wheat flour, 10 per cent. ad valorem on a fixed valuation of 10 reis per kilogramme; corn, 10 per cent. ad valorem on a valuation of 5 reis per kilogramme; corn flour, 30 per cent. ad valorem on a valuation of 120 reis per kilogramme; rye, 10 per cent. ad valorem on a valuation of 20 reis per kilogramme; potatoes, beans, and peas, 10 per cent. ad valorem on a valuation of 5 reis per kilogramme; pork, 10 per cent. ad valorem on a valuation of 40 reis per kilogramme; dry fish, 10 per cent. ad valorem on a valuation of 20 reis per kilogramme; canned fish, 30 per cent. ad valorem on a valuation of 300 reis per kilogramme; turpentine, 10 per cent. ad valorem on a valuation of 40 reis per kilogramme; rosin, 10 per cent. ad valorem on a valuation of 5 reis per kilogramme.

"The old duties on the articles reduced by 25 per cent. were chiefly as follows: Lard, 20 per cent. advalorem on a valuatiyn of 120 reis per kilogram; cotton clothing, as high as 30 per cent. ad valorem per 1,000 reis; stockings, 30 per cent. upon a valuation of 2,000 reis per dozen; shirts, 30 per cent., upon a valuation of 8,500 reis per dozen. On some dry goods the duty was as much as 30 per cent. on a high valuation, while on different qualities of oil, machinery and naval stores it was very heavy.

"The method of calculating these reductions of duty will now be not to take off 25 per cent. of the dutiable rate, as for instance 16 instead of 20 per cent. upon lard, but to lower the valuation by 25 per cent. and calculate lard, for instance, at 20 per cent. on a valuation of 96 reis per kilogram instead of on a valuation of 120 reis. A reis is about a half cent., and a kilogram is two and two-tenths pounds."

THE CYCLONE OF FEAR.

REDUCED WAGES IN PROTECTED INDUSTRIES.

McKinley's Promise and the Manufacturers' Performance—How the Workman Is Failing to Get the Tariff Spoils—How Labor Strikes—Figures of Strikes and Lockouts.

No one of the many superstitions in the whole system of protection is being so much damaged by the light of experience and fact as the superstition that protection raises wages. It was shown in the last Presidential election that this old stand-by of protectionist catch-words was losing its power among the workingmen in factory towns. In nearly all of the manufacturing centers of New England, where the "European pauper labor argument" was used persistently by the protectionists, the Democrats made gains in that election. "The cyclone of fear" which had been predicted by Chauncey M. Depew as the thing that was going to sweep the country was not realized among the working people.

If the cry of high tariff and high wages failed then much more is it doomed to become a derision and a jest to-day. The McKinley tariff law went into operation on Oct. 6 last year with higher duties and the promise of higher wages. What has been the result on wages thus far? In two or three unimportant cases higher wages have been reported, but in a very large number of cases reductions have been made. Here is only a partial list of reductions of wages, nearly all of which have been made since Jan. 1:

Brooke Iron Company, Birdsborough, Penn., closed Feb. 2, and 450 men thrown out of work because they refused to accept a reduction of about 7 per cent.

Ellis & Lessig Steel and Iron Company, Pottstown, Penn., closed Feb. 2; 700 men out of work because a reduction of 12½ per cent. was rejected.

Hopedale Fabric Mill, Hopedale, Mass.; wages of weavers reduced 2½ cents a yard.

Silk mill at Warehouse Point, Conn.; wages of winders and doublers reduced from $1.37 to $1 per day.

Sturtevant Blower Works, Jamaica Plain, Mass.; reduction of from 10 to 30 per cent.

Pottstown Iron Company, Pottstown, Penn.; reduction of about 7 per cent.

Bethlehem Iron Company, Bethlehem, Penn.; reduction of 10 per cent. Feb. 2.

Pennsylvania Steel Company, Steelton, Penn.; reduction of from 8 to 10 per cent. Feb. 1.

Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, Scranton, Penn.; an average reduction of 20 cents a day on Jan. 1.

Homestead Steel Works, Carnegie, Phipps & Co.; 10 per cent., by agreement.

Pullman Palace Car Company's works; new scale, making a reduction of about 10 per cent., brought forward Jan. 1.

Otis Iron and Steel Company, Cleveland, Ohio; reduction of 30 per cent.

Coal mines, Duquoin, Ill., reduction from 69 to 60 cents per ton.

Ribbon weavers in Paterson, N. J.; reduction of 15 per cent.

Coal mines, near Leavenworth, Kan.; reduction of 11 per cent.

Cocheco Manufacturing Company; wages of weavers reduced 4 per cent.

Manufacturers of pottery, Trenton, N. J.; wages of sanitary ware pressers reduced 22 per cent.

Merrimac Mills, Lowell, Mass; wages of mule spinners reduced 3 cents per hundred.

Buckeye Mower and Reaper Works, Akron, Ohio; reduction of from 30 to 60 per cent. reported on Feb. 3.

Saxony Knitting Mill, Little Falls, N. Y.; reduction of about 20 per cent.

Southern Steel Company, Chattanooga, Tenn.; reduction of 10 per cent.

The official statistics of strikes and lockouts for the six years, 1881–'86, as published by United States Labor Commissioner Carroll D. Wright in his third annual report, afford a striking commentary to the oft-repeated assertion that protection raises wages and insures steady employment.

In the whole country there were during these six years 22,304 strikes and 2,214 lockouts. Of the strikes, 9,439 were for increase of wages, 4,344 for reduction of hours, 1,734 against reduction of wages, 1,692 for increase of wages and reduction of hours, and so on to the smaller classes in which some special form of the wage question was under dispute. Of the 2,214 lockouts, 314 were against demand for increase of wages and 229 to enforce reduction of wages.

Does protection then guarantee steady employment? Does it keep wages up to a point which satisfies the laborer? Is it not the height of folly to make claims about what protection can do in raising wages in the face of the evident fact that it does not give the laborer such wages as will keep him from striking? As the laborer is compelled to contest every inch of ground he gains by trades unions, by strikes, and by other means, it will be difficult to persuade him that protection is a good thing for him.

McKinley Prices Again.

The talk about higher prices has broken out again. Some prices, after rising when the McKinley law was first imposed, have fallen to the old figure, and the protectionist organs are quick to point out this fact and to claim it as our first benefits of the McKinley law.

But there is another side to the matter. The New York Dry Goods Economist, itself a supporter of a mild form of protection, now points out how some of these lower prices have been brought about. It says it is by lowering the quality of the goods. "So in imported hosiery," says the Economist, "we still have what is known in the trade as the '25-cent stocking,' but in quality and workmanship it is slightly inferior. It has been adroitly cheapened. The customer gets the article at the old price, but it is not as good, and no advertising lies can make it as good."

The cheapening of the stocking is not the only case of the kind. The Economist says that the same thing "has been done in many cases."

And so under the reign of McKinleyism cheap and nasty go together.

WOOL PRICES.

The History of Wool Prices Shows that the Grower Has No Interest in the Duty—Free Wool Wanted for Grower, Manufacturer, and Consumer.

The recent declaration of the wool-growers of Livingston and Ontario Counties, in the State of New York, in favor of free wool has attracted wide attention. Their denunciation of the wool duty as a "delusion and a snare to the wool-grower," is warranted by the history of wool prices since 1867, when the first high wool tariff was adopted.

The prices of wool for four years before and after that year are given in the following table:

Year.	Price per pound, cts.	Year.	Price per pound, cts.
1863	75	1868	46
1864	100	1869	48
1865	75	1870	46
1866	70	1871	62
Four years' av.	80	Four years' av.	50½

In 1883 there was a change in the wool tariff amounting to a slight reduction. The prices for the four years before and after this change are given in the following table:

Year.	Price per pound, cts.	Year	Price per pound, cts.
1879	37	1884	34
1880	46	1885	31
1881	42	1886	33
1882	42	1887	38
Four years' av.	41¾	Four years' av.	34

In view of figures like these, it is surprising that any farmer should want a duty on wool. A high protectionist paper, The Manufacturer, of Philadelphia, points out that a high duty on wool always results in lower prices for domestic wool.

The question may arise then: "Would the removal of the wool tax raise the price of domestic wool?" Most likely it would. The manufacturers say that they reach the best results in making cloth when they mix American with foreign wool. An increased demand for foreign wool would, therefore, increase the demand for our own wool. Many mills now idle would begin work again, and American woolen cloth would be cheaper to the American consumer, and besides it could be profitably exported. When that change comes about it will not be possible for commercial journals to report, as they did last summer, that 60 per cent. of the woolen mills in the country are idle.

While the wool grower has not prospered under high wool duties, no more have the manufacturers prospered. This fact is strikingly exhibited in the following table showing the number of woolen mills in the country and in the New England States in 1870 and in 1880:

STATES.	Mills. 1870.	Mills. 1880.	Decre'se P'r ct
In all the States and Territories	2,890	1,990	31.14
In New England States—
Connecticut	108	78	28.00
Maine	107	93	13.1
Massachusetts	185	167	9.7
New Hampshire	77	58	24.7
Rhode Island	65	50	23.2
Vermont	65	44	32.3
Totals	607	490	19.3

From every standpoint, therefore, from that of the grower, the manufacturer and the consumer, free wool is the demand of the hour. It is only a piece of stupid folly to continue the wool tariff longer. It is doomed; and in the interest of all the people it must go.

THE starch trust was organized nearly a year ago, and has already for months kept the price of starch fully a cent per pound higher than before the combine was made. They have raised the price by about one-third. At the recent meeting of the trust dividends were declared on three kinds of shares. The protective duty on starch is prohibitory.

LEADER OF THE FREE.

BY CHARLES J. BEATTIE.

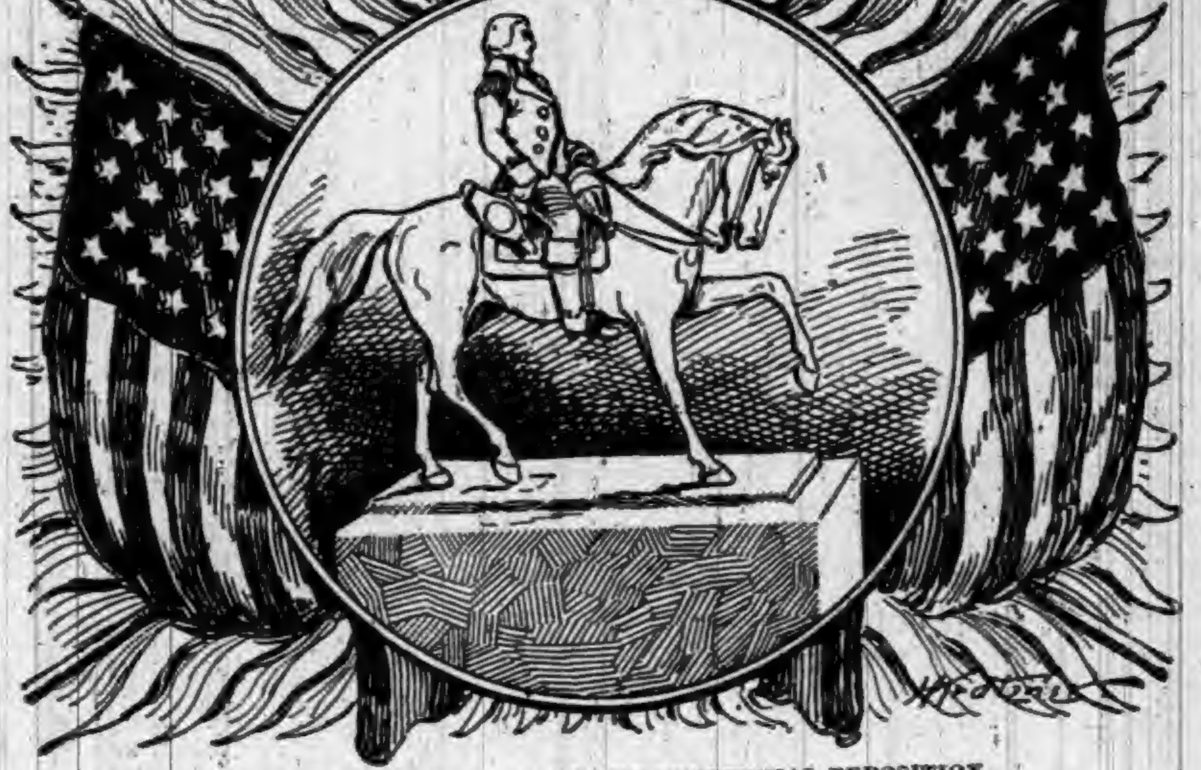
THE day recurs—the day of days—
Grand omen'd with his birth;
A heart above the meed of praise,
The greatest name of earth.
His glory is the world's high theme,
The bravest and the best;
In every land—in every tongue—
Beneath the circling sun
The glory of that name is sung—
Our own great Washington.

Oh! write his name across the sky—
That the wide world may see—
In living words that cannot die,
The leader of the free.
Oh! write it on the highway broad,
The mountain turrets tall,
Upon the meadow's em'rald sod,
And on the granite wall.
Write it o'er ocean; let the blast
Fan it on bark and boat;
Oh, let it wave from every mast,
On every yardarm float.

His name! Yes, give it to the breeze,
Where wildest tempests roar;
Let it be heard across the seas—
On every foreign shore.
Oh! let it thrill along the lines
On every battle plain,
Reverberate o'er freedom's shrines,
Above her heroes slain.
Its tocsin in the bugle's peal,
In the wild trumpet's tone;
In the loud clank of patriots' steel
That shakes the tyrant's throne.

His name shall ring along the front
Where manhood strikes for right,
Amid the battle's fiery brunt,
The watchword of the fight.
Where kings or despots trample man,
Where slaves or chains are found,
Let that name first in freedom's van
Along the lines resound,
To rouse the bondsman, break the yoke,
Dissolve his chains accurs'd,
And 'mid the battle's fire and smoke
The galling shackles burst.

Oh! peerless name on history's page,
Without a stain or mar,
The soldier, statesman, patriot, sage—
The first in peace and war;
And first among the glorious throng
Of patriots far and near.
Heroes of story and of song,
To home and country dear;
Across the broad world let it flame
Brightly to either pole—
The proudest, brightest, greatest name
On freedom's muster roll.



STATUE OF WASHINGTON AT THE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

WASHINGTON'S BURIAL.

The Scene at the Last Resting Place at Mount Vernon.

On Dec. 20, 1799, George Washington was laid in his final resting place, and the Ulster County Gazette, published at Kingston, N. Y., did honor to the great chief in a write-up of which a copy is given below. The few hundreds of words that were printed in honor of the Nation's dead meant more at that time than many columns mean now, and the mourning borders, poorly printed from illy cut wooden blocks, were significant from their width and blackness.

WASHINGTON ENTOMBED.

GEORGETOWN, Dec. 20.—On Wednesday last the mortal part of Washington the Great, the father of his country and the friend of man, was consigned to the tomb with solemn honors and funeral pomp.

A multitude of persons assembled from many miles around at Mount Vernon, the choice abode and late residence of the illustrious chief. There were the groves, the spacious avenues, the beautiful and sublime scenes, the noble mansion; but, alas, the august inhabitant was now no more. That great soul was gone. His mortal part was there, indeed, but ah, how affecting! how awful the spectacle of such worth and greatness thus to mortal eyes fallen—yes, fallen! fallen!

In the long and lofty portico where last the hero walked in all his glory, now lay the shrouded corpse. The countenance, still composed and serene, seemed to depress the dignity of the spirit which lately dwelt in that lifeless form! Then those who paid the last sad honors to the benefactor of his country took an impressive a farewell view.

On the ornament at the head of the coffin was the inscription:

"Surge ad Judicium;"

about the middle of the coffin,

"Gloria Deo,"

and on the silver plate,

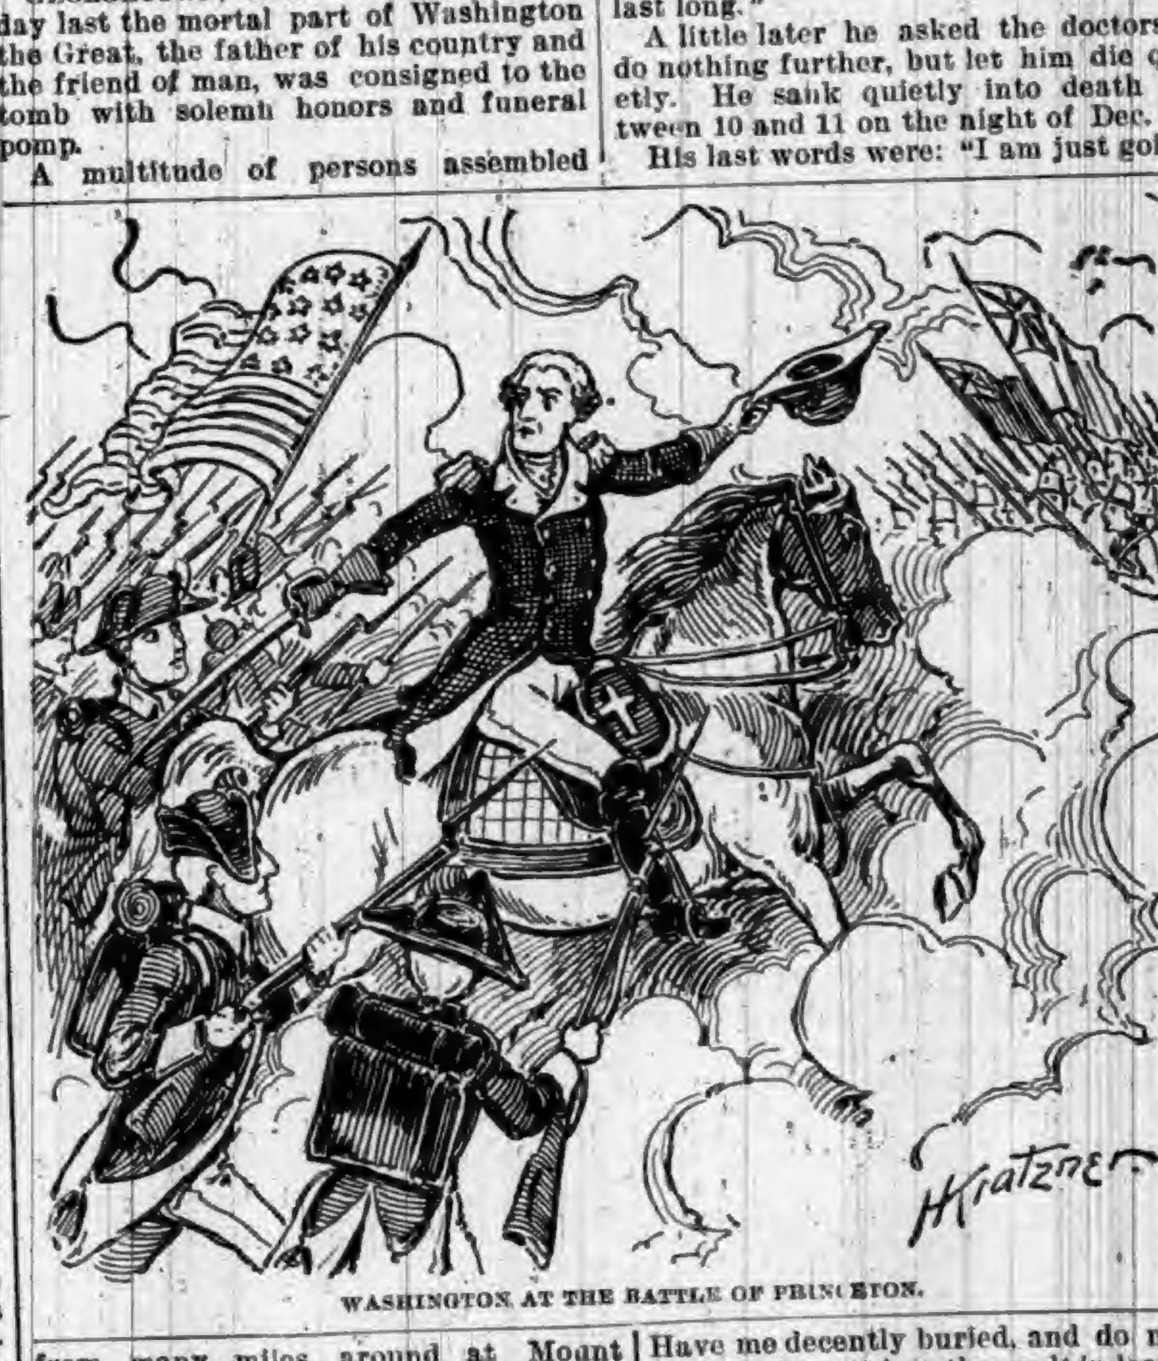
"GENERAL
GEORGE WASHINGTON,
Departed this life on the 14th December,
1799, Æt. 68."

Between 3 and 4 o'clock the sound of artillery from a vessel in the river firing minute guns awoke a fresh and solemn sorrow—the corpse was removed—a band of music with mournful melody melted the soul into all the tenderness of woe.

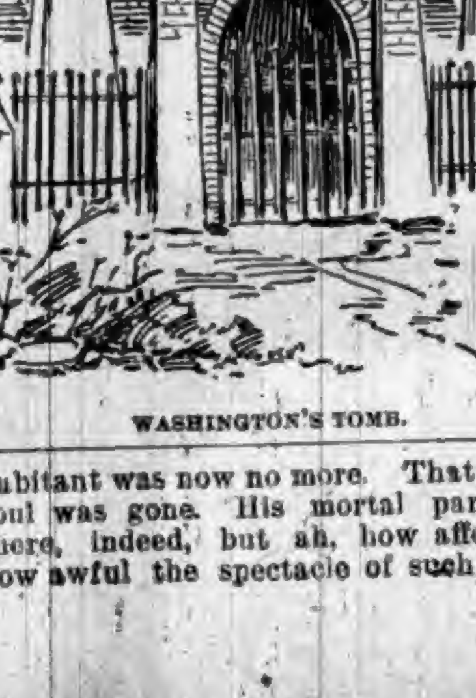
The procession was formed and moved on in the following order: Cavalry, infantry, guard, music, clergy; the General's horse, with his saddle, holsters, and pistols. Colonels Sims, Ramsey, Payne, Gilpin, Marsteller, Little, pallbearers, escorting the corpse. Mourners, Masonic brethren, citizens.

When the procession had arrived at the bottom of the elevated lawn, on the bank of the Potomac, where the family vault is placed, the cavalry halted, the infantry marched toward the Mount, and formed their lines—the clergy, Masonic brothers, and the citizens descended to the vault, and the funeral service of the church was performed. The firing was repeated from the vessel in the river, and the sounds echoed from the woods and hills around.

Three general discharges, by the infantry, the cavalry, and eleven pieces of artillery, which lined the banks of the Potomac back of the vaults, paid the last tribute to the entombed Commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States and of the departed hero. The sun was now setting. Alas! the son of glory was set forever. No—the name of Washington, the American President and General—will triumph over death. The unclouded brightness of his glory will illumine the future ages.



WASHINGTON AT THE BATTLE OF PRINCETON.



WASHINGTON'S TOMB.

The Death of Washington.

On the 12th of December, 1799, General Washington spent several hours on horseback, riding over his farm and giving directions to his manager. He returned late in the afternoon, wet and chilled with rain and sleet. The water had penetrated to his neck, and snow was lodged in the locks of his hair. Next day a heavy snow fall prevented his going out much. He complained of a sore throat, but passed the evening cheerfully with his wife, reading the newspapers.

In the night he had an ague, and before the dawn of Saturday the 14th, the soreness of throat had become so severe that he breathed and spoke with difficulty. He was bled, at his own request, by his overseer; physicians were summoned, but their remedies were useless. Toward evening he said to Dr. Craik, his family physician:

"I die hard, but I am not afraid to die. I believed from my first attack that I should not survive it. My breath cannot last long."

A little later he asked the doctors to do nothing further, but let him die quietly. He sank quietly into death between 10 and 11 on the night of Dec. 14.

His last words were: "I am just going. Have me decently buried, and do not let my body be put into the vault in less than three days after I am dead. Do you understand me?" he said to his secretary, who murmured, "Yes."

"'Tis well," said Washington, and spoke no more.

It Can't Be Done.

It takes the dignity out of a man quicker than rain would ruin a bonnet when compelled to converse with a woman by telephone. No man can stand on his tiptoes and yell till his eyes turn red, and at the same time preserve an imposing presence.—Ram's Horn.

Appropriate Enough.

"Now, Mr. Bronson, we want a Scriptural quotation for our church fair tickets. Can't you think of one?" asked the fair maid.

"Certainly," said Bronson. "How will 'A certain man fell among thieves' do?"

A Legal Lottery.

"Yes, marriage is a lottery and I'm drawing a prize," and the young man laughed as he pulled the baby coach up the stairs.—Philadelphia Times.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every-one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. ☛ No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

—William L. Moore, of Martinsville, sold eighteen stall-fed cattle for the European market for which he received $1,400. The cattle averaged 1,555 pounds.

—Owing to a case of hydrophobia the Mayor of Franklin has issued an order to the City Marshal to kill all dogs running at large unmuzzled within the next thirty days.

—Mrs. Lizzie Wilson, Muncie, put a big turkey under a tub two days before Christmas; never thought of it again till the other day; found it alive after forty-five days' fast.

—Edward Kirkwood, while returning from Carbon to Perth, was assailed by two highwaymen, whom he succeeded in driving off after a desperate fight. He was seriously injured.

—Edward W. Jackson hanged himself in his barn, at his home near Lawrenceburg. A recent decision of the Supreme Court had invalidated his title to his farm, and brooding over this trouble caused his suicide. He was formerly a member of the Legislature.

—While Napum Pedlar, of Rosedale, employed by the Park County Coal Company, was engaged in dropping loaded cars from the dumps his foot caught and he was dragged some distance and crushed to death. He was a man of family and prominent in Methodist Church and Pythian Lodge circles.

—Henry Humphrey, a coal miner, near New Goshen, died from hydrophobia. He was bitten in the lip six weeks ago by a tramp dog that was fighting with his dog. The Terre Haute madstone was applied, but would not adhere. Humphrey's dog was killed, but the tramp got away. Humphrey was taken ill and the disease developed into unmistakable hydrophobia. He left a widow and two children.

—John Miller, a young man residing near Abingdon, had a desperate fight with a burglar in his mother's house, and finally drove him away.

—A Green County girl is going to be sued for breach of promise by an "unknown correspondent" whom she promised to marry and then wouldn't.

—James B. Thompson, a prominent young man of Waldron, on his return from a ball, fell through a cow-pit and broke his jaw and received dangerous injuries.

—Children of M. Harbin, near Cementville, found the corpse of a babe concealed in a thicket. Robert Livingston has been arrested, charged with complicity in the crime.

—At Middleburg John Kurtz dropped a loaded rifle, and in falling the weapon struck an anvil and was discharged. The bullet struck Chauncey Shrock in the stomach, inflicting a fatal wound.

—Eight of the eleven members of the Gosport High School graduating class have been expelled. Recently the class went boating without permission of Prof. Hubbard, and this led to the trouble.

—J. J. Moran, a guard at the Prison North, was assaulted and terribly beaten by Thomas Hartman, a convict.

—Mrs. Whittenberg, Knightstown, locked two children in the house and went to call on a neighbor, house caught fire, 2-year-old baby burned to death.

—A few days ago a resident of Morgan County gave a mortgage on five acres of land, for the sum of $10. The fee for recording a mortgage is $1.25, while an attorney generally gets $2 or $3 for drawing up the papers in such cases. This is the smallest mortgage ever recorded on a piece of land in that county, and probably in the State.

—Policeman Kahle, in attempting to arrest two colored tramps who were stealing a ride on the west-bound Vandalia train at Brazil, was shot near the heart by one of the number. The would-be murderer fled, but again boarded the train as it was leaving. He was arrested at Terre Haute. He gives his name as William Suggs. Kahle will recover.

—Thomas Coffield visited the home of Mrs. Behringer, at Lafayette, demanding something to eat. After his wants had been supplied he left the house, only to return and attempt an assault. He was convicted in the circuit court, and was sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment. He was identified as a former inmate of the Ohio penitentiary.

—At Williamsport a freight train on the Wabash struck George Mong, 84 years of age, and instantly killed him. The right leg, between the ankle and the knee was broken, the right forearm broken, the chin was split in two and one deep cut was made over the right eye, and a scalp wound inflicted on the right side of the head. The body, by the force of the blow, was thrown twenty feet.

—A case of hydrophobia has been reported near Tipton. The 17-year-old daughter of Green Rayls was bitten by a dog three years ago, and nothing serious was thought of it at that time. To the surprise of her friends, the latter part of last week she was heard snarling and snapping. Medical aid was at once summoned, and after carefully diagnosing the case it was pronounced hydrophobia from the cause above stated.

—Jacob Freundlich, a driver for the Cook Brewing Company, Evansville, drove a team of fine horses into the Ohio River for the purpose of washing the mud from the animals. They became entangled in a wharfboat's ropes and began plunging in the water. Freundlich attempted to save them, and in the struggle all were drowned in the presence of hundreds of people and within ten feet of shore. The deceased leaves a family.

—The Oil Well Supply Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., have located their branch house in Montpelier, and will build a warehouse for the purpose of storing their heavy supplies in. The city is full of oil men and are making preparations for a boom in the oil business. The Tewksbury well, two miles east of town, was drilled in, and is flowing seventy barrels daily. There have been contracts let for one hundred derricks, and drilling will commence at once.

—A strange woman has been "working" the druggists at Crawfordsville by selling them large quantities of a face preparation. She gave the druggists the names and addresses of a large number of ladies who, she claimed, had agreed to purchase the preparation. The druggists sent postals to the ladies where names had been handed in and they soon found that the ladies had never agreed to purchase the preparation. The woman, however, had departed and the druggists are out several dollars.

—William Hendricks, a farmer of Harrison County, on making a trip through a piece of timber land on his farm, found that a large portion of earth had fallen into a vacancy. He and his neighbors proceeded to explore the hole. They found that the cave was much larger at the bottom than at the top, and had a perfect floor, with no outlet, and though the walls were not perfect, they bear the resemblance of having been sealed years ago. Skeletons of human beings and a large number of flint tools were unearthed.

—While Lon Ulrick, a Tipton machinist, was working on the inside of a large boiler he narrowly escaped a most frightful death. A jet of natural gas had been turned into the boiler for lighting purposes, and when the machinist had finished his work he instructed one of his helpers to turn the gas off. This assistant turned the key the wrong way, and a large volume of gas shot into the boiler, and before the mistake was discovered Ulrick was severely burned about the body, his clothing being nearly consumed.

—Hiram Terry Rush, aged 78 years, formerly a wealthy citizen of Detroit, who has resided at Mishawaka for the past four years, finally fell ill and has been unable to work for the past four months, says the Mishawaka Enterprise. Two sisters in Cleveland and a step-son in Detroit were notified, but refused to render assistance, and Landlord Curtis, who was already out over forty dollars, was compelled to send him to the Poor House. When informed of the dire necessity, the poor old man wept like a child.

—Bryan Goins, farmer near Evansville, dead and ready for burial, startled watchers by raising up in his coffin coughing. He was hurriedly put into bed and restoratives applied, lived a few hours but did not speak.

—Sharpsville, an enterprising town of 600 inhabitants, has organized a stock company for a canning factory, with a capital stock of $10,000. Work is to commence on the building at once. Sharpsville is located in one of the best gas regions in Indiana.

—While loading logs on a flat car at Carmel, John C. Stanton, a jockey, had his hand caught and crushed between two logs. He was held for a quarter of an hour before assistance could be obtained to relieve him. His hand is badly injured.

—While workmen were engaged tearing down the old M. E. Church at Greenwood, part of the structure fell, carrying John Courtney, a contractor, to the ground, a distance of twenty-five feet, dislocating his ankle and cutting a hole into the ankle joint. Fears are entertained that he will be a cripple for life.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

Mr. McGinnis' bill to extend the operation of the metropolitan police law to all cities in the State having a population of 20,000 or more, came up for a second reading in the Legislature Feb. 9. The committee on cities and towns recommended that the bill be amended so as to make the law applicable to all cities having above 14,000 children enrolled in their public schools. Several senators, especially Mr. Hubbell, were curious to know why such an amendment was proposed, and what the number of school children had to do with the police law. It was brought by successive questions that Terre Haute wants the law, but Fort Wayne does not, but that each has more than 29,000 inhabitants. In this predicament the committee, with a desire to please everybody, cast about for some means of giving Terre Haute, with 31,000 people, the law it wanted, and at the same time making it inapplicable to Fort Wayne, with 35,000.

The following bills were introduced: To require building and loan associations to file statements of their condition semi-annually with the Auditor of State; to abolish the office of State Librarian and place the library in charge of the custodian of public buildings; providing for boards of health of three members in cities of 15,000 inhabitants or over. This bill is very long, and was prepared by the medical society or the faculty of the Indiana Medical College; fixing the salaries of wardens of State prisons at $2,500, and deputy wardens at $1,200 per annum.

Mr. Ewing's bill to abolish the State Board of Agriculture and establish in its place a "State Agricultural and Industrial Board" was a special order for 11:30 o'clock, but it was again postponed.

In the Senate, Feb. 10, bills were introduced for the creation of board of highway engineers. Bills passed authorizing boards of trustees of incorporated towns to erect workhouses; making it unlawful to enter a horse to compete for a prize under an assumed name. Bill permitting paupers to select their own physician indefinitely postponed. In the House the boiler inspection bill was defeated. Bill prohibiting the shooting of ducks between sunset and sunrise passed; also bills to prevent the dealing in margins on farm products; to punish persons for bringing into the State stolen goods, etc.

In the Senate, Feb. 11, the Terre Haute metropolitan police bill was passed. Appellate Court bill engrossed. The House went into committee of the whole on the fee and salary bill. Twenty-four sections out of seventy-five considered. No changes made except Deputy State Auditor and Law Librarian which have been increased to $1,500 each.

No Business of importance was transacted by the Senate, February 12. The House spent the day in committee of the whole on the fee and salary bill.

The State engineer examiner bill was defeated by the Senate, February 13; building association bill was so amended as to exempt local associations from operating under the national plan. The following bills were passed: Providing that incorporated towns having no newspaper may publish legal advertisements in any other town in the county which has a newspaper. The object of this bill is to enable all such to get the benefit of the Barret law; empowering City Councils and Boards of Trustees of incorporated towns to authorize street railway companies now using horse-power to operate electric lines; removing the power to appoint Trustees of the State University at Bloomington from the hands of the Board of Education and giving it to the alumni of that institution. In the House the fee and salary bill was completed in committee of the whole. Resolution recommending a clause in the bill to exempt officers heretofore elected adopted by fifty-six votes.

How Do Big Birds Hang in the Air?

I once had a very unusual opportunity of observing accurately the flight of buzzards from the summit of Acro-Corinthus. As this unique natural fortress rises sheer from the plain, on the side toward Attica, to the height of 1,800 or 1,900, a group of these birds, hanging above the surface, were thus brought in a line with the eye. I could detect the minutest movement of the wings or tail. Again and again there were considerable intervals of several seconds' duration during which one bird and another would hang, with pinions horizontally outstretched, absolutely motionless, neither descending nor drifting, but as if his balance in the air was one of delicately-adjusted equipoise. And when, by a just-perceptible movement of wings, he stirred again, it seemed rather to be to change his position than that he needed any kind or degree of effort to maintain it. There was no wind. No doubt, of necessity, there was some upward current of air from the sun-warmed surface of the ground by which the birds profited; but if all sufficient to sustain them, their actual gravity when in that position and so willing it (by which I mean nothing so absurd as that gravitation can be counteracted by the vis vitæ, but that by inflating its lungs and perhaps suspending its respiration, the bird may have the power at will of lessening its comparative weight in the air) must be very near to that of the atmosphere around and underneath them.—London Nature.

A Straight Tip.

Wagley—I'll tell you how to make a lot of money.

Wooden—How?

Wagley—Buy a lot of thermometers now, and sell them next July.

Wooden—I don't see how I can make any money that way.

Wagley—Why, man, they're sure to go up eighty or ninety points.

We are indebted to Herodotus for the discovery of the pigmies, and secondly, to Andrew Battel, of Leigh. The Moffat and Livingstone introduced us to the bushmen of South Africa. But the earliest knowledge of the pigmies of Central Equatorial Africa was given us by Schweinfurth and Piaggia, who had traveled to Niam-Niam and Monbutta land, which countries are situated on the northern end of the Great Forest.

Too many papers keep in hot water with their 'steemed contemporaries.

The father of Gambetta has just died. It is not generally known that the elder Gambetta received nothing under his son's will of the large sum of money the French patriot was reported to have left. He had nothing except the interest upon his savings as a general dealer in Cahors and what he earned as an orange grower. He lived very humbly with an old servant, and he even made the boxes in which the results of his labors were dispatched and wheeled them himself to the station upon a hand cart.

EXCITEMENT IN ROCHESTER.

The Commotion Caused by the Statement of a Physician.

An unusual article from the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle was recently republished in this paper and was a subject of much comment. That the article caused even more commotion in Rochester the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well known not only in Rochester but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper a few days since, which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal inquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed necessary.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion at his residence, when the following interview occurred: "That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued, such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. I was brought so low by neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull pains and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious.

"The medical profession has been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is high time it ceased. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of kidney disease more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough, but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said that more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it, Doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of diseases are torturing people to-day, which in reality are Bright's disease in some of its many forms. It is a hydra-headed monster, and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints, which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also."

Mr. Warner, who was visited at his establishment on North St. Paul street, spoke very earnestly:

"It is true that Bright's disease had increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that from '70 to '80 its growth was over 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off, and is taking off every year, for while many are dying apparently of paralysis and apoplexy, they are really victims of kidney disorder, which causes heart disease, paralysis, apoplexy, etc. Nearly every week the papers record the death of some prominent man from this scourge. Recently, however, the increase has been checked and I attribute this to the general use of my remedy."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it, Mr. Warner?"

"A prominent professor in a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. 'And now, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the unhealthy indications, I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health,' and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command both left him, and in a trembling voice he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys;' and in less than a year he was dead. The slightest indications of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful, is it not?"

"No more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured?"

"I know it can. I know it from my own and the experience of thousands of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience, what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'That goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proved true if I had not fortunately used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Cure."

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor?" was asked Dr. S. A. Lattimore, one of the analysts of the State Board of Health.

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No, sir, I did not think it possible."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"

"I have chemically analyzed it, and find it pure and harmless."

The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner, and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question, and the statements they make cannot for a moment be doubted. Dr. Henion's experience shows that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, but that it can be cured if taken in time.

A Daring Female Missionary.

Miss Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, is about to attempt a journey through Thibet. This singular and interesting country, always jealously closed against the outer barbarian, has again and again thwarted the well-laid plans of some of the greatest men travelers of our time. Changes of Climate Kill more people than is generally known. Particularly is this the case in instances where the constitution is delicate, and among our immigrant population seeking new homes in those portions of the West, and where malarial and typhoid fevers prevail at certain seasons of the year. The best preparative for a change of climate, or of diet and water which that change necessitates, is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which not only fortifies the system against malaria, a variable temperature, damp, and the debilitating effects of tropical heat, but it is also the leading remedy for constipation, dyspepsia, liver complaint, bodily troubles specially apt to attack emigrants and visitors to regions near the equator, mariners and tourists. Whether used as a safeguard by sea voyagers, travelers by land, miners, or by agriculturists in newly populated districts, this fine specific has elicited the most favorable testimony.

Keeping Track of Wires.

The manner in which the electric light companies keep track of the wires they string over the city is curious and very simple. A board about three feet long and two feet wide is secured and a heavy piece of cardboard is tacked on it. Then a diagram of the city drawn, showing all the streets. Now comes the laying out of the wires. Pins are then stuck into the cardboard on each street, on which wires are strung, and around each pin twine is placed. The twine starts from the central electric station, and following it up any wire can be traced. When there are more than one line of wires on a street the number is represented by strings on the chart.—Philadelphia Press.

TARIFF is causing a division of politics in Canada. The "conservatives," who now are in power, oppose reciprocity and favor keeping up a high protective tariff, while their opponents the "liberals," want free trade or reciprocity with the United States, and with no other nation, not even with Great Britain. So political matters are at fever heat in the Dominion.

REPUBLICANS are urging the appointment of "non-partisan boards" for everything, in a very innocent way, as if they really expected people to believe they had always favored this plan. But the facts are, they are now in the minority everywhere, and can't appoint anything wholly republican, except such officers as can be selected by the governor. And in such cases, the governor has not appointed "non-partisan boards." He had a good chance, when the only democratic member of the supreme courts died. Surely on that important board there should be some non-partisan arrangement. But no The governor appointed an extreme republican, making the supreme court solid. In fact republicans don't believe in the non-partisan business except when it applies to democrats. Republicans might succeed better if their lack of sincerity were not so very plain.

Two physicians at Harlem, near New York City, have discovered a "lymph" that succeeds better as a consumption cure than Dr. Koch's. They have every reason to consider it a success.

No use talking about the democrats and solid south any longer. The coming congress will have a good democratic majority without counting a single democratic member from the southern states

GEN. SHERMAN'S body leaves New York for St. Louis today. Everything will be plain, as he wished it so, but the leading men in the nation will be in the procession, including Harrison, Hayes and Cleveland.

FRIDAY and Saturday of last week, the world lost its most noted naval and military commanders, Porter, and Sherman. Neither the world's navy, nor its military, can now show as famous a name as those we lost on those two succeeding days.

THE Pennington air ship is not a new wrinkle. Another Pennington, John H., deposited this very model in the patent office at Washington, in 1828. Perhaps he was the father or grandfather of this Pennington. It is said the model is there yet.

RECIPROCITY with Brazil, and with Canada, is being lauded to the skies by republican papers. But it is nothing more nor less than free trade pure and simple, as far as those countries are concerned. And these same papers have been all along, howling about the dangers of free trade. There are several things republican papers don't know much about, and tariff matters are among them.

IT is amusing to see republican papers complaining about "minority rule" as if the democratic minority in congress was preventing legislation. If they stop to think, they will realize that if the republican members would stay at their posts, and attend to the work they were elected to do, they could at any time pass any law they chose to pass. They have a good, big majority in each house. But they allow a part of their members to stay at home or go on pleasure trips, till their majority is thin that it can be set aside. Then they complain of the wicked "minority." The democrats stay there and work.

GENERAL SHERMAN, who was been lying at death's door for a week or so, died at his home in New York City, Saturday, at about ten minutes to one o'clock. His death removes one of the greatest, if not the very greatest, of the prominent military figures of the rebellion. Like Sheridan, he had the good sense to keep clear of politics, and thus leave a great military fame undimmed by the mistakes a great soldier is apt to make, when he tries statesmanship. Gen. Sherman, will perhaps be the most generally lamented of any of these great leaders, for he was nearer their ideal of a great soldier of a great republic of common people.

Methodism in Auburn.

(BY W. H. MCINTOSH.)

From prayer meetings and services held in barn and school houses, in "God's first temples," the native forest, to those in the beautiful and imposing church now completed in Auburn, is a great distance, not only in time, but in circumstances.

It distinctly represents village growth in population and popular belief in the doctrines and practices of Methodism, Baptist, Presbyterian and Lutheran, successively erected handsome and commodious brick churches.

It is fit and timely at this successful achievement of a relatively great work to advert to the humble sources from which Methodism in Auburn had origin and to briefly recall the names of those who contributed to its prosperity.

In 1837, N. L. Thomas and Joseph Miller residing on the Maumee, held near Orangeville this county the first Methodist meeting, and it lasted two days.

Several classes were organized at various points in 1838 by Rev's Coleman and Warner who were the first circuit preachers of the M. E. church in this locality.

The minutes of the first quarterly meeting, conference of St. Joseph mission, Logansport district, held at Auburn, Dec. 21, 1839, show George Beswick, presiding elder; Samuel Reed, missionary; Isaac G. Clark, exhorter; George Monroe and William Day, clerks. The only business transacted was the election of Wesley Park for circuit steward and the lifting of a collection for the elder of $2.45.

Rev. Reed, a young man of superior talents and energy was the first regular Methodist minister in Auburn.

The quarterly conference was held May 22, 1841 at the house of Rufus R. Lounsbery, of Wilmington township; B. Westlake was the elder and N. L. Thomas, of Newville, was local preacher.

The circuit was divided and the first meeting of Auburn circuit, Ft. Wayne district took place Nov. 27, at J. McKee's. The second meeting was held at Auburn, May 14, 1845. I. G. Clark was local preacher and Daniel Altenburg was one of the class leaders. David Furson was charged with visiting on the Sabbath, but it was not substantiated.

The salary paid Elder Westlake Jan. 14, 1843 for first quarter was thirteen dollars and traveling expenses was fifty cents. Growing strength and interest were shown by the appointment of a committee to build a meeting house in the neighborhood of I. Johnston.

On Feb. 24, 1844, Jesse Sparkes was pastor in charge at Auburn and three prosperous Sabbath schools were reported, one at Butler, one at Wesley Chapel and one at Richards' settlement. The receipts from fourteen classes for the quarter were $48.25, of which, the Auburn class contributed $9.45. The number of members in the circuit was 466, of whom 42 were reported as belonging to the Auburn class.

August 26, 1847, the report of Sabbath schools showed schools at Cramer's, Chapell's, Pleasant Hill, Butler, Newville and Auburn. The entire enrollment of scholars was 215. The Auburn school enrolled 60 scholars who during the preceding two months had committed 3908 verses and read 5000 pages. This school had a small library, Butler had a few books and the others had none.

The need of a parsonage at Auburn was felt and Messrs. McKee, Long, Park and Wyatt were appointed a committee to get subscriptions, draft a plan and to secure a building site in the village as soon as three-fourths of the estimated expense of the building was subscribed.

Quarterly collections increased to over $100, and the Auburn class was credited by Elder G. M. Boyd with over one fifth of this sum. Complaint was made that a local preacher, "having received money to pay his house rent," had kept the same, but the reverend was found to have been falsely accused. It was, also, on motion "Resolved that the local brethren be and hereby are requested to pay more attention to study, especially of the grammar and the dictionary." To study language after hard labor during the day was a burden. Exhaustive manual labor is opposed to intense mental effort and fervent piety came as fresh and powerful from the heart of the unschooled pioneer in rude plain speech as from the classic lips of the theological graduate. But the preacher was an educator as well as a minister and his ambitious hearers desiring to improving their diction while learning the way of life, plainly made their wishes known. Estimated expenses were apportioned to classes with suggestion that members be assessed but leaving it optional with all to raise the amount by subscription.

James Sparr was circuit preacher in 1846, and the Auburn Sabbath school society was reported by him to be progressing despite the sickly season, and to have six teachers and 48 scholars.

Elder Boyd presented the project of founding a female seminary in Ft. Wayne under the patronage of the M. E. church, and all present seem to have approved the enterprise.

The enrollment of members for 1846 was 263, and at conference the Bishop was requested to send but one preacher the ensuing year.

Thus briefly, denominational growth has been shown by the record and we turn back to the winter of 1841, when the Methodist class of Auburn had three persons in full membership, viz; Wesley Park, Sophia Park and Fannie Smith. This last named was grandmother of Henry S. Smith, of Norris Chapel. In February 1842, James R. Cosper his wife Mary Cosper and his father David Cosper joined by letter. James R. Cosper is the only survivor of the class.

Meetings were held in a building erected by Park on the present site of John L. Davis' hardware store. A frame school house built by Messrs Beck and McCrum and the old court house were used for worship until the building of a church, some eight years later. Messrs Cole, McKee and Rhodenbaugh were exhorters, conducted services, and later "characters" were examined and they were duly licensed to preach.

I. G. Clark preached in 1843. He was was a young man, married Phebe, daughter of Daniel Moody, and died many years ago. His successor in 1844, was E. Holstock, followed by James Sparr in 1845, Rev. Tilliston in 1846, and Rev. Forbes in 1847, with Rev. Emanuel Hall, then single, as junior preacher, and on his removal elsewhere, the change was made to biennial terms.

Under superintendence of Rev. Samuel Lamb during 1848 and 1849 the old framed building was erected in the latter year. Mr. Park donated the lot, now in part occupied by the new block of buildings on the northwest corner of Cedar and Seventh st. and Rev. Lamb who was by trade a carpenter gave much of his time to the building. The cost was about $1,400 made up by subscriptions of money, labor and material. Messrs Houghton, Brandt, Hoffman and Cosper worked on the house. For many years after its completion, this meeting house was used as a union church, other denominations being too weak to build for themselves. Rev. S. B. Ward frequently held service therein prior to the building of the Baptist church.

During 1850 Rev. J. J. Cooper preached for the society and Rev. Payton in 1851, during the last part of which year church interest experienced a marked decline. The circuit was cut down to three appointments, the Auburn, Cool and Cosper classes, and made a sion. Rev. Hamm was pastor in 1852 and is remembered for his change of sentiment and his subsequent fearless and eloquent advocacy of the abolishment of slavery. Rev. James Sewell returned and served through 1853. In the trying years of 1854 and 1855, Rev Welch preached on Sabbaths and worked as carpenter on the Weaver store, burnt years ago and the site is now occupied by the Kiblinger hardware store. Combining labor of body and mind this faithful minister maintained his family and kept alive religious interest among the faithful few. Rev. Ayers was pastor in 1856 and E. S. Preston in 1857. Rev. Dean followed in 1858 but owing to dissatisfaction resigned his charge and moved to a small farm near Kendallville. Thomas Comstock filled out his year. Rev. Weller was pastor in 1859 and 1860 and Rev. Stephen Clark in 1861. Rev. C. W. Lynch came in 1862 and remained two years. He was an eloquent preacher and in stirring war times, a staunch unionist. Several left the church dissatisfied with the fervid loyal utterances of the minister. Rev. J. W. Miller was pastor in 1864, C. Hover in 1865 and E. Hall in '66 and '67. Rev William Comstock succeeded Hall in 1868 and 1869. Rev. E. Hall was returned and served a part of 1870.

Rev. A. W. Lamport filled the year and remained till the spring of 1872. He was young, ardent and especially popular with the young people. Sermons were brief and full of stirring bursts of impassioned speech and quite a revival marked his pastorate.

Rev. A. Cone filled the pulpit for the next two years. He was a sound thinker of a scholarly turn of mind, and both form and subject of delivery suggests the lawyer as well as the divine. Mrs. Cone is remembered as a talented, well-educated woman who took a leading part in revivals and prayer meetings.

Rev. J. W. Welch returned to Auburn in April, 1874 and remained three years He found a great advancement in the society and he was enabled to give all his time to advancing the interest of the church. He was emphatically a worker, and during his ministry, extended to three years, strengthened the financial resources of the society and deepened interest in religion. It was during the last year of his service here, that the old church was moved to its late pleasant, more retired location on southeast corner Sixth and VanBuren streets. An addition to the church of great convenience as a lecture room, was also built at this time. His successor was Rev. J. E. Ervin whose stay was also, three years From 1877 till 1879, the church if it did not measurably decline, seems not to have made progress. Rev. Ervin was not what is called a magnetic person but his delivery was good and his sermons evidenced much thought. The family found the parsonage which stood to the north of the old church site on lot 50, inconvenient and unsuitable otherways and it was accordingly moved to a good position south of the church, a far better location. During this season, it has again been moved, improved, and occupies a position vacated by the old church on the north west corner of the lot

Rev. H. J. Norris came to Auburn in 1879 and served three years. No other minister seemed more acceptable nor left on his departure more, or warmer friends. Everybody liked him. He was popular alike as citizen in society, and as preacher in the pulpit. Strong and clear of speech, brief in matter, full of thought, accompanied by pleasing delivery it was restful and profitable to hear him.

Rev. W. H. Daniels was pastor one year, and his polished and agreeable manners, his able and impressive discourse, and the charming domesticity of his fine family, endeared him to all. By some strange oversight, the church forgot to ask the conference to return him and the church at Peru which knew his value, in a petition bearing three hundred signatures asked that he be sent to them, and so Auburn lost him.

Rev. Chester W. Church came to Auburn in 1883 and filled the pulpit very acceptably. In the winter of 1884 a revival began and at its close fully sixty probationers were admitted to the church whose membership was increased to one hundred and forty.

Rev. Church resigned, from serious ill health, Oct., 1885, and was succeeded by Rev. C. H. Clippinger, who filled out the year.

Rev. H. M. Lamport was appointed to Auburn in 1886, and from that date till the present has been a faithful and energetic worker. A mere statement of the growth of the church during his extended pastorate, is an eloquent history of the patience and zeal of his ministry.

At date of Rev. Lamport's appointment to this charge, there were 207 members in the church. He has received from probation and by letter, 219, and so has more than doubled the membership in the five years. There have been, however, losses by removals and deaths to the number of 76, leaving a present enrollment of 350 full members, and a class of 25 probationers.

The Sabbath school in 1884 enrolled one hundred seventy-five scholars and nineteen teachers. The present enrollment is 302 scholars, with 19 teachers.

Among superintendents have been James W. Case, W. L. Meese, who served six years, M. B. Willis, M. F. Long, John W. Baxter, W. P. Harter, W. J. Bowman, and the present incumbent, C. M. Merica, now county superintendent of schools.

Rev. Lamport has, during the five years, baptized 66 persons and has married 55 couples.

The church has paid during his pastorate for ministerial support as follows: pastor, $4,000; presiding elder, $400; bishop, $50; total $4,450. For benevolent missions, etc., $1,118; current expenses, $660; Sunday school supplies, $300; making a grand total of $6,528. If the vitality of the church may be judged by the liberality of its members, the time had surely arrived when they might hopefully anticipate more commodious quarters, and take measures preparatory to a new church building.

During the fall of 1888, lot No. 50 was sold to Messrs. Gandy & Nickey for $3,000; and the money placed at interest has added $500 to the principal

The old church building which had for so many years served the people well had become too small to accommodate the demands of increased membership, and the official board in the fall of 1889 decided to build a new church, either in 1890 or 1891, and upon the return of Rev. Lamport by the conference in the spring of 1890 for a fifth year, it was determined to inaugurate the work.

Messrs. Albert Robbins, Michael Boland, W. P. Harter, E. Zimmerman, and Rev. H. M. Lamport, were appointed a building committee, who received plans and specifications, and having accepted those of Charles H. Hoffman, of Indianapolis, gave to him the contract of building the house.

Work began in the latter part of May, 1890, and was pushed to completion. The contract price for building the church, including foundations, furnaces, chandeliers and pews was $15,000.

The stone for foundation walls was obtained from the quarries of Stony Point, Michigan, and is of superior quality.

The brick was furnished by Messrs. John and Herman Groscup. Messrs. Bumpus and Picker laid the brick, and the slating was done by parties from Warsaw.

The building consists of a basement partitioned into dining room, kitchen, furnace and fuel rooms. The foundations are as those of a fortress, and its strong and massive walls promise to endure for generations The auditorium is 42x62 feet with seating capacity for 500; lecture room 24x42 feet, with gallery 14x42 feet off south side, has sittings estimated at 300, giving a capacity for 800. Communication is effected between auditorium and lecture rooms by means of rising doors.

Pews are arranged in semi-circular form; the pulpit is on the north side of audience room; to the rear of which is the choir and organ loft. To the left rear is the pastor's study 14x17 feet, and to right rear is a church parlor of like dimensions.

The arrangement for pure air is systematic and complete. The apparatus consists of foul air shafts in chimney and ventilators in ceiling. These in connection with furnace registers enable janitors to speedily and effectively supply pure, warm air.

The auditorium and lecture rooms have been neatly frescoed under the superintendence of Mr. Cover, of Fort Wayne. The ceiling is unique in design, being broken up in form of irregular triangles. The windows are of cathedral glass of which three are of large size, A memorial window in remembrance of Aunt Abby Latson, an old and respected member of the church, now deceased, lights the lecture room and looks out toward the site of her humble home.

There are two towers, one stands on the southeast, the other on the southwest corners. The former is 70, the latter named 130 feet in height, and combined they present a beautiful appearance.

In the larger tower has been placed a fine bell weighing 1,317 lbs. It is pitched in key of G, and the tone is deep, musical and sonorous.

The organ loft is occupied by a two manual pipe organ of comparatively large proportions, which is expected to add much to the attractiveness and harmony of Divine worship.

The organ is from the manufactury of Carl Barkhoff, of Salem, O., and in this connection may be mentioned the industry and self-denial of the ladies of the church, who by various novel expedients contributed quite a sum towards defraying expense of purchase of bell, organ and carpeting.

The entire cost of the building and its accessories aggregates a large sum which the liberality of members and public spirit of citizens of Auburn have done much to realize; and it is hoped that the society may enjoy their beautiful and commodious home without feeling the incumbus of debt,—their church all their own.

It may be further said that the Methodist church of Auburn, from the infancy of the village to its present substantial size, has ever been active, not alone in religion but in educational, temperance and all other reforms. Its efforts in common with the M. E. church north, to sustain the American Union in time of trial were conspicuous. Satisfied with her own polity and forms, this church has ever been ready to engage in such fellowship of christian labor as shall tend to the furtherance of religious influence.

The efficacy of the Sabbath school has been marked in its preparation for the duties of the church, of the children of her families, and of those themselves not connected with any religious denomination.

May the energies of the society be farther awakened and stimulated by its successful completion of its house of worship, and may it stand strong and influential in its saving and salutary influence.

The Salary Bill.

If the senate agrees with the House on the salary bill, it will be made to go into effect, when the officers now elected have finished their terms. That means that the clerk in some counties, and the auditor in others, will not be affected for six years. The most of the offices, however, will change in a year from next fall, so it will not be so very far off after all. Mr. Kelley, Dr. Teal and others voted to have it go into effect this summer, when other laws will. But, the majority feared the action of the republican supreme court, which is said to be watching this bill for some flaw, by which they can kick it over, and so leave the democrats without having accomplished this reform. It has been claimed and there may be some reason for it, that it could not be made to affect the salaries of officers already elected, and it was this doubt, that made the House put off the date of its going into effect It is perhaps, under the circumstances, the wisest thing to do. In any case the situation is awkward, but we have no doubt, the members did what they thought was for the best and what was fair all around. A change as great as the bill proposes, is full of serious difficulties, and we feel it our duty to concede that the members know more about it than we do. And we believe the people will take this view of it.

The bill was left mainly as it came from the committee on fees and salaries except to drop out the clause relating to county superintendent, as this difficult office was already by far, the poorest paid of any, even under the proposed reductions of the new law. A special committee was then selected to examine every feature of the bill to see that nothing remained in it that would give an excuse for the wholly republican supreme court to declare it unconstitutional, as they did so many needed laws two years ago. This committee met Saturday and Monday and came to the conclusion that the bill must state more exactly what each officer and deputy is to receive, and that the pay of deputies cannot be left to county commissioners, for the constitution gives them no such powers. So all this part of the bill was worked over. Each of the 92 counties must have a separate list of salaries for its offices and deputies. It was also thought there must be no uncertainty left in as to the "$50 for each additional 1000 people," and they will settle the full salary. The bill thus changed was to come up yesterday, when it will undoubtedly pass the House, though it may be discussed a day or so, and may be somewhat changed. But this gives the substance. Then it goes to the Senate. It will likely be finished in ample time, before the session ends March 9

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes sleep all night, cough gone, gained 17 pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

Notice of Hearing of Ditch Petition.

In the matter of the petition of Charles Kelley et al, of Smithfield township, DeKalb county, state of Indiana, notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed with the Auditor of DeKalb County, State of Indiana, and viewers have been appointed who have viewed and reported said view which is on file in my office. The hearing of said petition upon its merits will be on Tuesday, the 3d day of March, 1891, the same being the 2d day of their March term, 1891.

The prayer of said petition is that a ditch be constructed on the following route to-wit:

Beginning 400 feet north and 14 feet east of the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section twentysix, Smithfield township, DeKalb county, state of Indiana, and from thence as follows:

No.	Course	Distance
1	south	[illegible] feet
2	south 20 degrees east	100 feet
3	south 73 degrees east	1205 feet
4	south 38 degrees east	435 feet

The Arions start out this week on their travels with Van Bennett, the "Kansas Cyclone" who spoke in this county last week. The name "Arion" will be dropped and they will adopt the name "Hoosier Quartet", as a more local and distinctive one. So hereafter we shall hear from them as "The Hoosiers". The boys are good singers and we hope they may have a pleasant and successful time, and do much good.

The board of directors of the Auburn Fair will be called together to-morrow, Friday Feb. 20, to discuss once more, the time of holding the fair. At the time, they met before, they put the date back to Sept. 7 to get out of the way of the Montpelier fair. The Montpelier folks met and did the same thing, so that both are still on the same date. It will be settled for good this week.

With the adjournment of Congress on March 4th our Congressman, Hon. C. A. O. McClellan will return to his home at Auburn, when he will be found at his office to attend to any legal business which may be intrusted to him. "Sam.—I say Tom, where did you get that elegant fitting suit of clothes? If I can get it, I want one just like it."

Tom—"Why Sam, you know Peter Young on West 7th St., don't you?"

Sam.—"Yes, but I never went much on tailor clothes. I always bought hand-me-downs."

Tom.—"Well, if you want a suit just like mine, you'll have to get Peter Young to make it. He knows what you need and will fit you out accordingly." 8tf

There was a pleasant surprise given to Mr. Abram Beaty, of the South Side, Saturday evening. It was his birthday and about twenty of his friends and relatives met at his residence on South Van Buren St., and engaged in such pastimes and gaities as were appropriate to the place and occasion. At the proper hour the little company of merry-makers returned to their homes with joyful hearts and an earnst wish that the generous host may enjoy many more such meetings.

"Amateur Theatricals in New York City," as they appear to a professional actor, is the subject of an entertaining article to appear in the forthcoming number of Harper's Weekly. It is written by Malcolm Bell, and will be appropriately illustrated from photographs. The same number will contain a paper by Casper W. Whitney, describing the new game of "Water Polo." Among the illustrations will be a picture, drawn by T. de Thulstrup, of the late conference of the Sioux chiefs with Secretary Noble at Washington.

It will be remembered that some time ago G. A. Maurer had the misfortune to cut one of his feet, while chopping wood. The wound was of a very dangerous character, and required immediate attention. He was at once taken to Dr. Nusbaum's office, where the wound was dressed and the gash sewed up. The young man suffered but little pain, comparatively, and is now able to resume his labors. He is rather profuse in his praise of the Doctor's skill as a surgeon, and properly adds his testimony to that of many others, who, through misfortune and accident, have been brought to test this physician's ability.

Ed. Morell will locate at Wolcottville, and go into the foundry business there. He has been in that business here for many years, and was the original founder of the present company, the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works. We can assure the Wolcottville people they have secured a good citizen, good business man and good mechanic.

The members of the L. L. C. will meet this week on Saturday evening at 7:30 with Mrs. Elias Zimmerman by special invitation. She has also very kindly invited the husbands of the club to be present and enjoy the exercises of the evening, which will be in the nature of a celebration of Washington's birthday. The program is as follows: roll call; responses about America; song, Columbia; Hatchets, Mrs. Schaab.

It will be seen in our article on the M. E. church that mention is made of the memorial window for Aunt Abby Latson. Her will directed that her property be sold, and after paying a few debts, and some small legacies, the rest be divided equally between the M. E. church and the Odd Fellows, who had been kind to her. This was done, and the church received about $67 which was very properly remembered in the window mentioned.

There are a great many rumors afloat in regard to the Ohio line. It is claimed that recent examination proves it to be incorrect, and that a line properly drawn will run into Indiana at the north, cutting off quite a strip from DeKalb and other counties. Some say it would take in a part of Waterloo and Angola. Gov. Hovey says if Ohio gets a slice on the east, he will insist on a slice off of the west side, in which case we will get a part of Chicago. However, if there is really anything wrong about the line, it is likely it will be adjusted so as not to change the present boundaries, as that would cause trouble, expense and confusion.

An alarm of fire about half past four Monday afternoon called out the fire department in a hurry. In a few seconds there were more people on the streets, than Porter's census gives Auburn credit for. The two big, white teams went furiously down the streets southward, where it was learned that the Nick. Ensley residence, now occupied by S. D. Hanna, was on fire. It was soon got under control, and without much damage to the building. There was some furniture destroyed, as well as carpets and similar household goods, and the glass in a few windows was broken. The fire caught from an oil stove which Mr. Hanna had lighted to warm the room as Mrs. H., and the children were to return at 5:30 from Ft. Wayne. How the stove caught fire or exploded, is not known, as no one was in the house at the time. Now let us have the electric fire alarm put into working order as soon as we can, so the department may get word sooner. As it now is some one must run the whole length of the town, before even the bell can be rung. Our boys are prompt to turn out, and the engine gets there in fine shape, but a few minutes might be saved. And a few minutes will some day make a big difference with some one.

Public Sale.

There will be a public sale of farming material on the Thomas Sommers' farm a half mile north of town on Saturday, Feb. 21, beginning at 10 a. m. There will be horses, cows, hogs, hay, grain, farming tools, etc., etc. Remember the date and place.

Miss Lettie Meese is at Ft. Wayne this week perfecting herself in playing on the pipe organ, as she is to play the big new organ in the M. E. church at the dedication Sunday.

The Presbyterians propose making extensive improvements and changes in their church property this summer, to include probably the heater, and a new organ as well as a parsonage.

Rev. T. C. Smith has been absent from home helping hold a series of meetings at Wolcottville for some days and may not be able to attend the M. E. dedication as he intended to do.

The Charles Case Post at Garrett held their fifth annual ball at that place, in Wagner's new opera house, Tuesday evening of this week. We acknowledge receipt of an invitation to attend.

Miss Alza Ralston entertained a number of young people on Monday evening in honor of her cousin, Miss Alza Reynolds, of Butler, who has been visiting here for a couple of weeks. Miss Reynolds returned home Tuesday.

Mrs. J. M. Widney's mother has been here for a week or two, Mrs. W. having been in poor health. They went to North Baltimore, Ohio, Monday, where Mrs Widney will remain a month or two with her sister who reside there.

Rev. D. F Kain has the thanks of the COURIER force for delivering an abundance of fine cake, sent by our friend Kagey, on the occasion of his daughter's wedding noted elsewhere. Printers have a fine, delicate appreciation of good things.

Mrs. Brinkerhoff, wife of James Brinkerhoff died at their residence on South Main street Saturday night after an illness of about two weeks. The funeral was held at the M. E. church Tuesday at 2 p. m., Mr. Lamport officiating. The interment was in the new "Woodlawn" cemetery south of town.

No one should fail to patronize Miss Wiant's entertainment this evening. She has few equals in the country and then the cause is such a good one. Remember how many times we have tried to help get a much needed library for our school. It will be discouraging if we fail this time.

The reception at Garrett last Tuesday evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Britton, was a grand affair. The ladies who provided the supper, laid over 300 plates and the guests were all made welcome, the usual whole-hearted style of Garrett people. Mr. Britton received a fine watch, worth $215, and Mrs. Britton a silver water set costing $58. The meeting was in Hunsel's Hall, and those present, say it has seldom been equaled in that town.

Mrs. Peter Stutz last week received her benefit or insurance money, $2,000 from the benevolent order known as the "Catholic Knights of America," of which her husband was a member. He had joined them a few years before his death, and had paid in all, into the treasury of the society about $260. Mrs. Stutz was left in rather destitute circumstances, but this generous sum will place her at once above want, and provide a maintenance for her little family. The promptness of this payment speaks well for the order and recommends them more than ever, to the confidence and good will of the public.

Wedding Chimes.

One of the most interesting weddings of the many this winter was that on Tuesday at the fine country home of our old friend C. B. Kagey in Richland township. On that day his daughter, Miss Nancy Belle Kagey was united in marriage to Charles E. M. Walker, of the same township. Rev. D. F. Kain, of the Lutheran church in Auburn, performed the ceremony that united these two young people whose future promises so much of happiness. There were a few guests, mostly relatives of the two families, and a grand dinner was served such as one would expect in the Kagey mansion on such an occasion. The bride was richly and tastily attired, and looked charming on this, the most interesting occasion of her life, and the happy pair began married life under more than ordinarily encouraging circumstances. Both families are warm friends of the COURIER and of course the young couple have our heartiest good wishes. Among the friends who attended, were Mr. and Mrs. John Treesh, of Auburn, who are relatives of the bride.

ADMIRAL DAVID D. PORTER, died at his home in the city of Washinton last Friday morning. He had been ill for some time. He was 76. He had been in the naval service with his father—Commodore David Porter, when a child, and entered the naval academy in 1829. He was in the service when he died as as the highest officer of the navy, but had not been given hard work for some time.

THE Butler Record, in commenting on the egg business, says that "farmers have produced that much more eggs since the McKinley bill went into effect." We suppose this means that the hens were not doing their level best, till McKinley came out with his encouraging protection to home industries. Ridiculous as this may seem, it is no more so, than many of the other claims the high tax organs put forth.

BRAZIL is the first nation to ask for reciprocity. She says she will now give up all import duties on American goods that are shipped into their country if the United States will do the same. Brazil ships to us several articles on which a duty is collected, though their most valuable products already come into the United States free. If she lets our products in free, it will be an advantage for our manufacturers by opening up a livelier trade but would benefit farmers, only in the line of wheat and flour.

IT costs something to make experiments with heavy cannon. The government, however don't seem to mind this, and every time they fire off a 10-inch steel gun, the steel shot costs $287.50 and the charge of powder $69.12. Then there is the pay for a dozen or so of men who do the work, besides the interest and final waste of the money value of the gun, A steel 10 inch cannon costs over $30,000 A 20-inch gun costs $300,000, while one 20-inch steel shot costs $2,315 and the charge of powder, $548. And we don't even kill a rabbit with them, nor are we likely to kill any.

THERE has been quite a lively discussion over a letter written by Henry Watterson of the Louisville Courier Journal, to Gov. Hill, urging the latter to accept the senatorship and so get out of Cleveland's way for the presidency. He plainly told Hill, that the people, nine out of ten wanted Cleveland and he, Hill, could do the party a service by taking the senatorship and getting out of Cleveland's way. It happened, anyhow, that Hill allowed himself to be made senator, but when Watterson's letter was published, he denied any knowledge of it. Then Watterson wrote a second letter, admitting that he had actually written the other. Hill then gave his reasons for his first denial, saying he had not received the letter, and did not believe Watterson had written it, as he should not have published it without his, Hill's consent. So the matter stands, and there is likely to be a coldness between the two men. In the meantime, the people can afford to wait till '92, and will then have plenty of good material from which to select a candidate.

Our Sick.

We are having our share of sickness this winter, though some of it is of a chronic nature. The "grippe" is quite prevalent and many have bad colds.

Mrs. Fair has been sick several weeks but is improving.

Mrs. Hogue remains about the same.

Mrs. Henry Ford has been quite sick. It is something like lung fever

Miss Alda Barclay is no better.

Addie McCord has had another serious sickness. Monday she seemed some better.

Mrs. Davenport who has been sick so long is said to be somewhat better.

Wilson Feagler is very sick with lung fever.

Farmers' Institute at Waterloo.

We hope every farmer, who can spare the time, would attend these institutes, for it is the presence, and active help of practical farmers, that will make them valuable. A farm cannot be run on theory alone, any more than any other business can. We believe these institutes will do good, if they are properly conducted. At the one held in Auburn, we heard many valuable suggestions, and only regretted that more people were not present to be benefited by what was said and done. Now, people will not be as busy as then, and we look to see a good attendance at Waterloo, next week, Feb. 25 and 26.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. OUR NEWS SUMMARY.

THE STEAMER SHERLOCK GOES TO PIECES AT CINCINNATI.

Forty People Floated Down the River on the Cabin Deck—Funeral of Admiral Porter—A Murder Mystery at Terre Haute, Ind.

A River Horror.

The most sensational steamboat disaster Cincinnati has known for years occurred Wednesday night. The great steamboat Thomas Sherlock, bound for New Orleans, swung out with 400 tons of freight, twenty-one passengers and crew of thirty-five or forty. As the boat swung toward the B. & O. bridge a mile below her starting point, a sharp and sudden wind pushed her out of her course and thrust her with full speed against the great stone piers of the bridge. There was an awful crash, followed by a mad lurch as the boat stumbled forward and swung into the flooded channel. Almost instantly settled down until only the hurricane deck was above water. On to this frail support the human freight pushed and fought its way. A tug came alongside, and the half-dead people were quickly transferred to the tug. A roll-call was taken, and it was found that Mrs. J. McLeane, of Pittsburgh, had been crushed to death. The third clerk and two children, and ten or fifteen of the crew are missing. One of the missing children was found dead. The child is the niece of Mrs. McLeane. One of the roustabouts states that at least half a dozen are dead.

Porter Buried.

The funeral ceremonies over the remains of Admiral Porter, the highest officer in the American navy at the time of his death, took place from his residence in Washington. The event was very imposing, the greatest honors known to naval regulations being paid to the dead hero. The officers of the Government, including the President, members of the cabinet, senators and representatives, justices of Supreme Court, army officers of every rank, vice admirals and numberless naval officers, members of diplomatic corps and men distinguished in letters and science, were present.

The Confession Revised.

The committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church on the revision of the confession of faith, after a very harmonious session in Washington, lasting several days, has completed its work and adjourned. The changes made have generally met with unanimous approval. The work will be reported to the assembly in Detroit next May, and by it referred to the presbyteries for action. The changes made in the confession have been of great importance, but have in no way impaired the integrity of the system or doctrine so long held by the church.

Serious Wreck.

A mixed passenger and freight train on the Chester and Lenoir narrow guage railroad jumped the track on the trestle two miles south of Newton, N. C. The killed were: Fireman J. Hoag, of Chester, S. C.; H. N. Morrow, of Cleveland County, N. C., and W. W. Ross, of Chester, S. C. The seriously injured were: Frank Coulter, Catawaba, N. C.; Conductor C. C. Dunlap, of Chester, S. C.; M. Johnson, of Gastonia, N. C., and the Rev. J. M. Little, of Dallas, N. C. The dead and injured were taken to Newton, where the injured persons received every care.

Soldiers Asphyxiated.

Berlin special: A whole squad of the Bavarian regiment came near being asphyxiated. The squad is garrisoned at Dieusze, Alsace. At the roll-call not one of the non-commissioned officers had put in an appearance. An investigation was ordered which showed that the men were overcome by gas. The One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Regiment was summoned and succeeded in rescuing most of the men. Three are dead, and forty are severely ill.

Clear Case of Murder.

Early the other morning the body of Henry Slade, a German, of Terre Haute, Ind., was found stiff in death within a few feet of his front gate with a bullet hole through his left breast. Slade was the night engineer at the Wabash rolling mill and had left his home. Shortly after his departure his wife heard a pistol shot near by, but paid no attention to it. It is a clear case of murder but the police have not the slightest clue to work on.

Natural Gas Explosion.

An explosion of natural gas occurred in a residence at 26 River avenue, Allegheny, Pa., occupied by Owen McLaughlin and family. The interior of the dwelling-house was almost totally destroyed. The inmates were all badly hurt, but probably not fatally. The house was surrounded by water from the Allegheny River. The injured were taken from the wrecked building in boats.

A Train Burned.

Near Churchville, N. Y., on the New York Central Railroad, a train consisting of thirty cars, mostly oil tanks, broke in two on a down grade. In coming together, five of the cars were overturned, spilling the oil about. It was ignited from the engine, and before assistance could be had, the entire train was consumed. Engineer Chapman, of Dewitt, was badly burned.

Ryan Wins.

Dan Needham, of California, and Tom Ryan of Chicago, fought a prize fight at Minneapolis, for the light weight championship and a purse of $2,500. Ryan won in the seventy-sixth round.

Thousands of Convicts.

Superintendent Porter, of the Census Bureau, has issued a bulletin upon the subject of convicts in penitentiaries and States' prisons, which shows the number of convicts in the United States on June 1, 1890, to have been 45,233 against 30,659 on June 1, 1880.

Buried in a Snowslide.

At Silverton, Col., Thomas Owens, E. Horns, and Sam Hilton, three miners, were buried in a snowslide in Belcher Mountains. The men had finished their day's work and were on their way home when the accident occurred.

Crashed Into a Car.

Pittsburgh special: As the Washington and Pittsburgh express, on the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad, familiarly known as the "Pan Handle," was nearing this city, a huge rock, loosened from the hillside by the heavy rains, fell from the bluff known as "the Duquesne hill," and crashed into the side of the third coach from the engine with frightful velocity. The train was rushing at a speed of about ten miles an hour, but was brought to a sudden standstill when struck by the hugh boulder. Miss Clara Fleming, aged 18, residing at Washington, Pa., a student at Duff's college, this city, was sitting at the window where the rock crashed into the car, and was instantly killed, her head being terribly mangled.

"HOLD UP YOUR HANDS!"

Was the Command of a Bold Masked Man, as He Scooped in the Bank Funds.

Minneapolis special: A bold but unsuccessful attempt was made to rob the Citizens' Bank, on Nicollet avenue, at 9:20 o'clock the other morning. Assistant Cashier McQuaig was seated at his desk, which is located within the second enclosure behind the counter, when he was startled by the stern command from some one directly over him: "Hold up your hands you d——." He turned his head and saw standing over him a man, his face masked and a revolver pointed directly at him and close to his head. There was no one present with Mr. McQuaig except a book-keeper named Gray, who was standing in front of McQuaig's desk and with his back to him. The man had the lower part of his face covered with a white handkerchief but Gray thought he knew him instantly as a man named W. H. Adams, who was formerly janitor of the bank. The man climbed over the rail quickly after ordering McQuaig and Gray into a side alcove. He dashed to the front enclosure, where a big valise lay open, grabbed it and with a side watch on the two men who were held in the alcove, tipped a tray of silver into the grip, and opening a drawer, threw in a pile of bills, closed the grip, and left the office hurridly, rushed to the front door and disappeared. Mr. McQuaig followed with a rush, and running to the door yelled: "Police! the bank is robbed." Everybody halted, turned and made a grab for the man. Adams, as he saw the crowd following, fired his revolver over his shoulder and above the heads of the crowd. He was finally knocked down and jailed.

BOILER EXPLOSION.

A Large Number of Employes Buried in the Ruins.

Quebec special: The boiler in the Quebec Worsted Factory at Hare Point exploded, completely destroying the engine house and half of the building. A large number of employes were buried in the ruins. So far thirty injured have been taken out and the work of rescue is going on rapidly. The works have been closed down for two weeks while the boilers and machinery were being overhauled and refitted. Operations were to have been resumed, and about three hundred of the operatives were on hand, but owing to some cause the machinery was not started and they were dismissed. Most of them went back to their homes, but many remained about the building, a number keeping in the vicinity of the engine room for the sake of warmth. About 9:45 o'clock there was a sudden explosion, which completely wrecked the engine and dye houses and demolished a large part of the main building. The noise of the explosion was heard all over the city, and soon a great crowd gathered about the scene. The work of rescuing those buried in the ruins and recovering the bodies of dead was at once commenced. The fire brigade was summoned, but fortunately the horrors of fire were not added to the calamity. The excitement was so great and the crowd so enormous that Battery B was ordered out to assist the police in maintaining order. About twenty dead have already been taken out, besides as many badly injured.

GIBSON GUILTY.

Damaging Evidence Against the Whisky Trust Secretary.

Peoria special: There are startling revelations in the conspiracy of George J. Gibson to blow up the Schufeldt distillery in Chicago. It is the general belief here that George J. Gibson, Secretary of the Whisky Trust, is well on his way to Europe, and, aided by plenty of money, will escape. The only trust man found who would talk said Gibson has been gone since Thursday night, and would not return, adding that the bail bond of $20,000 was a bagatelle, and considered very cheap. It was thought best to get away before any further charges were made and the bonds increased by action of the State authorities.

It was found that Gibson, eight months ago, purchased at a mining store on Lincoln avenue, near the Kickapoo Coal Mines, fifty pounds of dynamite. About a month ago he bought a quantity of bisulphide of carbon and phosphorus at a drug store. He learned the secret of the compound from a chemist, who he frequently invited to dine with him, and invariably led to talk on the subject of chemicals of this sort. Finally he had his son go to the chemist and had him prepare a small portion of the mixture for experimental purposes. It is supposed he purchased the ingredients and compounded the mixture for Dewar. The formula arranged for a very heavy proportion of phosphorus, which would ignite on cloth or paper freely.

Don't Know Mamma.

Six years ago Maud Davids, then a girl 7 years of age, was kidnapped while playing in the street in front of her home in Gresham, Wis. During the six years that the child has been missing from her home her mother has never ceased searching for her daughter. The other day officers located the child at the house of Mrs. Alice Campbell in Chicago. Mrs. Campbell seemed so much attached to the child, and the little one begged so to be allowed to remain with her, that the officers did not have the heart to take her away from her benefactress, but have notified the mother of the whereabouts of her daughter. Little Maud tells a most interesting story of her experiences since she was stolen from her home. From Gresham she was taken to Milwaukee by a man and his wife, whom she describes as being "very bad people," and turned out on the street and compelled to beg or steal a certain amount each day. If she returned at night without the stipulated amount she was cruelly beaten. After about six months of a life of that sort she was deserted by her kidnappers and compelled to beg for her own living. Her pretty face and bright manners attracted the attention of a charitably inclined woman, who brought her to Chicago and secured her a home in the family of Mrs. Campbell.

Fire in the New York Postoffice Building.

A fire broke out in the lower portion of the New York postoffice and great consternation followed, and simultaneously the electric lights went out. After a heroic struggle the fire was confined to the rear and lower portions of the building and Superintendent Hall, with the aid of his clerks, succeeded in removing the bulk of the mail to another portion of the building, remote from the fire. The mail matter which suffered the most was newspapers. Fireman Maurice Stack, of engine twenty-seven, was overcome by the smoke. He was taken out by two comrades and upon reaching fresh air recovered. There were two news boys taken out of the ventilator on Mail street, where they had crawled to sleep. Their names were Guissippi Micholi, 14 years old and John Gervescot aged 17. The former was badly burned and cannot live.

Quay's Denial.

Senator Quay made a statement in the Senate denying numerous charges that have been recently circulated about him. After naming the different charges of importance Mr. Quay concluded as follows: "I have endeavored to answer every specific charge of misfeasance or malfeasance that could be extracted from careful perusal of the mass of direct falsehoods, confused statements, innuendo, insinuation, and cunning implications, that with an industry worthy of a better cause, has been presented for my destruction. I deny them seviatim and in tote. They are false and foul to the core."

MORE MINERS

Lose Their Lives in a Pennsylvania Death Trap.

Scottwood (Pa.) special: The Moyer mine, owned by W. J. Rainey, is on fire. The fire was kindled by a miner accidentally dropping a naked lamp at the bottom of the shaft, which is 200 feet deep. The lamp exploded, igniting the accumulated mine gas, which exploded with a terrific report and scattered the flame in every direction. The mine machinery and workings caught fire and the large fan used for ventilating the mine was totally destroyed, and the interior of the mine seems to be one mass of furious flame. A large number of men are at work turning water courses into the mine. Meutz creek has been turned from its course into the mine shaft and is pouring a large quantity of water into the seething abyss. The Moyer coke plant, one of the largest in the region, employed 500 men. The men at this point have refused to join the ranks of the strikers, and the works were running full. Fifty miners were at work at the time of the explosion. All escaped except four who are missing.

Perished in the Flames.

A terrible calamity occurred near the village of St. Albert Ontario. A family named La France lived in a small house. It consisted of old Mr. and Mrs. La France, their daughter, her husband, Azarie Chartrand, and two children. Chartrand and his wife were away over night. The house took fire, old Mr. La France awakening to find himself surrounded by the flames and smoke. He struggled to the window and jumped out, injuring himself severely. Mrs. La France and the two children were burned to death in the house. The neighbors could do nothing to extinguish the fire, which burned itself out. Old Mr. La France was found in a shed almost frozen to death. He has not since been able to speak, and there is little hope of his recovery.

Peacemaker Killed.

Abe Neal gave a dance at Madison, Ind., where beer and blood flowed freely. Wing Stewart and Reed Potter, notorious characters, put in an appearance and soon raised a row, the two attacking John Alberts. Neal demanded order, and finally drew a shotgun and fired at Potter. Missing him, the load of shot struck Orrell Seling, a young man of 22, who was trying to quiet the riot, producing a horrible wound in the abdomen, lacerating the intestines for five inches. Recovery is impossible. Neal gave himself up, and is in jail awaiting the result of Seling's injuries.

Very Slick Thieves.

London special: A clerk named McKenzie, a youth about seventeen years of age, was adroitly robbed of a satchel containing 11,590 pounds in the Bank of England notes, of denominations ranging from 1,000 pounds downward. The thieves were of genteel appearance, in fact rather dudish, and the police believe that they are expert American criminals, who have been watching young McKenzie. They got away with the money.

Unconstitutional.

The special House committee of the Indiana Legislature, to which was referred the fee and salary bill, will report it unconstitutional and recommend the entire reconstruction of the bill so as to name each county and seperately the salary of each office in every county.

The Van Wert Case.

After being out thirty-six hours the jury has found H. Rodehouse, the Cincinnati, Jackson and Mackinaw fireman, who killed his engineer in the cab of the engine last July, guilty of assault and battery. This ends the most notable criminal case ever tried in the courts of Van Wert County, Ohio.

Found Dead in a Hay-Mow.

John Ludlow, aged 55 years, a well-known carpenter and contractor of Muncie, Ind., was found dead in the hay-mow of Lane & Ullery's barn. Ludlow was finely educted and at one time quite wealthy, but lost his money by strong drink. He leaves a destitute family.

Riot Between Soldiers and Butchers.

Advices by mail report a riot in Santa Cruz between the soldiery and butchers employed in the slaughter houses. The soldiers used rifles and the butchers their knives. As a consequence twelve or thirteen men were killed and a score more wounded.

Gibson Indicted.

George H. Gibson, Secretary of the Whisky Trust, has been indicted by the grand jury at Chicago, for purchasing and disposing of explosives with the intention that they should be used for the destruction of the Shufeldt distillery.

Charged With Stealing $63,000.

William H. M. Sistare, once a banker and broker of New York, was arrested by Detective Sergeant Crowley, charged with having swindled August Heckscher, a Philadelphia man, out of $63,000.

A Senator in South Dakota.

The South Dakota Legislature has elected J. H. Kyle (independent) United States Senator by a vote of 75 against 55 for Sterling.

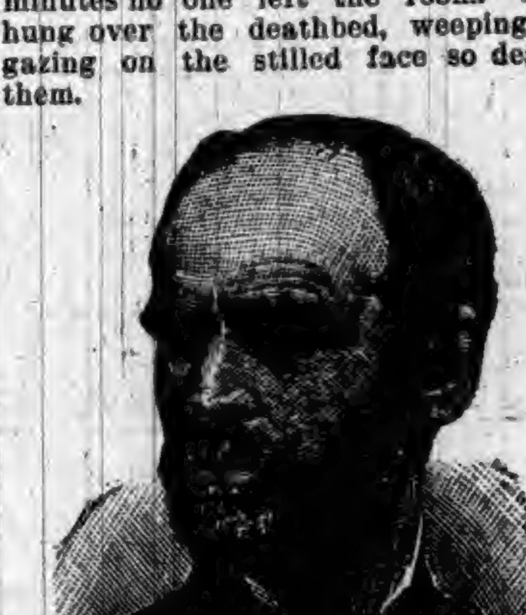
GENERAL SHERMAN.

HIS MARCH TO THE SEA OF ETERNITY.

Surrounded by His Family He Passes Away—"Like a Babe Falling Asleep," He Answers the Summons of the Dread Messenger.

Gen. William T. Sherman has breathed his last. The end came peacefully and quietly at 1:50 Saturday afternoon, at his residence in New York City, while the General lay unconscious, surrounded by all the members of his family except Thomas Ewing Sherman, who is now on the ocean on his way to this country. There was just a slight quiver of the muscles of the face, the soldier ceased to breath, and all was over. Although all hope had been abandoned for hours, the shock was great to the mourning friends who were at the bedside, and for many minutes no one left the room. They hung over the deathbed, weeping and gazing on the stilled face so dear to them.



Then young Thomas Ewing left the house and his appearance, even before he spoke a word, was the signal to those who waited without that all was over. He hastened to the telegraph office around the corner, but the reporters were before him, and before he had reached it the news of the General's death was spreading far and wide over the wires throughout the country. Shortly after Secretary Barrett reached the telegraph office and sent messages announcing the General's death to President Harrison, Secretary of State Blaine, Secretary of War Proctor, Mrs. Rusk, and many others. He could not restrain his tears. "He died like a babe falling asleep," he said. "There was no suffering, no pain. After 10 o'clock he lay motionless, and but the very slightest respiration showed that life still existed. Dr. Alexander was by his bedside along with the members of the family. Before noontime all had agreed that death was only a question of minutes. The arrangements of the funeral," concluded Mr. Barrett, "are in charge of Henry W. Slocum. The interment will probably be made in Calvary cemetery, St. Louis, where his wife and other members of the family are interred."

The following is a brief history of his military career:

William T. Sherman was born in Lancaster, Ohio, February 8, 1820. He was the sixth child, and was adopted by Thomas Ewing, and attended school in Lancaster until 1836, when he entered the Military Academy at West Point. He graduated with the class of 1840, and was appointed Second Lieutenant of the Third Artillery, July 1, 1840; served in Florida war, 1840-42; promoted First Lieutenant Nov. 30, 1841; on duty in various Southern States and in Pennsylvania 1842-46; on breaking out of the war with Mexico applied for duty in the field, was assigned to Co. F, 3rd Artillery, then under orders for California; Aid-de-camp to Brigadier-General S. W. Kearney, Military Governor of California, and A. A. G. on the staffs of Col. R. B. Mason and Brigadier-General P. F. Smith, 1847-49; breveted Captain, May 30, 1848, for gallant and meritorious service in California during the war with Mexico; bearer of dispatches from General Smith to the War Department, and after six months' leave of absence joined Company C, Third Artillery, at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.; appointed Captian A. C. S., September 27, 1850; stationed at St. Louis, Mo., and New Orleans, La., 1850-52; resigned from the army to enter upon civil pursuits; resignation accepted, to take effect September 6, 1853.

He engaged in banking in San Francisco a short time, and afterward was superintendent of the Military Academy at Alexandria, La.

On breaking out of the War of the Rebellion he offered his services to the Government, and was appointed Colonel of the Thirteenth Infantry May 14, 1861; commanded a brigade in the first battle of Bull Run, Va., July 21, 1861; appointed Brigadier General of volunteers May 17, 1861, and assigned to duty in the Department of the Cumberland; in command of department October-November, 1861, when he was transferred for duty to the Department of the Missouri, and ordered to report to Major-General Halleck at St. Louis; on inspection duty at Sedalia, Mo., and commanded camp of instruction at Benton Barracks, Mo., 1861-62; commanding post of Paducah, Ky., expediting and facilitating operations in progress up the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, and organizing a division to be commanded by himself; bore a distinguished part in the battle of Shiloh and in the operations against Corinth; appointed Major-General of volunteers May 1, 1862; commanding District of Memphis and an expedition against Vicksburg, 1862; assigned to command of Fifteenth Army Corps January, 1863; participated in the capture of Arkansas Post; took part in operations preceding and attending the seige of Vicksburg; appointed Brigidier-General U. S. A., July 4, 1863; assigned to command of the Department of the Tennessee, October 27, 1863; joined his forces to the army under General Grant at Chattanooga, Tenn., and bore conspicuous part in the battle of that name; moved with great energy to the relief of General Burnside at Knoxville, Tenn., and returned to Chattanooga, 1863; made an expedition from Vicksburg to Meridian, Miss., destroying much railroad and war material thereabouts, and returned to Vicksburg; received the thanks of Congress, February 19, 1864; assumed command of the Military Division of the Mississippi, March 18, 1864; captured Atlanta, Ga., and made his march to the sea, which terminated in the capture of Savannah, Ga., December 21, 1864; received the thanks of Congress, January 10, 1865; marched northward from Savannah, captured Columbia, S. C., compelling the evacuations of Charleston; repulsed the enemy under General J. E. Johnston at Bentonville, and joining his forces with those of General Schofield at Goldsboro, moved against General Johnston, who, on April 26, surrendered his army on the same terms as had been granted Gen. Lee; assigned to command of Military Division of the Missouri, 1865; promoted Lieutenant General July 26, 1866; assigned to command of Military Division of the Missouri; sent on special mission to Mexico, 1866; promoted to General March 4, 1869; relinquished command of the army Nov. 1, 1883, and proceeded to his home in St. Louis, Mo.

In 1884, Gen. Sherman was, at his own request, placed on the retired list in order that Sheridan might be promoted to his position. Since that time he has resided in New York, and has enjoyed the rest earned during his distinguished career as a soldier.

The funeral services over the remains of the General will take place on Thursday from his late residence, although it may be deferred if his son does not arrive on that day from Europe on the Majestic. Thursday evening the body will be taken to St. Louis in a special train of three cars. It will be in charge of Gen. Schofield, and will be accompanied by a delegation from Post Lafayette, New York. Gen. O. O. Howard will have charge of the remains while being conveyed from the house to the depot. A special boat will be in waiting at the foot of Twenty-third street to convey the remains to the Pennsylvania depot.

He Had an Object.

"Look here," said a Sixth avenue druggist to a boy who had come in and gone out of the store and left the door open each time, half a dozen times in one afternoon. "You must be a very careless boy. I have had to shut that door after you each time you have gone out."

"I know it," replied the boy.

"Then it was done purposely on your part?"

"Yes, sir. My brother has patented a door spring, and my object was to call attention to it. Put you one on for a dollar which will shut that door a million times and never skip a cog."

COKE WORKERS FIRM.

SIXTEEN THOUSAND MEN DEMAND MORE PAY.

Well Organized, They Say They Will Fight to the Bitter End—Pinkerton Guards—Trouble Expected—Business Is Suffering.

[Scottdale (Pa.) dispatch.]

The great strike of 16,000 coke workers materialized to-day. There is hardly a man at work in the whole district outside of those employed by W. J. Rainey. There is every reason to believe that the fight will be hotly contested, as the men are much excited, and say they will never return to their posts of duty at a 10 per cent. reduction, and intimate that nothing save an advance will satisfy them. It is predicted and expected in labor circles that the employes of W. J. Rainey, numbering 1,000, will come out on strike to-morrow morning or the day following. Rainey has now his works guarded by Pinkerton detectives, whose duty it is to keep labor agitators and strikers at a distance from the place and from the employes. Trouble is expected, as the strikers are aroused and may make an attack on Rainey's works at any moment. The strike is already having a perceptible effect on all business. There is but little doing on the Southwest and the Baltimore and Ohio Road and about 200 men are out of work. While the furnaces at various points are fairly well supplied with coke some of them will have to close down if the strike continues any length of time. There are still no signs of an immediate settlement.

JAMES REDPATH DEAD.

An Ardent Abolitionist and a Warm Friend of Ireland.

[New York dispatch.]

James Redpath, the famous Irish Nationalist, journalist and lecturer, and the Vice President of the Anti-Poverty Society, who was run down by a Fourth avenue horse car opposite the postoffice one day last week, died at 9 o'clock today at St. Luke's Hospital from the effects of his injuries. Mrs. Redpath and her daughter, Mrs. Sanner, were at his bedside when he died and had been with him ever since yesterday morning.

Ever since Mr. Redpath was removed to St. Luke's from the Chambers Street Hospital last Saturday, his condition has been regarded as extremely critical. The wheel of the car passed over the left arm as it was bent inward, bruising and lacerating all the smaller bones and crushing the muscles, which resulted in paralysis of the arm and almost the entire left side of the body.

James Redpath was born at Berwick-on-Tweed, England, in 1833, and emigrated with his parents to Michigan in 1848. He became a printer, newspaper correspondent and editor, and was long connected with the New York Tribune. He became emigration agent of the Haytien Government in the United States and afterward Consul at Philadelphia. He was a war correspondent during the civil war, and established at Boston in 1868 the Redpath Lyceum Bureau. He was an ardent advocate of "rights in Ireland" and a pronounced abolitionist. He was the author of "The Roving Editor," "A Hand-Book to Kansas Territory," "The Public Life of Captain John Brown," "Echoes of Harper's Ferry," and "A Guide to Hayti." One of his latest ventures was Redpath's Weekly, which suspended recently.

James Redpath was better known in recent years through his connection with the Irish movement. He first got interested in it through making a trip to Ireland as a correspondent of the New York Tribune. He had failed in a theatrical venture and sought literary employment for relaxation from care as much as for remuneration. His trip through Ireland during the partial famine of 1879 and 1880 made him a complete convert to the doctrines of the Land League, and his letters, which are widely copied, had more to do with awakening American sympathy than any other agency at that time. Coming back to this country he gave a series of lectures to crowded houses, which had a further effect in the same direction. Returning to Ireland he threw himself heart and soul into the agitation, and delivered a number of speeches at nationalist meetings which exceeded those of almost any of the Irish agitators in violence of tone. He denounced Chief Secretary Forster and the Irish landlords in unmeasured terms. When some of the local leaders were thrown into prison Redpath filled their engagements and the Government did not arrest him. The English press, not knowing that he was English by birth, called him a "Yankee demagogue" and upbraided Dublin Castle with its cowardice for failing to arrest him. So absorbed in the new movement did Redpath become that on his return to New York he started an Irish weekly paper, attended all the Irish conventions and for some years did not touch any other movement. The Irish got to regard him as one of themselves.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

THE Senate on the 11th agreed to a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for a list of all persons, firms or associations by whom bullion had been offered (under the act of July 14, 1890), the amounts and prices; a list of those from whom silver bullion had been purchased, the basis on which an estimate is made of the market price of silver and the amounts and prices of silver bullion purchased outside of the United States. In the House Senate amendment to House bill to fix the rate of wages of certain employes of the government printing office was non-concurred in. Senate bill was passed to establish a record and pension office in the War Department; also Senate bill providing for the selection of a site for a military post at San Diego, Cal. A bill was passed extending the time within which the Choctaw Coal and Railroad Company shall construct its road through the Indian Territory. The House then went into committee of the whole on the legislative appropriation bill.

IN the Senate on the 12th the credentials of Mr. Teller for the new Senatorial term beginning March 4 were presented and filed. The following among other bills were passed: Senate bill establishing pier lights at Ahnapee, Wis.; Senate bill for creation of a fourth judicial district in Utah; House bill to grant right of way through the Crow reservation to the Montana & Wyoming Railroad Company (with amendments). The Senate then resumed consideration of the copyright bill, the pending question being the amendment offered by Mr. Sherman to strike out the word "prohibited" and insert the words "subject to the duties provided by law," so that foreign copies of books patented in the United States shall not be prohibited, but shall be subject to tariff duties. Owing to the absence of Mr. Sherman the bill was laid aside. In the House, Senate bill was passed authorizing the Kansas and Arkansas Railroad Company to extend its lines in the Indian Territory. The House then went into committee of the whole on the legislative appropriation bill.

THE Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures continued its hearing on the 13th. F. J. Newlands, of the National Silver Committee, continued his argument begun last week. Mr. Newlands, in reference to statements made before the committee forecasting the flooding of this country with silver if the free coinage bill was passed, said this could be prevented very easily by passing the bill with a proviso limiting the coinage to bullion, the production of the mines of the world and excluding foreign coin. Mr. Newlands was then excused and Mr. Holden, of Colorado, addressed the committee in favor of free coinage. In the Senate the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was reported and placed on the calendar. The House bill for a public building at Richmond, Ky., at a cost not to exceed $75,000, was passed. Consideration of the copyright bill was then resumed.

THE credentials of William F. Vilas as Senator-elect from the State of Wisconsin for the term commencing March 4 next were presented by the Vice President in the Senate, on the 14th, and placed on file. Among the bills reported and placed on the calendar were House bills authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River at Alexandria, La., and across the Mississippi at South St. Paul, Minn. The copyright bill was then proceeded with. Mr. Carlisle offered an amendment intended to carry out the policy of the Sherman amendment already adopted. The roceedings were here interrupted by a message from the President announcing the death of Gen. Sherman. In the House, a Senate bill was passed authorizing the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin. The House then went into committee of the whole on the Indian appropriation bill.

IN the House, on the 16th, E. B. Taylor, rising to a personal explanation, said that on the 14th in the heat of debate he used language toward the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Fithian) which he was immediately sorry for. He had said that that gentleman had a right to make a fool of himself, but not with his (Taylor's) consent. His words were unreasonable, unparliamentary and unjust, and he apologized to the House and the gentleman, and regretted exceedingly that he was under excitement at the moment and was induced to make use of them. Mr. Fithian, after hearing the manly statement of Mr. Taylor, accepted the apology in the same spirit in which it had been made. The conference on the army appropriation bill was then adopted, and immediately thereafter the House went into committee of the whole on the Indian appropriation bill. In the Senate, the credentials of Senator Jones, of Nevada, and Mitchell, of Oregon, for terms beginning the 4th of March next, were filed. The conference report on the fortifications bill was agreed to, and Mr. McConnell addressed the Senate in advocacy of his bill, directing the proceedings of condemnation against the Union and Central Pacific Roads. It was referred. The diplomatic and consular bill, was then taken up and several committee amendments agreed to. Work is so pressing, and time so short, that it is not likely any adjournment will be had on the days of the funerals of Admiral Porter and General Sherman.

Terribly Aggravating.

A high official of the government was in a communicative mood to-day. He sat, tipped back in his comfortable office chair, and said to the Traveler correspondent: "I have made a discovery that is worth millions to bashful men. You know there are some fellows who never can go into ladies' company without being embarrassed, but I have found out something that will make a bashful man the equal of the most self-conscious woman that ever lived. Now let me tell you my secret. I started out on the broad, general platform that a woman is more sensitive about her feet than anything else. Having settled that in my mind, I began a series of experiments. The horsecar is my favorite place. I love to see a queenly looking woman get into the car and sit down with the air of knowing that she is the best-dressed lady present. In an apparently unconcerned way I attract her attention by looking steadily at her feet, with an occasional glance at her face. Of course, I avoid all appearance of impertinence. I assume the air of a man who sees something that interests him. No matter how calm the victim is when she entered the car, inside of five minutes she will fairly ache to get to her destination. She may have the handsomest foot in the world, and know that it is encased in a nicely fitting shoe, but she will wilt all the same. It is a woman's weakness. I have tried it on young girls of sixteen and old women of eighty—the result is the same. Achilles was vulnerable only in his heel; but you can't look steadily at a woman's little toe for two consecutive minutes without making her feel as though she would like to murder you."—Boston Traveler.

There's a good deal of guarantee business in the store keeping of to-day. It's too excessive. Or too reluctant. Half the time it means nothing. Words—only words.

This offer to refund the money, or to pay a reward, is made under the hope that you won't want your money back, and that you won't claim the reward. Of course.

So, whoever is honest in making it, and works—not on his own reputation alone, but through the local dealer whom you know, must have something he has faith in back of the guarantee. The business wouldn't stand a year without it.

What is lacking is confidence. Back of that, what is lacking is that clear honesty which is above the "average practice."

Dr. Pierce's medicines are guaranteed to accomplish what they are intended to do, and their makers give the money back if the result isn't apparent.

Doesn't it strike you that a medicine which the makers have so much confidence in, is the medicine for you?

PRICKLY ASH BITTERS

One of the most important organs of the human body is the LIVER. When it fails to properly perform its functions the entire system becomes deranged. The BRAIN, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS, all refuse to perform their work. DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, RHEUMATISM, KIDNEY DISEASE, etc., are the results, unless something is done to assist Nature in throwing off the impurities caused by the inaction of a TORPID LIVER. This assistance so necessary will be found in

Prickly Ash Bitters!

It acts directly on the LIVER, STOMACH and KIDNEYS, and by its mild and cathartic effect and general tonic qualities restores these organs to a sound, healthy condition, and cures all diseases arising from these causes. It PURIFIES THE BLOOD, tones up the system, and restores perfect health. If your druggist does not keep it ask him to order it for you. LOVE'S BETTER SELF.

BY MARY SHAW.

Was it I who said, one day, that love
Is of fancy born, or bought with gold—
Ay, and won with lies and rings?
Then I dreamed—if pure, 'tis far above
Lies, or buying, or selling. I hold
Love's kisses are sacred things
That may be won, but are never bought.
Pure—the marriage God's commandment taught
Is never more holy than the smiles
That true love gives, and it knows no wiles.
Love lurks not, but shines, in a woman's eyes,
And it is an estray from paradise,
Only to win
Earth-bound souls back to heaven;
'Twill surely conquer sin;
Else wherefore was there given
The Christ who died on the cross?
Did His love count gain or loss?
Was it bartered once for dross?
His life was love, and a grander one
There has not been since the world begun!

Ah, me! I look at these words with surprise;
I'll disown them all—for they give but lies
To the holy feelings my heart hath known.
Love's spirit lives when ideals have flown;
For its mission is ever to uplift
The earth-bound ones e'en to heaven's sun rift.
I say to her who holds love has no worth,
Who likens it to a groveling thing,
Dying even in the hour of its birth,
You never have known love's better self,
Nor given it all the heart can bring;
Its gold shines brighter than sordid pelf.

A good woman's love will live for one,
Self-forgetful till her life is done;
If he who wins her holds sacred her heart,
She'll teach him that Truth is better than Art;
That, though a tree in the soil has root,
Upward it rears it blossoms and fruit.

Love never sprung in a soulless woman's breast;
Ne'er was known by one who would stoop to lure
By a single smile, or a kiss or caress.
Love's better self will forever endure,
Though earth-bound, trying to save all that is best,
And uplift and soothe the world-weary and bless
This earth-life with a mite
Of the sweet joys of heaven;
Aye, Love is infinite!
To it power is given
Stronger than Death, for it never dies.
All noble is he who ever tries
To live to the promptings of the spirit of Love
And the old golden rule. Such a one is above
The dross of the world. Name him you who can
What you will; but I will name him a man.

SOUTH KAUKAUNA, WIS.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XXII.

FOR a few days Ethel was confined to her room and bed. The fearful excitement she had undergone of late, as well as the exposure to the damp and stormy night air, had produced constant headache and feverishness. But the kind, motherly care bestowed upon her by good Mrs. Clum, together with the judicious remedies of her skillful physician, at length restored her to her usual activity.

It was a happy event for Dr. Elfenstein when he first saw her able to meet him in the sitting-room, for he had felt very anxious lest a long fever should follow, the consequences of which could not be foretold.

When, therefore, all danger was over, he felt strangely light-hearted and gay.

"Dr. Elfenstein," said his visitor—after his first salutation had passed, together with the joking remarks that followed—"I must now have a little serious advice, and naturally come to you for it. Of course you are aware that I must leave here?"

"My dear Miss Nevergail, have we been so unfortunate as to offend in any way that you cannot abide with us awhile?" he interrupted, teasingly.

"Now, Doctor, you know better! Indeed, I am grateful for all your kindness, but I must necessarily obtain some situation in order to support myself; for you must know I am very independent in my feelings, and, therefore, to be happy, must have plenty to do."

"Is it not something to cheer up a forlorn old bachelor's home by your smiles?"

"It might be a pleasant pastime, but it certainly cannot be a life work. Do you know of any person who needs a governess or companion?"

"Yes; since you really ask me so directly, I cannot deny having seen that advertisement in the Times to-day."

As the Doctor spoke he took from the table near a copy of the paper to which he had referred and handed it to her, pointing to an advertisement "for a young lady governess and companion for a girl of fourteen—an invalid."

The application was to be made at Castle Cairn, the country home of the Duchess of Westmoreland.

"The very thing!" exclaimed Ethel, as she finished reading it. "I must certainly see to this at once."

"Do not discompose yourself. I am attending Lady Claire Linwood, the invalid referred to, and, as I am going there in a short time, I will apply for the position in your behalf, if you wish."

"I should be glad to have you; I am sure I can perform the duties required to their satisfaction."

Asking a few questions as to the qualifications she could specify, Dr. Elfenstein at once proceeded to seek an interview with her grace the Duchess, and in a short time all was satisfactorily arranged, and the following week Ethel was to become an inmate of this grand old castle.

Thither her trunks were carried, after some little difficulty in getting them from the Hall.

The Saturday before she left the "cottage" was truly a delightful one. The day had been very hot and sultry, but a cooling breeze had made the long twilight very enjoyable, so much so, that Ethel had left the parlor and closeness indoors to sit upon the covered porch that led into the house from the small garden in front.

Dr. Elfenstein, happening to be at leisure for that evening, had also sought its refreshing pleasures.

After chatting pleasantly for a few moments, they were interrupted by observing a singular-looking individual open the gate and advance towards them.

He was a man about 65 years of age, tall, but with a slight stoop to his shoulders, slender and willowy in form.

His face was rather notable for its good looks, a fine piercing black eye, placid features, and pensive smile, giving it a winning rather than a repulsive appearance.

His beard was full, and pure white, reaching nearly to his waist, while long curls of snowy hair fell over his shoulders.

His costume was rather on a clerical order, close vest and coat, the frock of which reached to his knees, while a soft felt hat rested upon his head.

In one hand he held a black leather wallet, in the other a stout walking cane.

Advancing to the steps, he said languidly:

"May I sit on this stoop one moment? I feel weary after a very long walk."

Assent being given, he laid down his cane, but rested the wallet on his knees; then, removing his hat, he wiped the perspiration from his high white brow.

"I am, sir, a clergyman without a charge. My name is Edwin C. Stiles, and I am at present engaged in obtaining subscriptions to several periodicals and religious works.

"Perhaps I could enlist your sympathy in my endeavors; if so, I would be pleased to have your name as a subscriber to this work."

Drawing a handsomely bound book from his pocket, he offered it to the Doctor for examination.

It happened to be a work he was about buying, having heard it highly recommended, so Earle pleased the old man by ordering a copy.

After receiving the desired information the stranger arose, and bidding them good-evening passed onward.

"Rather a singular-looking person," remarked Ethel, following him with her eyes, until he disappeared from sight. "That snow-white hair and beard make him exceedingly venerable in appearance, but I should not think him very old."

"About sixty-five or six only, I should judge from his skin. But his pale face shows that his health must be poor."

"Do you think him really a clergyman?"

"No one seems to know what to think of him. I have heard the inhabitants of the town speaking of him many times lately. All agree he must be a very eccentric character. Did you notice the wallet he had in his hand? It seems that he clings to it night and day. He has been going from house to house since he came to the village, obtaining subscriptions to his books and papers, and, being very poor apparently, asks for his meals, and two or three times has asked for a night's lodging. Being evidently an educated man and a clergyman, in poverty and loneliness, it has been given, but everywhere his mysterious wallet has occasioned many remarks and conjectures as to its contents. If a meal is granted he seems grateful, and leaving his hat and cane in the hall takes his wallet to the dining-room and keeps it within reach of his hand while eating. He always asks a blessing over his food, and if he stays all night insists upon reading the Bible and praying with the family before he retires.

"He prays with the wallet in his hand!

"His prayers, say those who have heard him, are well-worded and really eloquent.

"Several have asked where he resides, and if he has a family.

"His reply invariably is, 'that is a painful subject, and I cannot answer.'

"So no one knows a thing about him, except that he calls himself Rev. Edwin C. Stiles."

"How strange!" returned Ethel, as she heard the story. "Poor man! Perhaps his brain is a little unsettled."

"The villages seem to think so. Many of the young men have tried to induce him to drop his wallet by sundry tricks. They have suddenly frightened him on the highway, have stolen in while he has been eating, and endeavored slyly to pick it away, but they found him ever on the alert, so were disappointed.

"This morning I was at the village inn, and there laughed with the rest over the failure of their last joke. It seems he remained over night at Mr. Tracy's, who has a son full to the brim of mischief. So after the old man retired for the night, wallet in hand, Reuben stole out to acquaint a fellow-plotter with the fact that 'old Stiles,' as they call him, was at their house, and to ask his assistance in ferreting out the mystery of the wallet.

"It was agreed that one should go to his door about midnight, calling 'fire, fire!' This would naturally frighten him, and cause forgetfulness; therefore, they expected he would run out to see where the fire was, leaving the treasure; then the other was to dart into his room, seize the wallet, open it, and so discover the nature of its contents. The whole joke turned on themselves, however, when with the first call of fire the door opened, and old Stiles appeared, wallet in hand!"

Ethel laughed merrily over the joke, and then other subjects were introduced, and the eccentric visitor was forgotten.

CHAPTER XXIII.

ETHEL'S NEW HOME.

The following Monday, as Ethel Nevergail was preparing to leave the "cottage" for the "castle," Mrs. Clum told her, laughingly, of the last joke of the season.

Old Stiles, it seems, had gone from Dr Elfenstein's door to the Manse on Saturday evening, and had been allowed to remain over the Sabbath.

On rising from the breakfast-table on Sunday he had asked the hour for church service. Being told half-past ten, he left the house about ten in order to go to the church.

A few minutes before church time the pastor walked up the aisle, and, before ascending the pulpit steps, happened to raise his eyes, and there, to his astonishment, in his own accustomed place sat old Stiles, with the mysterious wallet on his knee.

Hesitating a moment in order to think how he could get the half-crazy creature from the sacred place, Mr. Lee opened a pew door at the side of the pulpit, and, going in, sat down in order to see if the man would not take the hint and descend.

But, to his dismay, the stratagem did not work.

Old Stiles sat still.

Soon the bell stopped tolling, the organ commenced the solemn voluntary, while the congregation sat gazing from pastor to pulpit, with its strange occupant, in speechless wonder.

After a while the voluntary ended, and Mr. Lee arose in despair to pass into his place, when, to his utter astonishment, up got old Stiles, and, calmly laying the wallet on the desk before him, proceeded to give out a hymn.

At this unlooked-for procedure Rev. Mr. Lee sank back in the pew, and concluded to see what the man really intended to do. He could not certainly expect to go through the whole service without his permission.

But the worthy pastor was mistaken. The man did intend it; and not only that, but carried out the intention—carried it out, too, to the delight and satisfaction of all present.

Never had a more thrilling and eloquent sermon been delivered in that grand old church than fell upon their astonished ears from the lips of Rev. Edwin C. Stiles, the half-crazed possessor of the mysterious wallet.

After having filled his breathless audience with wonder and surprise the strange being concluded the exercises by an appropriate prayer, then a parting benediction, after which he seized his wallet, hat and cane, and "walked down and out," without speaking a word, or looking to the right or left.

"Did he not return to the Manse?"

"No. He just walked away, and has not been seen since in the neighborhood."

"Well," laughed Ethel, "he certainly is the oddest human being I ever came in contact with. Do you think he has left the village forever?"

"No one knows; he may return at any moment, or he may not. It is just as he takes the freak, I presume."

Bidding the kind woman farewell, and thanking her warmly for her protecting care, she ran down the path as the coroneted coach of her grace the Duchess of Westmoreland drew up to the door in order to carry her to her new home, and she was soon entering the winding walks that led to the castle.

She almost forgot the sadness of her lonely lot as her eager eyes drank in the splendor of the grounds through which they were advancing. Everything that could charm the senses was here found in luxuriant perfection.

Grand old trees, exquisite nooks of rarest beauty, miniature lakes, profusions of sweet exotics, rustic bowers, ivy-wreathed labyrinths for quiet rest and reflection, were on either hand, while the castle itself was a perfect monument of architectural magnificence. Pillars, turrets, domes and wings were all that great wealth and the most cultured taste could make them.

The Duchess was a lady of remarkable beauty and grace still, although she had passed her seventieth birthday.

Her husband, Charles Worthington, tenth Duke of Westmoreland, a stern, austere man, had died suddenly one year before; therefore, leaving the gayeties of the metropolis, she had retired to Castle Cairn, in order to spend the first year of widowhood amid its beautiful seclusion.

To this retreat she had brought her granddaughter, Lady Claire Linwood, only child of her daughter Bertha, who, after marrying a peer of the realm, the Marquis of Linwood, had soon followed her husband to the tomb, leaving the little one to the fond care of the Duchess.

This child, then, constituted the whole family now at Castle Cairn, for her son Edward, who since the death of his father was the rightful Duke of Westmoreland, was away from his home and had been for years, traveling through both continents.

His had been a roving disposition. Restless and fond of change, rich and without ties, as he had evidently preferred a single life, never having presented his parents with a daughter-in-law, he had been at liberty to give up his time to the amusement he liked best on earth, traveling.

Now, however, that his father had passed away, it was expected that he would return in a few weeks to fill the honorable station he was henceforth to occupy as Edward, eleventh Duke of Westmoreland.

It was in this home of almost regal magnificence that our friend Ethel Nevergail was received as governess and companion.

She found her young charge an amiable and affectionate girl, whose lameness and delicate health caused her to prefer the quiet of this lovely home to the rush and gayety of the city. In her Ethel soon found some one to love, and before she had been with her a week she saw that her affection was fully returned.

Very grateful, then, to God was she for this pleasant occupation, and this lovely shelter in which to stay until the time should come when she was to open the package and discover the secret of her birth and the place where awaited her the small competence that her aunt assured her would be sufficient for her maintenance the rest of her life.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Bareback Ride.

James Robinson, the veteran bareback rider, whose early triumphs belong away back in the childhood of men now grizzly with years, is to be seen almost every day at Broadway and Twenty-eighth street. He is a small, wiry man, with thin, dark features, a little, black mustache and the clearest of blue-gray eyes. Looking at him it is difficult to reconcile his almost youthful appearance with the fact that he began his career as a rider as long ago as '45. This was almost fifty years ago, says the New York World. Jim, as his intimates call him, was a boy then, of course. He was apprenticed in that year to John Gossen, an old-time circus man. In that day riders used the pad or pillion, and boys were taught the art in a different manner from what they are now. The "mechanic," by which novices are attached to a revolving beam, a rope from the beam to a stout belt around the waist supporting them as the horse makes the circuit of the ring, was not then known. Boys or girls who were ambitious to ride in spangles wore a belt to which a cord was fastened which passed through a ring in the pillion and thence to the hands of the ring master, who when he saw a beginner losing his balance pulled the cord and thus drew the rider to the horse, preventing a fall. It was this way Jim Robinson learned to ride in a style and with a recklessness which soon won him the title of champion bareback rider of the world.

Robinson was the first man to "cut out" the bareback ride and make it a specialty. This was in 1847. Previous to that time he, like all others, rode the pad act. After 1847 he did all his riding bareback, and went to Europe in the early '50's, and created a great sensation. He was acknowledged the greatest equestrian the world had known. "I have been credited," said Mr. Robinson to a World reporter, "with having been the first man to turn a somersault on a horse's back, but this is not so. The first somersault rider was Johnny Glenroy, who did the first flip-flap in 1847. Glenroy is still alive, aged 62, years, and is clerk at the Meramec House, Boston. I did the first forward somersault on a horse in 1848. People have an idea that it is harder than the back somersault, but it is really easier. The three and four ring circuses, which make it necessary to employ an army of cheap performers, have detracted from the importance of the riding act, and there are not many great riders nowadays. Circus owners don't want to pay the price for a great rider. They get a man to do a jockey act for $50 or $75 a week and they are satisfied. I never ride for anybody for less than $350 a week." Robinson's two boys are riders, though one of them, Clarence, has retired from the ring and is in commercial business in Kansas City. Old-timers will remember Robinson and his two boys, one on his head, the other in flying attitude perched on the father's thigh, as they appeared in their great riding act away back in 1860. He was then in the zenith of his fame. Robinson has saved a great deal of money, and is still the best bareback rider in the profession.

LOCKS were used by the Egyptians, Greeks, Romans and Chinese. Du Cange mentioned locks and padlocks as early as 1381.

Economy of Coal Fires.

There are now few parts of the country where exclusive wood fires are possible, even for farmers. Some coal, even if wood can be had for the labor of cutting, is good economy. In all of the prairie States coal is the main fuel of the farmers, and in most cases it is soft coal dug from mines in the immediate neighborhood. The supply of coal in the United States is practically inexhaustible. That of wood, if used for fuel, would run short very quickly. Many a man has cut down maple or black walnut trees for fuel, and has lived to regret it. Coal is likely to grow cheaper as the country grows older. The use of electric motor power does not always need to come from steam. It enables much more general use of water power, and that from winds and tides.

Consultation and Examination

DR. D. O. FRUTH,

—OF THE—

PROVIDENT MEDICAL DISPENSARY,

NEW YORK CITY,

Ably assisted by a full corps of competent physicians and surgeons, treats with unparalleled success all Chronic, Nervous, Skin and Blood diseases of every nature upon the latest scientific principles. He particularly invites all whose cases have been neglected, badly treated or pronounced incurable. Patients who are doing well under the care of their own physicians need not call on us, as our province is to treat those who cannot find relief otherwise. No money required of responsible parties to commence treatment.

Common Sense as Applied to Medicine. It is well known by all intelligent observers that it is impossible for any person, no matter how highly endowed by nature or acquirements, to become thoroughly conversant with all the divisions of the science of medicine. Nearly all who have obtained distinction in medicine have made some special department their life work, being fitted therefor by natural adaptation or selection, special education and experience. The doctor having devoted several years to the special study of chronic diseases in hospitals and general practice, and having the most recent and improved instruments for finding out diseased conditions in the organs of the body, he proposes to devote the whole of his time to the practice of these specialties.

He adopts the following plan, which is peculiar to the large hospitals, and is not and never has been the practice of country doctors, viz.: He carefully notes the symptoms of the patient, ascertains the condition of the internal organs, examines the Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat by the most recent and approved instruments and methods, all of which he carefully records in his register for future reference. In this way he ascertains the true nature of the disease and its cause. Knowing the disease, he knows the changes it produces in the tissues, and, knowing the changes, he checks them with specific remedies, and places his patient on the high road to recovery. When sick people consult him he readily tells them whether he can cure or help them, or if they are beyond hope.

The examinations are in accordance with anatomical and physical science, as he will convince the most skeptical. By an examination he will convince anyone of the nature and extent of disease, amount of danger to life, and chance of a perfect cure. Believing that science is truth and "truth is mighty and will prevail" when known, and knowing that disease can be cured with positive certainty, he invites the afflicted to call and receive advice free and be cured of their diseases.

There is no subject that requires so much study and experience as the treatment and cure of chronic diseases. The astonishing success and remarkable cures performed by him is due to a thorough knowledge of the structure and functions of the human system, and the cure of diseases by natural remedies. Let those given up by others call for examination. He has successfully treated the following diseases since his arrival in this State: Eye and Ear diseases, Chronic Diarrhœa, Chronic Inflammation of the Womb, Chronic Inflammation of the Bladder, Painful or Irregular Menstruation, Fever Sores and Ulcers, Incontinence of Urine, Tape Worms, Crooked Limbs and Enlarged Joints, Spinal Curvatures, Club Foot, Hip Joint Disease, White Swelling, Discharging Abscesses, Sterility or Barrenness, Nervousness and General Debility, Impotency, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Leucorrhea or Whites, Blotches, Pimples, Skin Diseases, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Dropsy, Cancer, Epileptic Fits, Erysipelas, Gravel, Goitre, Gleet, Gonorrhoea, Hydrocele, Heart Disease, Headache, Piles, Hysteria, Syphillis, St. Vitus Dance. Chronic Dysentery, Enlarged Tonsils, Fistula in Ano, Hernia or Rupture, Ovarian Tumors, Paralysis, Prolapsus Uteri, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Consumption, Chronic Cough, Female Weakness, Spermatorrhoea, Rheumatism, etc. All surgical operations performed.

Curing of Piles guaranteed. Will give $1,000 for any case of failure. No money required of responsible parties.

Young Men who through ignorance or the careless exuberance of youthful spirits, have been unfortunate and find themselves in danger of losing their health and embittering their after lives may call with full confidence.

DR. FRUTH—Has attained the most wonderful success in the treatment of the cases to which he devotes his special attention. After years of experience he has discovered the most infallible method of curing weakness in the back and limbs, involuntary discharges, impotency, general debility, nervousness, languor, confusion of ideas, palpitation of the heart, loss of memory, trembling and timidity, diseases of the nose, throat and lungs, affections of the liver, stomach and bowels—those terrible disorders arising from the solitary habits of youth and secret practices, blighting the most radiant hopes and rendering marriage impossible.

Epilepsy, or Fits, positively cured by a new and never-failing method.

Private Diseases.—Blood Poison, Syphillis, Gonorrhoea, Gleet, Stricture, Hydrocele, Varicocele, Loss of Sexual Power and all diseases of the genito-urinary organs speedily and permanently cured. No risks incurred. Consultation free and strictly confidential. Medicine sent free from observation to all parts of the United States.

Middle Aged Men, who find their vigor and vitality weakened by the traces of old complaints and their bodies racked with pain at a time when they should spend their declining years in peace and comfort, should consult Dr. Fruth at once and find the sympathy and relief you positively require. His cures are thorough and permanent.

Diseases of Women.—We shall continue as heretofore, to treat with our best consideration and skill the diseases peculiar to women. Our operations for Fistula, Ruptured Cervix Uteri, Ruptured Perineum, and for Stricture of the Cervical Canal, a condition resulting in Sterility, have been alike gratifying both to ourselves and our patients.

Free Examination of the Urine. Each person applying for medical treatment should send or bring an ounce of their urine, which will receive a careful chemical and microscopical examination.

Remarkable Cures perfected in old cases which have been neglected or unskillfully treated. No experiments or failure. Parties treated by mail and express, but where possible personal consultation preferred. Curable cases guaranteed. List of questions free. Western Address, DR. FRUTH,

TOLEDO, OHIO.

REFERENCES—We, the undersigned, do cheerfully and conscientiously recommend Dr. Fruth as a gentleman of rare professional ability, ripe in judgment, humane to a fault, considerate in practice and enthusiastic in relief of his fellow-men, and we therefore urge the afflicted to avail themselves of his superior skill:—Granville M. WATERLOO.

The roads are just awful.

Monday, Mr. Chipman, of Goshen, was in our town.

Mrs. Jessie Baxter, of Summit, was in town Saturday.

Rev. Butler spent Sunday at home with his family.

Thursday last Mrs Hess, from Pleasant Lake, was in town.

Judge McBride was in Waterloo last week Wednesday and Thursday.

The meeting commenced in the M. E. and U B. churches still continue.

Last week Wednesday Mr. Rose from Angola, visited his sister, Mrs Keep.

Mr. James Daniels, of Fairmont, Minn., is here visiting his father R. G. Daniels.

"Something new under the Sun" Another baby boy at Frank Willis', Monday Feb 16.

Practical jokes are the order of the day, and some of them are getting a little unendurable.

Gen. L. J. Blair has had his residence draped in honor of Gen. Sherman, his old commander.

Jimmy Duncan has returned to his work at Toledo after a short visit with his parents.

Mr Chadwick, who opened up a lumber store some months ago, has removed to Fremont, Ohio.

Del. Locke is on the gain. Last week Saturday being a bright, beautiful day, he walked down to his father's house.

Rev. Baker, of Kalamazoo, Mich., will preach on Wednesday evening in the U B. church. The Rev. gentleman has visited Palestine, and will no doubt be well worth hearing.

There have been "wars and rumors of war" in Uniontown lately. And as a result Bert Widener was fined one dollar and costs, and a son of Mart Locke is boarding in the jail at Auburn.

Mr. Clint Graham, the man who fell from the train several weeks ago, and has since lain at Locke's Hotel, was removed Saturday to Chicago for further treatment. Dr. H. D. Chamberlain accompanied him.

Della Shoner was taken suddenly ill with heart difficulty at St. Mary's Academy, this side of Ft. Wayne Lilly Shoner went to her sister at once, but their mother was also sent for and went. When she returned home Della was better, and accompanied her, to remain until able to again take up her studies.

On last Monday F. W. Willis was noticed walking up and down the street in a kind of absolute manner, exclaiming "nine," "number nine," "nine," "number nine." When asked if about train time, or if No. 9 was late, he looked up and exclaimed, "Oh, well, we have a bran new boy at our house, and it was him I was thinking of." Congratulations.

At the Disciple church last Friday evening Rev. Stewart stated that that church, the Disciple, although he called it the Church of Christ, was organized or instituted by Jesus Christ, on the day of Pentecost about A. D. 33. While the Methodist, Presbyterian, United Brethren Evangelical and all the other churches were organized or founded by some man. He forgets the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch about A. D 42. He also forgot to say anything about Alexander Campbell.

Those who heard Hon. Van. Bennett Monday evening of last week were so well pleased, that he was engaged again for Saturday evening He spoke in the Methodist church which was well filled and he had an attentive and interesting audience His subject was "Our Boys" and if the parents present were not aroused to the danger lurking around their children, their awakening may come too late. Much in this lecture was calculated to move the listener to tears, as facts were related of the ruin and sad end of bright, loving and loved boys, and fathers, and many were deeply affected. The Arion Quartet did their full share of the entertainment again.

A hearing in an injunction suit in Paulding county, O., of the U. B. church in north Ohio conference was had on last Thursday, which had additional interest, as a new issue was raised by the Radicals. They had placed in the deed the same "proviso" which is written in the deed of the U. B. church at Hudson, Steuben county, providing that in case the church should divide, the party adhering to the constitution of 1841 should hold the property. The attorney for the Radicals refused the proposition to divide time, but said he would admit that the Liberals were the church, but that that clause in the deed gave them, the radicals, the property. The judge said it was only a question of who is the church, and that if the Liberals should be found to be the church, they will hold the property, notwithstanding the special proviso in the deed. So he divided time till regular trial.

BUTLER.

Levy Stump is reported on the sick list.

J. A. Campbell visited Corunna, Pleasant Lake and Angola on business last week.

Rev. Diffinbach of the Lutheran church continues his labors and is meeting with fair success.

Rev. McCloe, of the U. B. church continues his revival effort and has secured nearly forty accessions to his church.

C McLewis has bought the old Cherry place on North Broadway and will improve it and make a desirable property.

Mr. and Mrs. Strong and Master Heber attended a wedding at Columbia City last week. They report a pleasant time.

Levy & Wolf have fitted up the second story of their store in excellent taste and have it filled with seasonable goods Their trade continues unabated.

Eugene Mock remains nearly the same His wife has held a position in the public school and has had to resign her position. Mrs. Porter, her sister is filling the place.

The Free Methodists, an offshoot of the old M. E. church are casting about them for quarters in which to reap some of the golden harvest that is lying loose about Butler. So far we believe they have not succeeded in finding quarters. The other churches seem reluctant to place a sword in the hands of their enemy for the mere pleasure of becoming the target for their thrusts.

'The little church around the corner', is altogether too small to accommodate the crowds that flock to the place of worship and dozens are turned away every night for want of seats. The society talk of knocking out the west wall of the little edifice and add another room nearly the size of the old one. The secret of his success is that while he builds, another is not at his heels tearing down.

A large number of our railroad men were garnisheed last month. It is a little hard that these men earning from $50 to $150 per month in cash can't support a wife and perhaps one or two children, while many of the section men earning $30 per month keep the same sized families and pay for homes at the same time There is a secret here that perhaps our gamblers and murder mills could explain.

J. W. Daniels of Fairmount, Minn., and Miss S. Daniels, of Waterloo, are visiting their sister, Mrs John Baxter, at this writing. Mr. D says when he left home they had several inches snow.

Fees and Salaries.

In the legislature, last week, the house of representatives began work on the fee and salary bill on Wednesday. It was read by sections, the first section being the salary of governor and his secretaries. It took till Thursday noon to finish the state officers. Not many changes were made, each section being adopted nearly as prepared except, to increase the salary of one or two clerks or deputies. Thursday afternoon, they reached circuit judges, and their pay was fixed at $2,500 as in the original draft of the bill. Judges of the superior court, were then allowed $3,000. (There are but five counties that have these judges, three in Marion, one each in Allen, Vanderburg, Tippecanoe and Vigo.) Judges of the criminal court were given $2,500, same as they get now. County officers were next considered, and the sections relating to them passed with but little change. This would leave DeKalb in the Fourth class, as we stated last week, among the counties with a population of from 20,000 to 25,000. As then stated our clerk, auditor, sheriff and treasurer would get $1,750 a year, with an additional $50 for each 1,000 population over 20,000, giving our officers about $1,950. Recorders of the fourth class get $1,500, with $50 for each additional 1,000, making them about $1,700.

Chicago News Almanac.

This is one of the most perfect and complete, of all the great almanacs we have had. Some great daily paper leads out each year with a big almanac—one that covers a wide range of subjects, and is brimful of valuable information. The one now issued by the Chicago Daily News, is the king of its kind It has a full statement of our national finances, commerce, a list of the present congress and the next one, a full statement of the new tariff bill, and a comparison of its rates with the old, the vote at the last election for each county of each state in the union, and the vote of the same for president in 1888 There is a list of the army and navy officers, a list of churches and membership, accounts of crops, all sorts of sporting news, including base ball, trotting, etc., a statement of the qualifications of voters in each of the 44 states, and much other statistical matter of all sorts. It is impossible to give a list of all its contents It is a valuable work, and can be had of the book dealers for 25 cents.

Curing a Cold.

To get rid of a cold, says The Ladies' Home Journal, send to the druggist for a mixture containing sulphate of atropia one two hundred and fortieth of a grain; bi-sulphate of quinine two grains, and Fowler's solution, five drops, to each dose. Take a dose once in two hours for three or four times, or until the throat begins to feel slightly dry. If this does not entirely relieve the symptoms, repeat the treatment the next day. Copy this prescription carefully, and use it with care as some of the ingredients are poisonous There is no danger in using it if the directions are followed exactly. Before going to bed take a warm bath. The next morning sponge the body rapidly with tepid water, rubbing it hard until the blood circulates quickly and the skin is in a glow. Take more exercise than usual, and do not sit in a hot room with the windows shut Mix a teaspoonful of cream of tartar in a tumblerful of water and drink it during the day. If there is constipation take a gentle laxative, as a rhubarb pill. It is very important that all the avenues of the body for carrying off waste matter should be wide open.

A Radical from Principle.

MR. EDITOR:—I will ask you one time more for a small space in your paper. I did not wish to be heard through your paper again, nor would I have been, had the good brother remembered the golden rule. "Do unto others as you would that others do unto you." Now. I did not wish to be written up in the paper, nor would I have written up my opponent, P. P. Lochner for the paper, as he has me, for anything in reason, and will promise you you will not hear from me through the paper again He says I remind him of a pugilist who at one time boasted of completely whipping a man. When the truth is known the men were seven miles apart when the so called fight occurred What a comparison for a man to make professing to be a christian. I only wrote that short sketch in reply to "O A. Radical," thinking I would find out his name. Was not writing to P. P. Lochner at all—and sent a copy to the Telescope, but it was never printed. No doubt it was thrown into the waste-basket or under the table.

Regarding the great moral principle he speaks of that I failed to explain—the fact is, when I joined the United Brethren church I was asked the question, are you willing to be governed by our church rules, I answered I am And I am still true to the solemn vow I made, and to the church I joined My friend P. P. Lochner answered the same questions in the affirmative, and since that time has passed from the old constitution, which, undoubtedly, was so illegally changed unto the new constitution, and has broken that solemn vow and seceded from the true United Brethren church. God forbid that I ever try to remove the ancient land-marks which our fathers have set.

Yours for the right,

SIMEON H. MAURER.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1844.

There were few sales of lots in the village of Auburn during the year and these were at merely nominal prices.

On Dec. 18, 1843, the county agent for $20, had sold to S. W. Ralston lots No. 134, 175, 133, 176 and 209.

Aug. 9, Mr. Coburn for $170, conveyed to S. W. Sprott, nine lots. For $35, Mr. Ralston sold lots 113 and 120 to Clinton Seeley, James Boyle for $60, sold lots 55 and 56 to Levi A. Rice and for $80, J. B. Horn, sold J. C. George lots 97 and 98. Thus but four sales as a matter of record were made within the year.

At this time the actual number of known lot owners in the village was seventy, and twenty-two lots were held by unknown owners which expression seems paradoxical for if sold, record of deed should determine ownership.

The party who had the largest number of lots, probably wooded land marked only by surveyor's stakes, was Isaac Spencer whose addition constituted the west part of the village. His holding numbered 104 lots valued by assessor for taxation at $558. Chester Alvord was the next heaviest lot owner, he having to his name 55 lots valued at $753 on which he paid a tax of $8.36. Wesley Park came third with 25 lots, S. W. Sprott with 21, Robson L Brown with 12, O. A Parson with 10, Dr. J. H. Roe with 9, J. Puffenbarger 7 and Solomon Ensley, Phineas Fay, Henry Fisher and Aaron Hague with four to six each. Daniel Comstock had improvements valued at $100 on lots 87 and 88 together assessed $50, while Thomas I. Freeman's success in business is attested by the ownership of lots 89, 100 and 144 valued at $120, while his improvements were assessed at $1460 and personal $355, his total of $1935, paying a tax of $20.08 marked him as the wealthiest man in the little straggling village.

Wm. P. Means assessed the property of the county for which he drew warrants on the treasury for $26.14 The state levy was 20 cents and the county levy 50 cents on the $100. The auditor, Aaron Hague upon his duplicate, on the line to the right of each description of property placed under its proper heading, the amount of each several tax, state, county, township and road and then the total.

The present custom is to extend as one sum the valuation real and personal of each taxpayer, on this compute as a total tax, the sum of the general taxes. From this the road tax on division is subtracted the remainder is divided by two. To one half, the road tax in full is added as first installment, the other half constitutes the second installment.

In the old method in vogue in 1844, the word "paid" was the guide to ascertaining the collections, which already determined when equally footed, was compared with the total footing as proof of accuracy and required no apportionment as at present.

For the benefit of the treasurer a printed tabulated list of treasury notes, their dates of issue and amounts together with the interest accrued was prepared. The list was limited and the first in order was dated April 20, 1840, denomination $50, interest accumulated $13.58.

Would some one informed on this subject make known the character of these "treasury notes" then expected to be paid into the county treasury for the revenue of 1844, by whom and for what purpose issued?

A custom more recently originating with a county treasurer and of necessity followed by his successor's in office, of extending legal limit of date of receiving taxes and after due notice visiting the leading towns of the county, one day at each place to accommodate tax payers and present delinquencies, had its precedent in 1844 when Wesley Park after public notice commenced Sept. 15, at the township of Butler and passing one day in each township at the place where elections were held received taxes till the end of the month, after this he attended only at his office from Oct. 1 to Jan. 1, 1845, to taking in taxes. The early method was an incentive to promptness, the latter a premium on delay.

The very heavy list of land sold for delinquent taxes on Jan. 1, '45 is an unmistakable indication of the poverty of the early settlers. Not less than 150 descriptions were offered for sale, besides many village lots.

The firm of March, Dawson & S. B. Smith were purchasers to some extent and for many years, the sale of real estate, has been a source of very profitable investment for moneyed men in the county and an abstract of title shows many a lot to have been acquired in that way. The period to redeem having expired, the property passed by a tax deed to the purchaser by tax payments.

James Butler, Hamden, Me., visiting in LaFayette, dropped dead on the street there, Saturday, from heart disease.

Sudden Deaths.

Heart disease is by far the most frequent cause of sudden death, which in three out of four cases is unsuspected. The symptoms are not generally understood. These are: a habit of lying on the right side, short breath, pain or distress in side, back or shoulder, irregular pulse, asthma, weak and hungry spells, wind in stomach, swelling of ankles or dropsy, oppression, dry cough and smothering. Dr. Miles' illustrated book on heart disease, free at F. E. Davenport's who sells and guarantees Dr. Miles' unequaled New Heart Cure, and his Restorative Nervine, which cures nervousness, headache, sleeplessness, effects of drinking, etc. It contains no opiates. 6

We are told on very poor authority that Boston litterateurs are anxious to have the word "cowhided" read out of the English language, to make room for "cowhidden."

Startling Facts.

The American people are rapidly becoming a race of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempfling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus dance Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nervine cured him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Trial bottles, and fine book of marvelous cures, free at F. E. Davenport's who recommends and guarantees this unequaled remedy. 6

Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C. Feb. 13, 1891.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 20, 1801.

Quite a political sensation has followed the announcement of Senator German, whose political astuteness cannot be gainsaid, that he has not and would not under any combination of circumstances be a candidate before the democratic national convention next year, and that he favored the nomination of Ex-President Cleveland as the strongest and most available man, and proposed to do all in his power to get him nominated. It is yet too early to see what effect this announcement will have upon those democratic senators and representatives who have expressed the opinion that Mr. Cleveland's letter against the free coinage of silver has destroyed his availability as a candidate, and what adds to the interest of the situation is the fact that some of these gentlemen have been, since the publication of Mr. Cleveland's letter, strongly in favor of nominating Senator Gorman.

It seems strange that three democratic senators should have cast their votes for such a palpable "job" as that contained in the senate amendment to the diplomatic appropriation bill, which gives a subsidy of $3,000,000 to the company, which as yet only exists on paper, that proposes to lay a cable between SanFrancisco and the Sandwich Islands, but they did. It is not believed that the House will concur in the amendment, at any rate no democrat should vote to do a thing so foreign to all the principles of the democratic party.

Rumors have been flying thick and fast this week anent the new Secretary of the Treasury. One day it was Representative Cannon, the next Clarkson and today it is Ex-Gov ("Calico Charley") Foster, of Ohio. It is believed that Mr. Harrison has determined upon the man, and his nomination is looked for every day.

Senator Quay's much advertised speech of vindication fell as flat in the Senate as one of Senator Blair's educational harangues, and he has gone to Florida to seek consolation in fishing.

The general deficiency bill is this year $36,000,000. Is it strange that the the surplus has disappeared?

The international copyright bill has been passed by the Senate with several amendments, which makes its becoming a law at this session very doubtful.

Mr. Harrison and all of his cabinet, except Secretary Proctor, went to New York to attend Gen. Sherman's funeral. They returned to Washington last night.

The redublicans in the House are so much alarmed lest the wicked democrats should interfere with their plans during the closing rush of the session that telegraphic appeals have been sent to all absent republicans begging them to come here and remain until the end of the session. What they are specially wanted for is to pass the subsidy shipping bill, which is opposed by nearly all of the democrats.

Representative-elect Jerry Simpson, and several of his Farmers Alliance to be colleagues in the next House, are in town. They are the recipients of a great deal of attention at the capitol.

The House committee on Coinage today reported the free coinage bill to the House, but the general belief seems to be that its friends will not succeed in getting it before the House, but they intend to try very hard to do so.

Senator Plumb despairing of getting his joint resolution providing for the violation of existing law by the transfer of the employes of the census bureau to the classified departmental service without the formality of a civil service examination, has offered it as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

It is commented upon rather unfavorably that Congress did not adjourn the day of Admiral Porter's funeral.

Probably the most disagreeable legislative duty ever performed by Senator Ingalls was the presentation by him this week of the credentials of John A. Peffer, Senator-elect from the State of Kansas, for the term beginning March 4, ext.

Notwithstanding the almost daily reiteration of the charge that somewhere in the neighborhood of one-fourth of the enormous amount of money paid out by the Pension bureau is paid on fraudulent claims no republican in or out of Congress has proposed an investigation for the purpose of purging the rolls of such names as may be shown to be there fraudulently. This, as well as other things will be thoroughly looked into by the next House.

Representative Payson, of Illinois, was elected speaker pro tem of the House, this week, during the sickness of Speaker Reed.

The republicans are beginning to be frightened now at the prospect of losing control of the Senate. It is now regarded as certain that the McKinley tariff law will be repealed outright or greatly modified in 1893, if not next year.

Notice.

The undersigned committee having been duly appointed for the purpose, will receive sealed bids for the following described property as a whole or in parts to suit purchaser; up to and including Monday March 9, 1891. The old church building, including seats, pulpit furniture, two stoves, carpets, chandeliers, and bell, all the property of the M. E. congregation of Auburn, Ind. NORTH CAROLINA VISITED BY A DESTRUCTIVE CYCLONE.

Prize Fighter Ryan Fined $500—Brice Must Pony Up—Bloody Battle With Outlaws—American Expert Thieves in London.

Carved to Death.

William A. Whittenden, ex-representative of the large notion house of Bluff, Falkner & Co., was carved in a horrible manner at Baltimore, by James Kennedy, a medical student who hails from North Carolina. The two men had been friends for a long time, but had recently become involved in a quarrel over a wealthy lady living in Mount Vernon place. The two men met on the street, when angry words were exchanged and they then separated, agreeing to meet again at a specified time and place and fight it out. The man from North Carolina did not show up at the rendezvous, however, and the meeting took place in the boarding-house where they both live. Kennedy immediately attacked the other with a knife, stabbing him fourteen times. Whittenden died in a few minutes.

Will Be No Indian Uprising.

From information received by Indian Commissioner Morgan, both from army officers in the Sioux country and from Indian agents, he is of the opinion that there is no further trouble to be apprehended from the Indians in the spring. He has sent a letter to all the agents among the Sioux Indians instructing them to call the attention of the Indians to the recent legislation relative to carrying out the Sioux agreement. He also requests the agents to keep him informed as to any movement which seems likely to result in open hostility.

Have Given a Final Answer.

Pittsburgh special: There is little change in the railroad situation. The grand chiefs of the railroaders had another conference, but they refused to divulge the results of their deliberations. General Manager Wood, of the Pennsylvania system, said that the company will not recede from its present condition; that to-day its salary list is larger, and rules more liberal than any western railroad, and the management has given a final answer.

Believed to Be American Experts.

London special: Some of the £20,000 in Bank of England notes, stolen by sneak thieves on the 16th inst., from a bank messenger in the office of the National Provincial Bank in this city, have been traced to Queenstown, from which fact it is inferred that the two men who accomplished the robbery have sailed for America. The police believed, at the time of the theft, that the criminals were American experts.

Must Pony Up.

The case of the State of Ohio in relation of Morganthaler versus C. D. Crites, Auditor of Allen County, was decided by the Supreme Court in favor of the plaintiff. This is the case in which the county seeks to recover a large sum of back taxes alleged by the Tax-Inquisitor to be due from Senator-elect Brice. Under the decision the omitted taxes, amounting to several thousand dollars, will have to be paid.

Powderly Will Resign.

It is said, that at the next meeting of the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor, Powderly will tender his resignation and retire to private life. His home physician has warned him that another attack such as he had at Omaha will be fatal. Twice now he has been stricken with heart disease. The Master Workman has five children. His estate is worth about five thousand dollars.

Senator Blackburn's Letter.

A special from Louisville, Ky., says United States Senator Blackburn, of Kentucky, has written a letter to Col. John C. Noble, of Paducah, saying that in the light of Mr. Cleveland's recent silver letter, that he does not believe that there is a Democrat in the Senate who favors his nomination or believes that he could be elected in 1892.

Bloody Battle with Outlaws.

Chief Jaurengi and his band of outlaws and a detachment of soldiers in the State of Jalisco, Mexico, recently fought a bloody battle. Twenty-two of the outlaws were killed before the rest would surrender. Chief Jaurengi was captured with the remainder of the band. Five of the soldiers are reported to have been killed.

Banker Cowles Discharged.

When the case of Banker Cowles, charged with the murder of his wife at Clarks, Nebraska, was called in the District Court of Merrett County Mr. Cowles was discharged without a hearing. He demanded a hearing in order that he might vindicate himself, but the Judge said it was unnecessary, as he was not guilty.

A Cyclone in North Carolina.

A tornado swept over Sunbury, Gates County, North Carolina. The storm swept a space half a mile wide, and carried everything with it. Two children were killed near Sunbury, and it is reported that a number of people were killed further east. The wires are all down and details are lacking.

Fifteen Persons Injured.

In the accident to the west-bound passenger train on the Union Pacific, near Cascades, Oregon, fifteen persons were slightly injured, but no one seriously hurt.

Elevator Burned.

Peavy & Co.'s elevator at Armourdale, Kansas, was burned. It is the largest clearing elevator in the United States, and will be a total loss.

Tommy Ryan, who recently defeated Danny Needham at Minneapolis, was fined $500 and costs by Judge Johnston at Crown Point, Ind., for engaging in a fight with Bartlett last December, in the State. Ryan was unable to pay and lies in jail in default of payment.

One Man Killed and Two Injured.

The rear wall of the brick building at the corner of Lacock and Federal streets, Allegheny, Pa., fell inward, burying one man beneath the ruins. Another man was injured and a third one escaped with his life.

Burned Eighteen Engines.

Fire broke out in the round-house of the Cypress Yards of the Missouri Pacific Railway in Kansas City, Kan. The fire spread rapidly, and despite the efforts of the fire department consumed the house. There were eighteen engines in the house, and they were also destroyed. The total loss is estimated at $175,000.

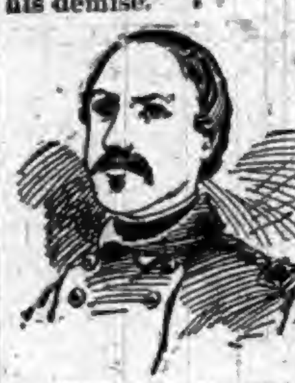
A Strange Performance.

The ashes of Henry Meyer, late proprietor of the Puck Hotel, at Port Richmond, N. Y., were taken to the top of the statue of liberty, in New York harbor, by the Staten Island Schuetzen Corps, and a portion scattered to the winds in accordance with his wishes. The remainder was delivered to his widow.

GENERAL SIBLEY DEAD.

Last Hours of the Great Indian Fighter.

The death of General Henry Hastings Sibley occurred at his home in St. Paul. His passing away was very peaceful and the watching members of his family were scarcely conscious of the exact moment of his demise.



HENRY H. SIBLEY.

It would be a difficult matter to do justice in any brief sketch to the remarkable career of General Henry Hastings Sibley or to convey any adequate idea of the love, veneration and esteem in which he was held all over the vast section from the Wisconsin River to the Rocky Mountains. Even to this day in the Indian fastnesses of Minnesota and Dakota the savage father inspires the rising chieftain with the name and deeds of Sibley, and with the same name the Indian mother subdues her wayward child. General Sibley was born at Detroit, Mich., Feb. 20, 1811, and was the son of Judge Solomon Sibley, a prominent Northwestern pioneer, who was a member of the first Legislature of the Northwestern Territory in 1799, a delegate to Congress in 1820, Judge of the Supreme Court from 1824 to 1836, United States District Attorney, etc.

BLOODTHIRSTY COLUMBUS EDITORS.

In a Little Street Fight One Is Shot Dead—A Bystander Killed.

A sensational tragedy occurred on High street, Columbus, Ohio, when that thoroughfare was crowded with thousands of people witnessing a parade. The parties immediately concerned in the bloody affray were Col. W. J. Elliott, editor of the Sunday Capitol, his brother, P. J. Elliott, business manager of that paper, and Albert C. Osborne, city editor of the Sunday World. Osborn was shot dead, a bystander named Hughes was killed, three others wounded, but the Elliotts escaped without any serious injury, P. J. Elliott being slightly injured by bullets from Osborne's pistol. The street battle was the culmination of a personal journalistic war that had been running for some time. Two weeks ago the World made charges against Elliott's family, insinuating that a female relative of Elliott was unchaste. Elliott retaliated with a four-column article charging F. W. Levering, editor of the World with being the joint proprietor of an assignation house. Levering is an Assistant State Oil Inspector and prominent in politics.

WINDOM'S SUCCESSOR.

Ex-Governor Foster, of Ohio, Nominated to Be Secretary of the Treasury.

President Harrison has nominated Chas. Foster, of Ohio, ex-Congressman and ex-Governor, to succeed the late Secretary of the Treasury Windom. Mr. Foster is said to be in entire harmony with the President on financial question, and his nomination has elicited favorable comment from varied political sources. Governor Foster was born in Seneca County, Ohio, April 12, 1828, and received his education at the common schools and finished at the academy at Norwalk. He first tried his fortunes in mercantile banking business and never held a public office until he was elected to the Forty-second Congress. He was re-elected to the Forty-third, Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses. He has also held the office of Governor of Ohio, and his administration was one of marked ability.

REST IN PEACE.

All that Was Mortal of Gen. Sherman Committed to the Grave.

In the presence of all the civil and military dignitaries of the land, Father Sherman, the favorite son of the dead hero, pronounced the simple but impressive Catholic burial service over the remains of his father at St. Louis, and the funeral of the last of America's famous captains of the Union army was over. But seldom in the history of this country has there been such a display of impressive solemnity. Thousands of military and a hundred thousand civilians joined the pageant; to the funereal time of booming cannon, tolling bells, and solemn dirge, the march to Calvary was begun and ended.

RESCUED FROM A LIVING TOMB.

Five Men Taken from a Chamber in the Jeansville Mine.

"Alive! alive!" was the joyful tidings from the ill-fated slope No. 1 at Jeansville, Pa. After eighteen days entombed in the darkness of the mine, five of the victims of the terrible disaster were found alive. How they survived is a miracle. They were lying in various positions all huddled together to keep warm. They were so weak with one exception they could not be moved. The men will not be brought to the surface for several days. Careful nursing will be given them, and every effort put forth to to save their lives.

The Chicago and Atlantic.

At Indianapolis, Judge Gresham affirmed Receiver Mallotte's report of the Chicago and Atlantic Railroad. The receiver was discharged and ordered to pay to the Chicago and Erie a cash balance on hand of $28,718, and the latter road assumes all the outstanding debts of the former.

An Opera House Burned.

The Grand Opera House at Rochester, N. Y., was destroyed by fire from an explosion of some kind in the interior. The Windsor Hotel, adjoining, was also damaged. The opera house was the property of Hon. Fred Cook, and cost about $75,000. It is a total loss.

In the Base-Ball World.

At New York the American Base-Ball Association repudiated the national agreement, removed President Thurman, and elected Louis Kramer, an attorney of Cincinnati, as President, Secretary, and Treasurer. Al Johnson's Cincinnati Club was admitted to membership.

His Body Found.

The body of Prof. Bancroft, professor of rhetoric and English literature at Brown University, Providence, R. I., who disappeared Dec. 8, was found in a pond at Cranston.

He Will Hang.

Wm. H. Crawford, who killed Mabel Mathias at Decatur, Ill., last August, was denied a new trial and was sentenced to be hanged March 14.

Blow at the Mormons.

At Boise City, Idaho, the Australian ballot bill passed the Senate. It is taken from the bills of different States and is very stringent. One provision which was opposed disenfranchises the Mormons who have practiced polygamy since Jan. 1, 1888. This section was passed.

A Big Assignment.

The Union Investment Company, of Kansas City, Mo., has assigned for the benefit of its creditors to Mr. E. S. Parker, its President, W. A. Bunker and B. B. Smalley. The liabilities of the company are about $1,000,000, and the assets are, according to Mr. Parker, an equal amount.

A Texas Negro Lynched.

At the village of Douglas, Tex., a negro named Tom Robin was lynched. He was a notorious character, who somehow succeeded in getting out of tight places in the law's meshes, and had been guilty of numerous crimes.

A Nebraskan's Crime.

At Leigh, Neb., William McCubbin, a wealthy and prominent citizen of that place, and well known throughout the State, shot and killed his wife and his hired man and then cut his own throat. Jealousy is said to have prompted the crime.

Ran Down a Bark.

The German Lloyd steamer Havre, while on her way down the bay out of New York, collided with an Italian bark in-bound. The bark sank almost immediately off buoy 20, near Bay Ridge. The steamer proceeded on her way to Bremen.

Big Fire at Parkersburg.

At Parkersburg, W. Va., fire broke out in a warehouse in the submerged district, caused by the water overflowing some lime. It spread rapidly, and ten houses, including four warehouses, were destroyed. The estimated loss is over $40,000.

Paid $3,000,000.

Three million dollars was the amount paid by the Laclede Gas Company to purchase all of its rivals in electric lighting, and secure complete control in St. Louis. It is the biggest deal of its kind ever made in the West.

Flood in Arizona.

Floods in the Salt and Gila Rivers, Arizona, have caused $125,000 damage, chiefly in and near Phœnix. Five Pima Indians were drowned. Governor Irwin has taken steps to relieve the destitute.

Poverty Drove Him to Despair.

H. F. Beninete committed suicide at Denver, Col. Beninete was a barber and went from Cincinnati on account of his health. Four weeks he endeavored to secure employment, but without success.

Two Bad Fires.

Fire Monday damaged the Kentucky State A. and M. College at Lexington $35,000, with $10,000 insurance. The People's Opera House and the Journal printing office at Evansville, Ind., also burned.

An Indiana Scandal.

AT REST IN CALVARY.

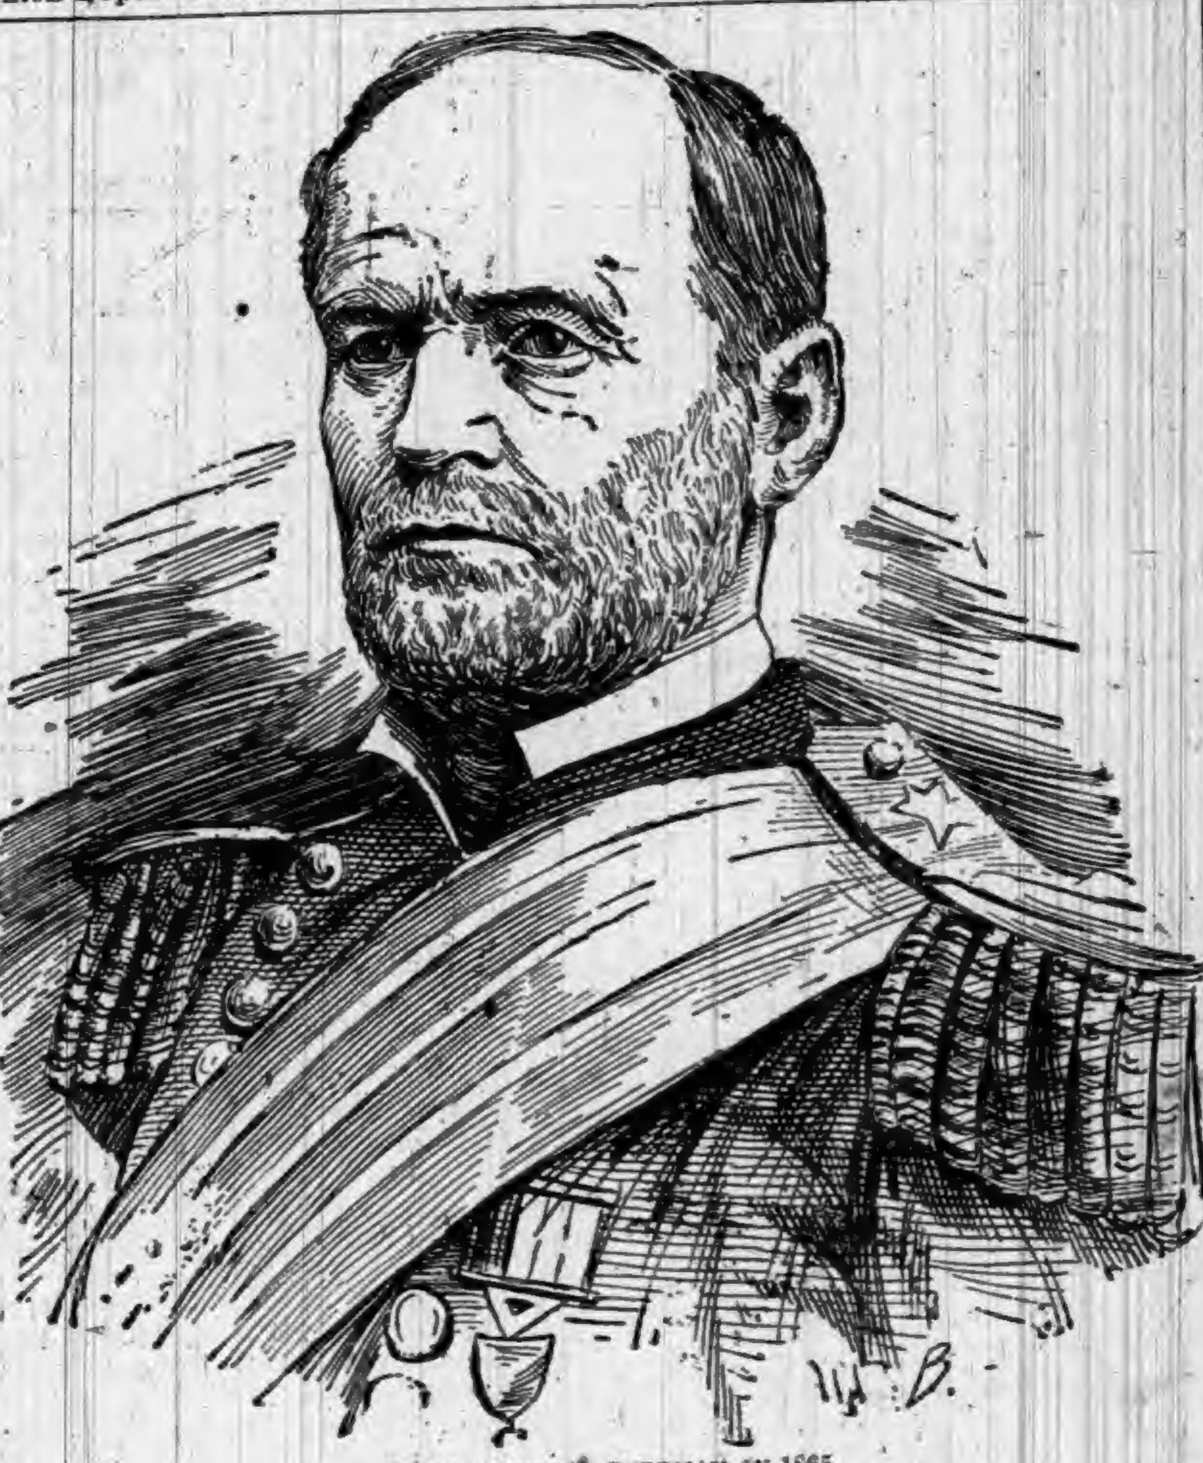
HONORED BY CONQUERED AND CONQUERORS.

The Last of the Great Union Captains Committed to the Grave—One Hundred Thousand People Do Him Honor—Description of the Scene.

Lay him low; lay him low,
'Neath the clover or the snow;
What cares he? He can not know—
Lay him low.

"Mid the thunder of cannon, the pomp of war, and in the presence of the civil and military dignitaries of the land, the Sherman funeral train rolled into St. Louis.

The display moved the multitude, a hundred thousand persons gazing on the spectacle in solemnity and silence. Perhaps the most impressive feature of the grand display was the appearance of the remnant of the battle-scarred legions who in their prime and vigor "marched to the sea." To-day they are old and gray, but the old spirit prevailed. Some walked as erect as the day they left Atlanta, many were stooped by the weight of years, others hobbled on crutches or limped painfully along behind the bier of their beloved commander. The old guard mourned but never faltered.

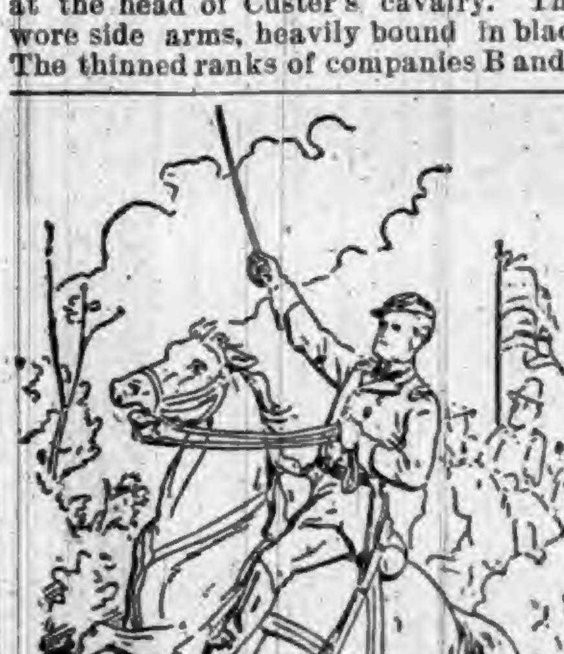


MAJOR GENERAL SHERMAN IN 1865.

Other trains had arrived loaded to their utmost capacity, and about the Union Depot there was a great crush, while between that point and Washington avenue the sidewalks were utterly inadequate to accommodate the crowd, which spread into the streets and left only sufficient room for the movements of the troops. The gathering was, however, very dissimilar to those on the festive occasions. Nearly all present wore badges commemorative of the dead hero, a deep stillness prevailed and all were impressed with the solemnity of the occasion.

The division upon which most interest centered was the first, composed of the famous Seventh Cavalry, under Colonel Forsythe, and the artillery and infantry of the regular army. The flutter of the gay red and white swallow-tailed guidons and the flash of the swords and yellow capes of the troopers as they wheeled into Pine street in double columns of companies, every horse keeping alignment and proper distance, would have called forth thundering applause on an occasion less solemn. But the crowd never for an instant forgot the occasion that had caused it to gather. The grim cannon, with their large, fine horses and their perfectly equipped artillerymen, excited scarcely less interest than the cavalry. The recent Indian troubles in the Northwest had sharpened public interest, and the troops who had seen service shone resplendent in the eyes of the spectators.

The bugle corps of the Seventh Cavalry led the procession, being preceded by a platoon of police, who cleared the way. General Merritt, grand marshal of the procession, and his aides, some twenty officers of the regular army, rode at the head of Custer's cavalry. They wore side arms, heavily bound in black. The thinned ranks of companies B and K of the cavalry showed the havoc at Wounded Knee, but the six troops showed 400 men in line. The artillery and infantry passed quickly in view, and then came the caisson on which rested the body of General Sherman.



GENERAL SHERMAN AT SHILOH.

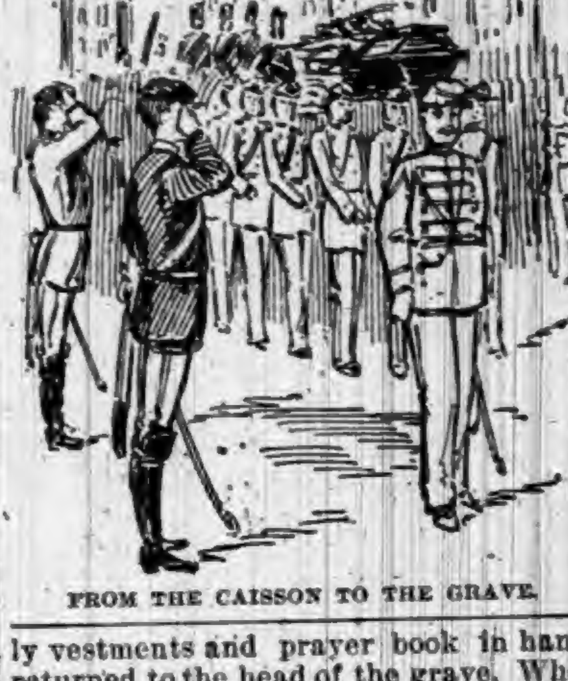
The second division, though less martial in appearance, presented a picture no less impressive. The Loyal Legion was in the van, followed by the Society of the Army of the Tennessee. The third division consisted of Grand Army posts, Sons of Veterans and allied orders. The old warriors turned out strong, fully 3,000 being in line. They came from Illinois, Iowa, Kansas and over half from Missouri.

Behind the Grand Army was a small body of men that attracted universal attion. In the center was a banner with the words: "Southern Historical Society." It was the ex-Confederate Society of St. Louis. The members, prominent citizens of that city, marched with bowed heads behind the man who, of all others, did most to overthrow the cause for which they fought and lost.

The fourth division was under command of Governor Francis and was made up entirely of militia.

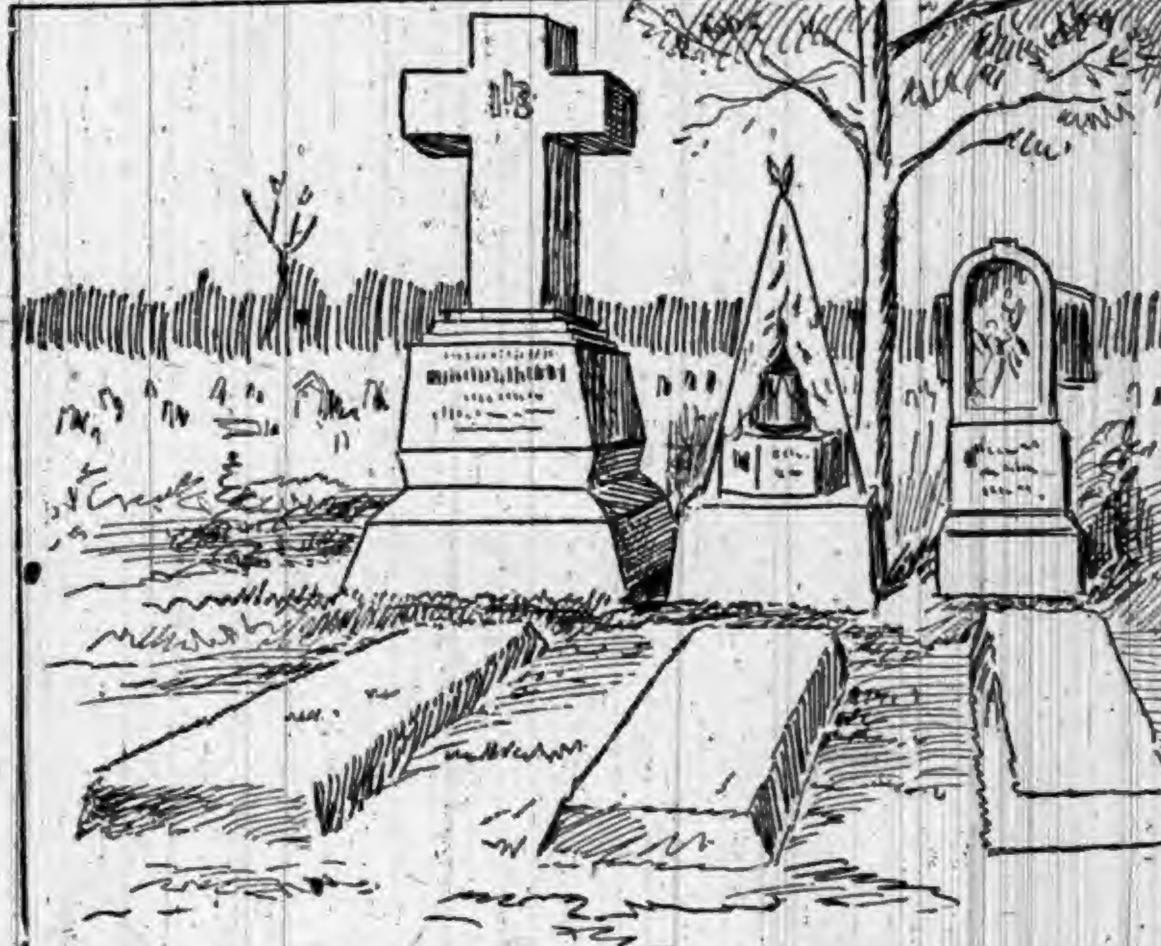
The imposing cortege reached the cemetery. The bottom of the newly dug grave was covered with evergreen and mosses. The American flags lined the sides—flags that had a history. The floral offerings were most magnificent. They came from all parts of the country.

The soldiers formed in line east of the grave, while the family and friends of the General immediately surrounded it. The eight sergeants transferred the casket from the caisson to the bank of the grave.



FROM THE CAISSON TO THE GRAVE.

In the shelter of an adjacent tomb Father Sherman, the dead soldier's favorite son, hurriedly donned his priestly vestments and prayer book in hand, returned to the head of the grave. When the bearers placed the casket on the supports above the grave the bugles blew a call and the band played the first few bars of Pleyel's Hymn. As the sound died away Father Sherman removed his hat, and, opening his prayer book, began the impressive prayers for the repose of the soul of the dead. When the service began the battalion of infantry stood at present arms facing the little group about the grave. In the midst of the services a hoarse, low voice gave the command "Carry arms—order arms" in quick succession, and the sharp click of the musket barrel and the ring of the butt as it struck the ground gave singularly impressive accentuation to the solemn words of the young priest. Father Sherman concluded with the invocation: "May his soul and the souls of all the faithful departed rest in peace. Amen! In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen!"



THE SHERMAN FAMILY LOT IN CALVARY CEMETERY.

Then, in quick succession, three volleys rang out over the grave and echoed from the surrounding hills. Three salvos from the artillery, which was stationed outside the cemetery, followed, and the funeral ceremonies of the last of the great Union captains was over.

A MISSION has been started in New York for married men. The first step taken by those in charge should be to relieve the Benedicts of the "pale cast of thought that has sicklied" over their faces while endeavoring to make themselves believe a saloon was a lodge room. An oculist also should be brought in to fit their eyes to a dancing, dodging keyhole.

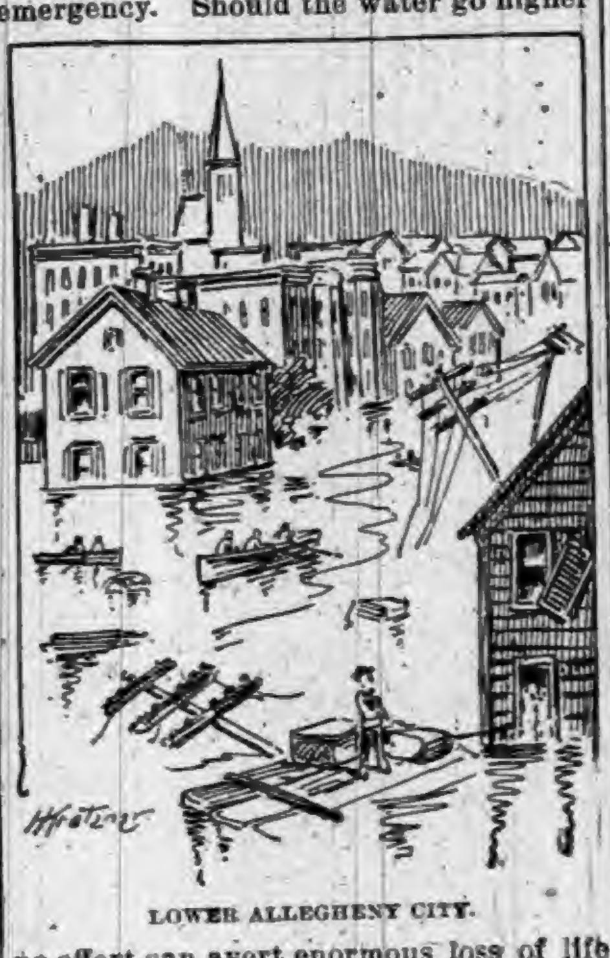
RIVERS STILL RISING.

JOHNSTOWN'S BUSINESS SECTION SUBMERGED.

Prisoners in the Jail Liberated to Prevent Them from Being Drowned—Rumored Loss of Life—On the Lower Mississippi.

Concerning the rising flood, a Johnstown, Pa., special says: Stony Creek began to overflow its banks and soon the water came pouring steadily into the streets and flooded the business district of Johnstown. Both the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers are rising rapidly and feeding the flood. Thieves took advantage of the excitement and began plundering right and left. By orders of the Mayor armed men were detailed in all parts of the city to remove property to places of safety and to show no mercy to anybody who was seen to steal anything. A mounted patrol was established and worked in connection with the gangs of volunteers in the rousing of sleepers and the moving of property. The railroad people sent a crew of men who worked all night at the stone bridge keeping the arches clear. Seven men imprisoned in the town jail were liberated because the authorities found that they might be drowned like rats in a cage, as did actually occur at the time of the great flood. Many bridges have gone down.

All over the city business men hastily rigged pumps and are laboring to get the water out of their cellars, but with discouraging results. Both the rivers are swelling from hour to hour. The marks show a depth of twenty-five feet. This is past the danger point, and both rivers and all their tributaries are growing larger. A height of thirty-three feet at least is looked for, and the greatest efforts are being made to meet this emergency. Should the water go higher no effort can avert enormous loss of life and property.



LOWER ALLEGHENY CITY.

Word comes from the lower part of Allegheny that a house has been swept away and all its occupants drowned, but no names or particulars can be obtained at present. All the large stores on Pennsylvania avenue, a short way from the Allegheny River, are flooded, and the work of removing property is very dangerous and slow. All of the railroads are seriously disabled by landslides and washouts, and all trains which have not been abandoned are very late. At Jeannette many persons have abandoned their homes to the flood, and have sought personal safety on the higher ground. Many bridges and houses have gone down already, and the water is rising at that point very rapidly. All railroad traffic has been suspended at Washington, Pa., since the bridges are not considered safe, and at Temperanceville, a suburb of this city, the Chartier Creek covers half the town and is spreading. Hundreds are homeless, and since all the trains are tied up they can only seek the higher ground and take with them what few belongings they can carry in their hands.

A message from Bradford tells that both branches of the Turva Creek have become roaring rivers, and Davies, Florence, Foreman and Ann streets are inundated. The water has come into the Bevario and Seifangs mammoth iron works and all the fires are put out.

At Pittsburg, the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers continue to rise and have reached the highest stage since the flood of 1884, the marks in both rivers registering 27 feet. The river men and those in possession of reliable information from up-river points expect the waters to reach the thirty-foot mark. In this event all of the First Ward of Allegheny and a large part of that city known as Manchester will be submerged. Every person in both cities owning property in places liable to be affected by the flood is preparing for the worst. Already many of the mills, glasshouses and factories along both river banks have closed down, while scores of residences between Sharpsburg and lower Allegheny City are surrounded by water, in some instances reaching to the second floors. Traffic on the Pittsburg and Western Railway has been entirely suspended between Sharpsburg and the depot at Union Bridge. Water covers the track from four to six feet almost the entire distance.

On the lower Mississippi the continual rise of the river, says a Helena (Ark.) dispatch, is causing much anxiety. In the neighborhood of the Williamson plantation the levee is quite bad and considered dangerous. A large body of men have been put to work to construct a "run around" in that locality, which is 300 yards in length. It is hoped that this will prevent an incursion of the water, which is barely two feet from the danger line.

Fell One Hundred and Twenty Feet.

How John Johnson, the Monson Swede, tumbled into the slate quarry pit has been told. Just how Johnson felt as he went through his wonderful fall of 120 feet sheer descent is yet to be narrated. The man had just emerged from the pit box used for ascent and descent, when, as he stepped upon the edge of the pit, the box swung, knocking him over the edge. Down he shot, out of sight of his horrified companions. The side of the quarry is not exactly perpendicular, being spurred with shelves sloping toward the bottom of the pit. Johnson dropped several score of feet and struck the first shelf in a sitting posture. He glanced off into space, turned several revolutions, and struck another shelf, and then shot with terrific force into a deep snowdrift at the bottom of the quarry. Said a fellow workman who had been with Johnson at the edge of the pit: "I did not dare go forward and look down, for fear I should see the man lying mangled on the rocks below. While I hesitated up came the box, and Johnson sat in it uninjured." When asked how he felt during his tumble he replied that he had no memory of it at all. It was all a blank from the time he left the edge of the pit until he brought up at the bottom. A peculiar feature of the case is that the man lost his pipe from his mouth when he fell, and could not be induced to leave the scene until it had been found.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

COPYRIGHT 1889

Taken away —sick headache, bilious headache, dizziness, constipation, indigestion, bilious attacks, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. It's a large contract, but the smallest things in the world do the business—Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They're the smallest, but the most effective. They go to work in the right way. They cleanse and renovate the system thoroughly—but they do it mildly and gently. You feel the good they do—but you don't feel them doing it. As a Liver Pill, they're unequaled. Sugar-coated, easy to take, and put up in vials, and hermetically sealed, and thus always fresh and reliable. A perfect vest-pocket remedy, in small vials, and only one necessary for a laxative or three for a cathartic.

They're the cheapest pill you can buy, because they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

You only pay for the good you get.

That's the peculiar plan all Dr. Pierce's medicines are sold on, through druggists.

"German Syrup"

G. Gloger, Druggist, Watertown, Wis. This is the opinion of a man who keeps a drug store, sells all medicines, comes in direct contact with the patients and their families, and knows better than anyone else how remedies sell, and what true merit they have. He hears of all the failures and successes, and can therefore judge: "I know of no medicine for Coughs, Sore Throat, or Hoarseness that had done such effective work in my family as Boschee's German Syrup. Last winter a lady called at my store, who was suffering from a very severe cold. She could hardly talk, and I told her about German Syrup and that a few doses would give relief; but she had no confidence in patent medicines. I told her to take a bottle, and if the results were not satisfactory I would make no charge for it. A few days after she called and paid for it, saying that she would never be without it in future as a few doses had given her relief." ⓖ

SCOTT'S EMULSION
OF PURE NORWEGIAN COD LIVER OIL.
I sometimes call it Bermuda Bottled, and many cases of CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis, Cough or Severe Cold
I have CURED with it; and the advantage is that the most sensitive stomach can take it. Another thing which commends it is the stimulating properties of the Hypophosphites which it contains. You will find it for sale at your Druggist's but see you get the original SCOTT'S EMULSION."

PRICKLY ASH BITTERS

One of the most important organs of the human body is the LIVER. When it fails to properly perform its functions the entire system becomes deranged. The BRAIN, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS, all refuse to perform their work. DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, RHEUMATISM, KIDNEY DISEASE, etc., are the results, unless something is done to assist Nature in throwing off the impurities caused by the inaction of a TORPID LIVER. This assistance so necessary will be found in

Prickly Ash Bitters!

It acts directly on the LIVER, STOMACH and KIDNEYS, and by its mild and cathartic effect and general tonic qualities restores these organs to a sound, healthy condition, and cures all diseases arising from these causes. It PURIFIES THE BLOOD, tones up the system, and restores perfect health. If your druggist does not keep it ask him to order it for you. Send 2c stamp for copy of "THE HORSE TRAINER," published by us.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

THE MELANCHOLY POET.

BY MRS. NAPOLEON B. MORANGE.

His path is sunshine; so he sings,
Of darkened ways and ruins old;
His memory, tenacious, clings
To that worn theme, the graveyard mold.

He tells in rhyme of fiery darts,
Of hidden tortures, fierce and slow!
He has a "trust" in broken hearts
And bears about a weight of woe.

His ghosts will not be laid to rest;
The fates pursue him but to scourge;
And his most lively strain at best,
Is solemn as a funeral dirge.

That flowers from the mold may spring,
Night be succeeded by to-morrow,
Cannot inspire him to sing:
His lyre is tuned to breathe of sorrow.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XXIV.

SIR REGINALD'S DEATH.

A few weeks passed on without bringing to Ethel the slightest occasion for a regretful sigh that she had changed her home and occupation; and whenever she paused to reflect upon the disagreeable duties required of her by Sir Reginald, the more she shuddered at the bare remembrance.

But, while filled with indignation at the brutal manner in which he had received the communication of the accident that had so strangely befallen her, and the abruptness of her dismissal, she longed to know whether he had recovered from the effects of his ungovernable rage, and also whether the missing animal had been found and restored.

Of course she dared question no one about it, and her only resource was to the village daily paper, which she read with eagerness, but no reference was ever made to the subject.

Occasionally, Dr. Elfenstein called to see Lady Claire, but the bare inquiry after the baronet's condition was all she felt at liberty to make.

The reply ever was that Sir Reginald's nervous system was in such a terrible state that it was impossible for him to improve as yet.

The manner of the Doctor toward herself she thought constrained and reserved, and this gave her intense pain. She feared that he did not approve of her course, and imagined, from his quiet appearance, that her refusal to acquaint him with the nature of her fault might cause him to magnify the error into a positive crime.

Little did the poor girl know that his coldness was assumed, merely, to hide the real state of his affections, in order to attend to the sacred duty which he had undertaken.

That duty he had by no means forgotten.

He had looked up, after many difficulties, papers of a remote date that had published the entire trial of Fitzroy Glendenning, and had noted the fact that the valet, Antoine Duval, had testified against him by relating his unfortunate words, spoken in a moment of intense excitement.

The thought had then occurred to him that this Antoine might be implicated in the deed of darkness that had so immediately followed.

Lately, his whole spare time had been occupied in trying to trace out the movements and whereabouts of this man.

For some time all that he could discover was that he had remained in Sir Reginald's employment about a year after the murder, and then had suddenly left the place and departed to some region unknown.

One day he accidentally entered the village postoffice just as the postmaster was saying to an old man who stood near:

"I wonder who Pierre Duval can be? I have a letter for him. There was a man named Antoine Duval living at the Hall once; do you know what became of him and whether he had a son Pierre?"

"He had no son, as he never married. Antoine is dead. He was killed by some unknown assassin in France, where he went after leaving Sir Reginald."

"Are you sure?"

"Perfectly. He did not live six months after leaving here."

"And his murderer escaped?"

"Yes, leaving no clew to his identity behind him. Detectives did all they could to ferret out the mystery; but, like Sir Arthur's fate, I suppose, it will never be solved."

The conversation here ceased, but Dr. Elfenstein had now learned a fact that he so long had wished settled. It was impossible to gain information through this Duval.

He was dead, and all hope in that direction was at an end.

Entering, therefore, his gig, he drove to the Hall.

He found Sir Reginald still restless and excited, and after leaving some new remedies with Mrs. Fredon, he bade him "good afternoon," and was hastening from the house, when Miss Belle Glendenning called his name as he held the front door open, and leaving it ajar, he stepped into the boudoir to speak to her.

"Dr. Elfenstein," she said very sweetly, raising her eyes to his, as he approached, "please excuse me for detaining you, but I desired so much to know what you think of my uncle, that I could not allow you to pass without inquiring."

"I wish I could say he was improving, but really he seems so nervous that he can scarcely gain in strength!"

This was what the designing girl wished. This remark gave her the opportunity long sought, to say some disparaging thing of one she feared he might admire, and she hastened to seize the chance.

"What a misfortune it was that such an unprincipled and exasperating girl ever entered this house!"

"What girl?" asked the Doctor, suspecting at once to whom she alluded, and rather anxious to draw her out. "You surely do not mean Miss Nevergail?"

"I surely do! She certainly must have been the cause of his relapse, as she was the only person with him, and has never been seen since."

"But Sir Reginald told me he ordered her from the house."

"I know he did. But any one can see she must have given him great provocation. Do you know where she is, Doctor?"

"I have an impression that she is teaching. She——"

Whatever Dr. Elfenstein intended to add to this sentence was never uttered, as an interruption came in the form of a quick, sharp cry for help, coming from Sir Reginald's room on the floor above, followed by the excited voice of the nurse calling him by name.

Bounding up the steps, two at a time, went the Doctor, followed closely by Belle.

As the physician entered the room he glanced toward the bed, and was horrified to see the baronet lying in a fit, while Lady Constance, who had entered at the first call, stood screaming by his side, and the almost equally alarmed nurse was rubbing and chafing his poor hands.

Going instantly to his side, the Doctor commenced doing all he could for his recovery, but, he saw at once that the case was apoplectic, and that he would never revive.

"How did this happen? How was he taken? I saw no symptoms of this a few moments since."

"I was sitting by his side reading," replied Mrs. Fredon, "when the strangest thing happened I ever knew. The door from the hall opened and a singular-looking man entered, and going to the foot of Sir Reginald's bed, stood there, with his eyes fixed upon those of the baronet before him, without speaking one word.

"Sir Reginald started up at the sight of the stranger, in the greatest terror, and, raising one hand as if to push him off, exclaimed:

"'Great God! Mercy! mercy!' then fell back on the pillow in the condition you now see him."

"Where is the man?"

"Seeing what had been the effect of his sudden appearance, he turned at once and fled from the room."

"Can you describe him?" asked the Doctor.

"Yes; he was tall and slender, his hair and beard were white, and very long."

"Had he anything in his hands?"

"In one a black leather wallet, in the other a book and some papers."

"It must have been old Stiles, the book-seller. I remember now, he was just going out of the front door as I heard you call, and ran up. I had left the door partly open, it being warm, to speak to Miss Belle in the boudoir, and he must have glided in unperceived, eager for a chance to get subscribers for his book. Seeing so sick a person, and the effect his unannounced presence had wrought, I suppose, caused his hurried flight from the house. In Sir Reginald's nervous condition the surprise of seeing so singular-looking a person by his bedside proved more than he could endure, and this has been the result."

The conversation now ceased, as every effort was required in order to bring the baronet back to consciousness.

For fully an hour Dr. Elfenstein and Mrs. Fredon worked over that senseless form, but all was of no avail, for just as the sun dropped behind the western hills, the spirit of Sir Reginald Glendenning passed back to his God.

Great indignation was expressed throughout the neighborhood when his sudden death and its cause became known.

The eccentricities of Rev. Edwin C. Stiles had taken a very offensive form, and it was decided that some person should be appointed to inform him that he never again must take the liberty of walking into a house until duly announced.

The person appointed to attend to this matter was Rev. Mr. Lee, who, being a brother minister, could, it was thought; approach him in the most serious and effective manner.

So Mr. Lee kept upon the watch for his appearance; but, strive though he might to find him, "Old Stiles" was nowhere to be seen, and at the end of ten days had not again entered the village.

In the meantime the funeral of Sir Reginald took place.

The greatest display that wealth and influence could exert was in full force.

The departed baronet had never been loved. His morose, ugly disposition had been exercised toward all to such an extent that much sorrow was not felt at his loss; nevertheless, he was a titled man, and his possessions were great; therefore, every mark of attention was bestowed upon his family, and he was laid to rest in all the pomp and grandeur that was usually bestowed upon the funerals of persons of his rank.

CHAPTER XXV.

THE CAVE.

About three days after the burial of the baronet, Ethel Nevergail, with Lady Clare Linwood, accompanied by a groom, started out for their usual horseback ride, as this exercise Dr. Elfenstein considered essential to the health of his young patient.

The two being always together and congenial in spirit, they enjoyed the hours thus spent exceedingly.

Both were skillful horsewomen and both were extravagantly fond of the saddle. Most of the scenery around ——shire was romantic and full of beauty, and they explored its many retreats with happy hearts, awake to each new and varied charm that nature opened so prodigally before them.

This morning they had resolved to follow a wild-looking path, leading through a deep wood, one they had never noticed, in rides past the spot, until the day before.

Laughing and chatting gayly, they pushed through a narrow path, half overgrown with weeds and brambles, piercing deeper and deeper into what seemed the densest woodland shade.

"Have you any idea, Roger," asked Lady Claire, at last, of the attending groom, who kept a short and respectful distance in the rear, "where this narrow path will take us?"

"I have not, my lady. I am sure I never noticed it before, and should not now, 'ad you not first discovered it. Perhaps, as it is so rough and overgrown, you 'ad better turn back."

"After awhile, Roger! As long as we can get through, I shall like to go on, in order to gratify my awakened curiosity."

Suddenly, after an advance of about half a mile, both girls noticed at once that footsteps had diverged from the beaten path, and looking towards the point to which they seemed directed, they were astonished to see the opening entrance, to what seemed a large cave, overhung with vines of thick luxuriance. These vines seemed lately to have been parted, revealing, as I have said, a passage into a roomy cave.

Reining up their horses, they paused before the spot, in order to survey it more closely, when all distinctly heard low moans of pain, issuing from a point near the entrance.

Surmising at once that some fellow-being was in distress, Ethel requested Roger to dismount and investigate the place, and immediately return to report the cause of the apparent suffering within.

The man dismounted as requested, and disappeared from view, only to return with the news that the eccentric book-seller, Rev. Edwin C. Styles, was very ill in that remote and hidden spot.

Bidding Roger assist her to the ground, Ethel at once hastened to the side of the sick man.

She found him stretched upon an old cot bed in this damp and gloomy retreat, far away from the haunts of men. On glancing rapidly around, she noticed a few articles of furniture and a few utensils for daily use, but saw no trace of fire or food.

On this rude bed, then, lay stretched the form of the eccentric being who had been so much talked of during the past few days. His cheeks were flushed with fever, while the weary movements of his head told of intense pain in that region.

Clasped in his thin, white hands upon his breast lay the mysterious wallet.

Seeing at once that the poor creature was very low, perhaps near death, Ethel stepped back to the entrance of the cave, and requested Roger to ride with all speed to summon Dr. Elfenstein to his side. She also requested Lady Claire to remain within call, while she herself would watch over the sufferer until aid should come.

"I think, Roger, you should also acquaint Dr. Elfenstein with the fact that this is no place for so sick a person, and advise with him as to his removal. If removed, it should be done at once, and he may suggest the mode, as well as the place, that can receive him."

Thus charged, Roger tied Ethel's horse securely, and then rode rapidly away.

At once Ethel returned to her self-assumed charge, and endeavored to arouse him from the stupor he was in, in order to ask of his relatives and home.

But the effort was in vain.

A low, incoherent muttering, in which the words "brother" and "save me," were mingled, was all she could hear.

It seemed a long and weary while to the anxious girls, before voices were heard in the distance, announcing the return of Roger, with the physician and others who came to the help of the afflicted and unknown man; but it was really a very speedy arrival.

Dr. Elfenstein was the first to enter the cheerless place, while two men besides Roger followed, ready to bear the sufferer in their arms to a wagon quite a distance down the road, beyond the narrow pathway the girls had pushed over on the backs of their gentle horses.

The Doctor paused a moment to examine the patient, but looked very grave as he did so, and whispered to Ethel:

"I think we are too late to save him. He will live but a few hours, as death is even now upon him. He must be removed, however, at once, and as I know of no other place, I shall take him to my own house. Strange that he should have lived here alone so long, as this cave seems to have been inhabited quite a while."

Taking the wallet in his hand to draw it away, he found it impossible to do so, as the death clutch of the dying fingers upon it was tight and still strong; so, leaving it where it was on his breast, the Doctor summoned the men, who gently raised the slight form in their arms and bore him forth, followed by the physician and the two girls.

Pausing in haste to assist them to their seats in the saddles, Earle murmured a few polite words to each relative to the case, then hurried after the sad little procession, while the ladies slowly brought up the rear.

Soon the poor man was lying on blankets and a soft pillow upon the floor of an easy wagon, while the Doctor sat by his side, carefully fanning away the flies that might annoy, and thus they wended their way back to their homes.

A few hours later, in the comfortable guest chamber at the young physician's home, the poor wayfarer breathed his last, and as the sympathizing physician closed his eyes and straightened his form he drew away the wallet carefully and folded the poor, thin hands upon his breast.

Leaving him then in the cold sleep of death, he left the room in order to send for an undertaker to perform the last offices upon the emaciated corpse.

After dispatching a messenger he summoned Mrs. Clum as a witness, and passed to his private office in order to examine the mysterious wallet, that should, he hoped, reveal the secret of the wanderer's family and home.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Tiger of the Beach.

The octopus, who lurks in the coral reefs or under the ledges, has only to show himself to make a brave man chill. The fiendish perseverance with which the shark follows a ship day after day melts one's nerve away. There is death in the touch of the stingaree—destruction in the fall of a whale's flukes—eternity in the rush of breakers on a rocky shore. But the grimness of all these is overshadowed by the soft purring and gentle lapping of the tiger of the beach—the unseen beast who gathers a dozen victims where another claims one.

We stand here on the sandy shore with the surf only knee high. The sky is clear, the sun shines brightly, and there are a hundred people about us. If one should predict danger he would be ridiculed. What's that? The sand suddenly cuts out from under our feet, feeling as if some one had pulled at a rope we stood on. Was it a cave? Did some one pull a stick away? No. It was the soft, low growling of the tiger of the beach—a note of warning. It was the undertow. It startled you for a moment, but you soon forget it and push forward into the surf. Now you stand just right to get the shoulder breakers as they roll in, and in the excitement you forget the cruel fangs and sharp claws waiting for you. The shore is only a few yards away. Men, women, and children are laughing; why should you fear?

Of a sudden the water deepens. You push back and jump the roller thundering in, and now there is no sand for your feet to touch. The undertow has been pulling, pushing, and coaxing you on, and now——! You can swim. You are startled, but you see the shore is nigh. You strike out bravely, but your legs feel as if weighted down. The vexed waters beat you and keep you short of breath. You exert more strength. You make a grand effort. You are simply startled at the mysterious something which has dragged you out.

A-h-h! See his face blanch! See his wild strokes! Look into his eyes and read the horror they express! The undertow is cold—cold as well as merciless. It has pulled him out and down the coast foot by foot, until he suddenly realizes that he is drowned. If men notice that he is far out no one speaks of it. If they see him beating the water they pass it by as a sport. The tiger of the beach has crept down among a hundred people in open day to snatch a victim, and he has accomplished it.

"Help! Help!"

It comes too late. The life guards are too far away. Even were they right here they could not save him. He has been looking death in the face for the last two minutes, and he was unnerved before he cried out. He cried out because men always do in their last moments if they die like this. Terror has blinded him. He does not see the people running up and down the beach. Terror has made him deaf. He does not hear the shouts sent out to him to make a last effort. Even as they shout he throws up his hands, utters a long-drawn cry of agony, and the spot where we last saw his head is now covered with foam. The tiger has pulled him down.—New York Sun.

Judge Wisely.

Don't judge a man by his clothes. God made one and the tailor the other.

Don't judge him by his relations, for Cain belonged to a good family.

Don't judge a man by his speech, for a parrot talks, but the tongue is but an instrument of sound.

Don't judge a man by his failure in life, for many a man fails because he is too honest to succeed.

Don't judge a man by the house he lives in, for the lizard and the rat often inhabit the grandest structures.

When a man dies, they who survive him ask what property he has left behind. The angel who bends over the dying man asks what good deeds he has sent before him.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

IN the Senate, on the 17th, the credentials of William A. Peffer, Senator-elect from the State of Kansas for the term beginning March 4 next (replacing Mr. Ingalls), were presented by Mr. Ingalls and placed on file. Also by Mr. Turpie the credentials of Mr. Voorhees. Mr. Morrill from the finance committee, reported back adversely Mr. Stanford's bill to "provide the government with means sufficient to supply the national want of a sound circulating medium," and it was placed on the calendar. The conference report on the bill granting right of way to the Junction City & Fort Riley Street Railway Company through the Fort Riley military reservation in Kansas was presented and agreed to. In the House Mr. Thompson reported a resolution for the impeachment of Alex. Boerman, Judge of the United States District Court for the western district of Louisiana, for high crimes and misdemeanors. Ordered printed and recommitted. The diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was then taken up, the pending question being on Mr. Dolph's amendment to increase the salary of the Minister to Portugal from $5,000 to $10,000.

THE Senate, on the 18th, passed the copyright bill, by 36 to 14, after accepting the Sherman amendment to admit copyrighted foreign books after payment of duty. As the bill now stands, only newspapers and periodicals are exempted from import duties. The Custer pension bill is a bone of contention, many Congressmen contending that the $250 per month now paid the family is sufficient. The appropriation of $10,000 for seven Congressmen to visit Alaska to assist in settling boundary lines, and Yellowstone Park to decide upon necessary improvements, excites general merriment, as it is known to be only a junketing trip. In the House Mr. Payson, of Illinois, was elected Speaker pro tem. The Indian appropriation bill was passed and the House went into committee of the whole on the postoffice appropriation bill.

SPEAKER REED was again in the chair in the House the 19th, having recovered from his illness. The House passed the Senate bill for the relief of settlers on certain lands in Southern Iowa. In the Senate the credentials of Mr. Vance, of North Carolina, for his new senatorial term were filed. Several bills were passed, after which the Senate resumed consideration of the Indian depredations bill. There seems to be a very general belief that ex-Gov. Foster of Ohio will be called to succeed the late Secretary Windom. The President is said to have a very high opinion of Mr. Foster's financial ability, and close friends of the latter claim that the appointment has been offered him. The executive branch of the government has about abandoned Washington. The President and his cabinet, with most of the department heads, are in New York attending the obsequies of Geneeal Sherman.

THE Senate after transaction of routine morning business on the 20th proceeded to the consideration of pension bills unobjected to. There were 130 pension bills passed in forty-five minutes. Among them was one increasing the pension of Brigadier General Landrem, of Kentucky, to $50. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the Nicaragua Canal bill (giving the guarantee of the United States Government to the company's 4 per cent. bonds to the amount of $100,000,000). The house committee on coinage, weights and measures decided by a vote of 8 to 4 to report adversely the senate free coinage bill. Messrs. Wickham, Walker, Comstock, Knapp, Taylor, Tracy, Wilcox and Vaux voted against the bill and Carter, Bartine, Bland and Williams for it.

BOTH branches of Congress got down to work on the 21st. The sundry civil appropriation was completed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations and reported to the Senate, to be considered the 23d. A House bill correcting an error in the act for the construction of a bridge at South St. Paul, Minn., was passed. The Nicaragua Canal bill received considerable attention, and a correction was made giving the estimated cost at $1,000,000, instead of $100,000,000. The bill went over without action. Senate bill authorizing the building of a railroad and wagon bridge across the Arkansas River at Little Rock was passed. The conference report on the navy appropriation bill was presented and agreed to. In the House, the Senate bill, fixing the salaries of the United States District Judges, was passed. It provides that the salaries of the several Judges of the District Courts of the United States shall be at the rate of $5,000 per annum. The House then began consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill.

The Smoker's Revenge.

A Parisian paper recently chronicled this true tale of "The Smoker's Revenge."

Scene: A railway compartment. "Madame, do you object to smoking?" No reply. The question is repeated with a similar result. Thinking the lady deaf, the male passenger made a pretense of lighting his cigar.

"Do it if you dare!" exclaimed Madame Potin, with an unearthly gleam in her eye.

"Just to see what'll happen, here goes!" he said, stung by the lady's tone. And he applied the match.

The lady bounced from the seat, and, snatching the cigar from his lips, threw it out the window.

"There is a compartment for smokers," she hissed.

The gentleman, quite taken back, thought it best to be quiet, while secretly bemoaning his lost havana.

Five minutes' silence. Madame Potin flushed with her triumph. Suddenly the lady's muff appeared instinct with life, and presently a little poodle put out his head to take a breath of air. The gentleman arose, smiling affably, seized the little dog by the tail and tenderly dropped it out of the carriage window, saying in dulcet tones. "Madame, there is a compartment for dogs!"—Illustrated American.

He Appreciated Courtesy.

Mr. Kulpepper, an epicurean smoker, was traveling on the railway with a passenger from Berlin who was smoking a horrid cigar. As all signs and hints proved unavailing, Mr. Kulpepper had recourse to an oft-tried experiment. Rising from his seat he politely said:

"Will you allow me to open the window?"

At the same time he "quite accidentally" brushed against the hand of his fellow passenger, causing him to drop his cigar. Mr. Kulpepper had the additional misfortune to step on it, and said in alarm:

"Oh! I beg a thousand pardons. Allow me to offer you one of mine, they are not half bad."

"With your kind permission," answered the Berliner, quite pleased. He took three cigars out of the case presented to him, and put them into his pocket, saying:

"These are a first-rate brand; I'll smoke 'em on Sundays."

And with that he proceeded to light another one of his own. — Nuesse Nachrichten.

How's Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

NEVER BEEN DISAPPOINTED.

As a general family remedy for Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc., I hardly ever use anything else, and have never been disappointed in the effect produced; it seems to be almost a perfect cure for all diseases of the Stomach and Bowels.

CONGRESS ends next Wednesday, March 4.

DEKALB county is reported to have a population of 24,507 according to the new census.

ABOUT a quarter of a million is missing at the postoffice department at Washington.

S. DAKOTA has got a senator at last. The democrats and Alliance folks very sensibly united.

THE Lake Front has been abandoned as a part of the world's fair. All will be at Jackson Park.

BILL will be up this week to pay county commissioners a salary. In DeKalb they will get $292.

EX GOV. CHARLES FOSTER, of Ohio, has been chosen to succeed the late Secretary Windom as secretary of the tressury.

THE salary bill, as it now stands, gives the clerk of DeKalb county $5,400; auditor, $2,500; recorder, $1,500; treasurer, $2,000; sheriff, $2,400. It passed the house Monday.

THE Indianapolis Sentinel notes that the fifty-first congress, now sitting at Washington—the first which has been republican in both branches since the congress elected in 1880—signalized the first ten months of existence by creating 1,161 offices, involving an annual increase in the government pay rolls of $1,235,000. And Mr. Tom Reed's congress was not content with this large addition to the public burden. During the same period of ten months it added $135,000 to the aggregate salaries attached to offices already in existence, making a grand total of $1,370,000 added in ten months to the government's salary list.

SENATOR CARLISLE, in a recent article in the Forum, shows the blundering incapacity of this republican administration, by proving that they have about wasted all the great surplus Cleveland left them, and will soon be at the bottom. He presents the official figures which show that, on March 4, 1889, when Harrison became president, the cash balance in the treasury, which was a surplus, amounted to $150,000,000. At the end of this fiscal year, June 30, 1891, there will be a deficit of $14,000,000, and at the end of the next fiscal year, June 30, 1892, a deficit of $84,000,000.

He also shows that while the population in 1890 was only sixteen times as great as in 1790, yet expenditures were more than 130 times as great. While the population was nine times as great, the per capita expenses of the government were forty-eight times as great. And the ratio of increase is constantly becoming larger, although this is a time of peace. The expenditures for the fiscal year 1891 are greater by 12 per cent than for the preceding year, although the population has increased only 2½ per cent.

FIRST M. E. CHURCH, AUBURN, IND.

DEDICATED FEB. 22, 1891.

The elegant and costly M. E. church, an exact cut of which we give here, was dedicated Sunday, Feb. 22, a day that will long be remembered by the church and all its friends in Auburn, and elsewhere. It had been our intention to show the picture last week in connection with Mr. McIntosh's article on the history of the M. E. Church here, but the cut did not reach us in time. At 10:30 Sunday forenoon, the great bell rang out in clear, silvery tones, that the hour for the first service had arrived and people began to throng the sidewalks that led from over town to the edifice, toward which, all feet now turned. It was but a few minutes, and the great auditorium was full, and the crowd filing back in to the lecture room. This too, was at once filled, and then the great gallery above was crowded. Then chairs, and finally many benches from the old church and lecture room were brought in to accommodate those still standing, and finally, some had to remain standing. On the stand about the pulpit were many ministers, besides the pastor, Mr. Lamport, who was of course a central figure, as all feel that much is due to him, as a leader in the year's work, that brought such fine results. Rev. C. H. Payne, of New York, delivered a most powerful and eloquent sermon, one that fitted the occasion. At its close, he announced that there was lacking quite a sum to pay for the church and its belongings. The total cost including basement, organ, etc., would be over $19,000, and $8,400 was still neededed. He asked for contributions, saying although many had been liberal, more would have to be done. Then came announcements of subscriptions. First, there were several who gave $500 each, then it fell to $300, then to $100 and so on down the list, and in a short time the money was rasised, and some more. A few who could not attend this service, were present at the evening service, and gave liberally, and at last it was found that the total subscribed for the day, was $12,548 03 including cash taken up as a collection at both services. It is well that they got more than the amount first called for, as there are always deficiencies to make up, and more or less interest on sums already borrowed, as well as on the amounts that will not be paid till the time allowed, three years, has expired, and when the grounds are fitted up, and some other needed expenses met, there will be no surplus. To say that the church as a body, and individually feel glad and grateful, is but a mild statement. We rejoice with them. It was a glorious success. They have worked hard, made sacrifices and undergone wearing and exhaustive cares. But they have succeeded and they have a right to rejoice. The grand building is an honor to Auburn, and so the county and a splendid monument to energy and devotion of its builders. Again we say, let us rejoice with them.

Card of Thanks.

We, the official Board of the M. E. Church, desire to express our hearty thanks for the generous response to our call for aid to free our beautiful church from debt. Your generosity exceeded our most sanguine expectations and will enable us to provide for the interest which we must pay on loans until your subscriptions are converted into cash. Praying the blessings of heaven upon you we are gratefully yours.

By order of Official Board,
H. M. LAMPORT, Pres.
A. ROBBINS, Sect.

Died.

Roscoe Dale, son of John D., and Louvina Ferguson, was born in St. Joe, Ind., Sept 27, 1890, died Feb. 5, 1891, aged four months and nine days. The funeral services were conducted by writer in the M. P. church, at St. Joe, Feb. 7, 1891.

"This lovely bud, so young, so fair,
Called home to early doom,
Just came to show how sweet a flower,
In paradise would bloom.

Ere sin could harm or sorrow fade,
Death came with friendly care,
The opening bud to heaven conveyed,
And bade it blossom there."

Obituary.

Mrs. Eliza Douglas, died at the home of her son, Michael Douglas in this place, last Thursday, Feb. 19, at 6 a. m., after a brief illness. She had been a sort of invalid for many years, caused by a stroke of paralysis, and later, by a fall which broke an ankle. But at the time of her sudden death, had been in as good health as usual. About five in the morning, Mr. Douglas heard her rap on the headboard of her bed, and on going to her, she asked for the medicine she had been taking. It was brought, but seemed not to help her, and Mr. Douglas started for Dr. Matheny, but she died soon after he returned. The attack had not lasted an hour. She was buried Saturday, at Leo, near her former home. Mrs. Douglas was born in Richland county, Ohio, and at her death her age was 75 yrs 4 months. She came to Allen county about fifty years ago, and resided near Leo, since that time. Her husband died many years ago, and lately she had lived with her children. Last winter she had been with her son Michael, here in Auburn, then in the summer with a daughter near Leo, and about two months ago, came back here remaining here since. Mrs. Douglas had always been a member of the M. E. church and a most devout and consistent christian lady. She leaves a daughter and four sons to mourn her loss, and with whom our people deeply sympathize.

JUDGE BERKSHIRE, of the supreme bench of Indiana, died at his home in North Vernon, last Thursday. He had been sick from a severe attack of typhoid pneumonia, about two weeks. He was about 60, had served three terms as circuit judge, and elected to the supreme bench in 1888. This is the second vacancy by death this year. He was universally respected and his death will be a misfortune to the state.

The Afflicted's Friend.

Drs. Fruth, formerly of New York, principals of the Fruth Medical Institute, Chicago, Ill., stand second to none among the noted professional men of this country. This extraordinary success is the result of the most thorough preparation for their calling, and an unusually large and successful practice has enabled them to gain commendation even from their professional brethren. On account of their large practice in the west, they have permanently established, and incorporated, under the laws of the state of Illinois, THE FRUTH MEDICAL INSTITUTE, for the treatment of all forms of chronic, nervous, catarrhal, stomach, kidney, bladder, the special diseases of men and women. The Institute has the largest and finest collection of instruments and appliances, and the most eminent corps of physicians and surgeons in the world. A word to the afflicted: If you are suffering from any form of chronic disease that has baffled the skill of the home physician, come and have your case examined and they will tell you at once if your case is curable or beyond hope. Many diseases are so deceptive that hundreds of persons have them before they even suspect it—they know they are not well, but they neglect to find the cause and delay in seeking the proper treatment. Your case may now be curable but if you obstinately persist in procrastination, the time must come when medical aid can render you no assistance, when the door of hope is closed against you and the disease has worked irreparable injury. Then for the first time you will realize what negligence means. Please do not cast this matter aside and destroy your best intereests, but call at the Swineford House, Auburn, Tuesday, March 3d, for free examination, and if a cure can not be effected you will be so informed for you can not longer afford to trifle away your life and happiness upon uncertainty and ruinous experiment.

ON THE ROAD.

The fields are all sweet with hay,
The brakes are all blithe with song,
On the hedges rose garlands sway,
Convolvulus clusters throng,
As shoeless, and tattered, and grimy, and gray,
He shuffles along.

A skylark sings high above,
A thrush from yon hanging bough,
Far away in the wood a dove;
But he passes with scowling brow.
Their melodies once he was wont to love;
He hates them now.

Hates all; save the sheltering night,
When under a bank he creeps,
And Squalor is out of sight,
And Hunger its distance keeps,
And unmocked by the birds and the meadows bright,
His misery sleeps.

—New York Tribune

An Affecting Incident.

The conflagration of the scaffolds intended for fireworks for the celebration of the marriage of Louis XVI is generally known. Amidst the distracted multitude pressing on every side, trampled under the horses' feet, precipitated into the ditches of the Rue Royale and the square, was a young man, with a girl with whom he was in love. She was beautiful; their attachment had lasted several years; pecuniary causes had delayed their union; but the following day they were to be married. For a long time the lover, protecting his betrothed, keeping her behind him, covering her with his own person, sustained her strength and courage. But the tumult, the cries, the terror and peril every moment increased. "I am sinking," she said; "my strength fails. I can go no further."

"There is yet a way!" cried the lover in despair; "get on my shoulders." He feels that his advice has been followed, and the hope of saving her whom he loves redoubles his ardor and strength. He resists the most violent concussions; with his arms firmly extended before his breast he with difficulty forces his way through the crowd; at length he clears it. Arrived at one of the extremities of the place, having set down his precious burden, faltering, exhausted, fatigued to death, but intoxicated with joy, he turns round. It was a different person! Another, more active, had taken advantage of his recommendation. His beloved was no more!—New York Ledger.

Just an Ordinary Woodchuck Log.

When I was a boy my father had a fine field of clover, and he discovered that woodchucks were making sad havoc with it. On the field was a log, and near the log the destruction was the greatest. My father told me I must kill those woodchucks. I went to the field a number of times, but could not get a shot at them. I came to the conclusion that I must use a little strategy; so one morning I went to the field before light. With my gun both barrels loaded with a heavy charge of BB shot I got in a position where I could take a range of the log lengthwise.

As it began to grow light the woodchucks began to gather for their morning frolic. They mounted the log, sat up and looked around to see there was nothing to disturb them. When I thought the log was nearly covered with them I pulled both barrels at once. The gun kicked me over. When I got up there were no woodchucks to be seen. I went to the log and picked up fourteen dead woodchucks, and it wasn't any great log for woodchucks, either.—Boston Record.

But Office Cats Are Very Useful.

We have edited a newspaper for several years, and in that time we have received propositions to advertise goods on shares, to advertise and take the pay in pills, in trees, in flowers, in free tickets, have even had opera house managers demand advertisements as a matter of news, and then demand pay for admission or no go; but it remained for an enterprising merchant of Temple to cap the climax with his proposition. He has a lot of strayed animals, and after hinting around and suggesting "news" items that would contain some reference to the lost animals, he finally proposed to advertise for them if we would take the pay in cats.—Temple Times.

Her Regard for Propriety.

A gentleman on a 'cycling tour staid a night at a prim old lady's cottage, the inns being full. He was very deaf, and took care to impress the fact on his hostess, with instructions that some one must enter his room to wake him at a particular time in the morning. Waking of himself some time later he found that the old lady, with creditable regard for propriety, had slipped under his door a note inscribed:

"Sir, it is half-past 7!"—London Tit-Bits.

Simple Safeguards on Electric Railways.

M. C. Sullivan suggests in The Electrical Engineer that a very wise and simple precaution will be the supplying to each car operated by electricity of a pair of rubber gloves, insulated pliers and nippers, and suitable inscriptions to indicate their use. These may possibly be the means of preventing delay and inconvenience, and of obviating serious results in case of accidents.

Indigestion

IS not only a distressing complaint, of itself, but, by causing the blood to become depraved and the system enfeebled, is the parent of innumerable maladies. That Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best cure for Indigestion, even when complicated with Liver Complaint, is proved by the following testimony from Mrs. Joseph Lake, of Brockway Centre, Mich.:—

"Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition. My appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life."

KLINCK

IS THE NAME OF THAT

Wonderful Remedy

That Cures Catarrh, Hay-Fever, Cold in the Head, Sore Throat, Canker, and Bronchitis.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

From the Hon. Harvey D. Colvin, Ex-Mayor of Chicago:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

Caution! —There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

M. E. Olds, editor of that chatty paper, the St. Joe News, together with his wife, were here over Sunday, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. Zimmerman, the ladies being sisters. And both ladies were worthy and hardworking teachers at the time the editor of this paper was "DeKalb county's itinerant schoolmaster."

The Old Folks' Hop last Wednesday evening was not very well attended. There were too many other things going on at the same time. But those who went had a good time, as in fact they always do when the old folks have their ball. Several were over from Garrett and took part in the festivities.

Spring is approaching, the season when trees bud, flowers bloom and birds sing, and all nature dons her gayest colors, making life enjoyable. It is no less a fact that your winter clothes will be out of season when that time comes. Be up, then, with the birds, and fly to Peter Young's and have him make you the slickest suit in town. 9tf

Ex-commissioner O. H. Widney moves the first of the week to Albion, where he will hereafter make his home. We believe he has for some time been a partner with his son M. H. Widney in the lumber yard there, and finds it more to the interest of the business, for him to be there also. We dislike the idea of losing so good a citizen, but Albion will be the gainer, and we have many good friends over there.

We hope our subscribers will keep the paper containing the picture of the new M. E. church, in Auburn, not only because it shows the finest and best building in DeKalb county, that stands as a monument of the energy and devotion of our M. E. friends, but because it also represents the push and enterprise of the COURIER, the only paper in the county that has given its readers the privilege of seeing it as it is. The COURIER always leads—never follows.

Our old friend Wm. Oiler, of Mooresville, now in his 86th year, came to town on foot Monday morning, as the roads were too bad for a team. He thought first he would wait and go home on the afternoon train, but that was several hours yet, and so he started back on foot. For a veteran of the Mexican war, and of the rebellion also, we think Mr. Oiler is quite a lively old chicken. He says he would like to go west and fight Indians, having already had to fight two races of white men.

Joseph Ferguson will canvass this place, and vicinity, in fact the county, for the sale of a very valuable work. It is called "The Story of Man," and as the title indicates, it gives a complete account of the various peoples that have lived on the earth since the creation. It goes back of history and gives an account of of the people of the stone age, the lacustrine age, the bronze age, the druids, moundbuilders, ancient Central Americans, Peruvious Egyptians, etc. It is very interesting to read, and very valuable for reference, as the matter is clearly divided under separate heads. We hope to see him have a successful business, for a good book is valuable to all.

Henry Wolf made us a pleasant call Tuesday afternoon. Notwithstanding the fact that age and the effects of a long confinement in a rebel prison, are bringing wrinkles to his brow and whiteness to his locks, he is a jovial, good-natured remnant of what was once stalwart man. Come again Mr. Wolf, we always welcome "the boys in blue."

The Mentone Gazette has a new "head 'printermatically" speaking, and is now called the "Tri County Gazette." Bro. Smith used to be one of DeKalb county's teachers, and of course, gets up a good paper. Judging from the general run of the Gazette, we conclude that Mentone is a pretty lively place, and that friend Smith is its prophet.

J. G. Clapp, the photographer, went down to the new M. E. church, Saturday, with his "kodak," and brought back a negative for the interior view of that magnificent structure. He will finish up a number of these views, which can be secured of him at an early date. It will be to the interest of all who wish to have something nice to hang on the wall as a memento of the christian pride in Auburn, to see Mr. C., and get a picture from that negative.

A letter from Miss C. E. Strickland, Washington City, speaks of the fine weather they are having there the 17th and 18. At that time we were having dark, drizzling weather, and the letter reached here at the time people were scraping the sleet, slush and snow from the sidewalks last Friday morning. Miss S. has many friends here, and the COURIER especially admires cash in-advance way of doing business, and hereby acknowledges the receipt of next year's subscription, with thanks.

The editor (?) of the Wienerwurst must have been unusually drunk last week, while inventing that slush about our writeup of the masquerade. We can assure him or them, or it, that nothing was farther from our thoughts, than to lug them into decent company, even in type. We did not even know they had not been invited till our attention was called to their heartrending confession. But in view of the experience at the Old Folks' Hop, we can see the other club did wisely to leave them out.

We can hardly forgive Bro. Alvord, of the Albion Democrat for alluding to Anneke Jans, as a "prolific old Dutchman." Anneke was a fine old lady, whose greatest fault was in foolishly giving a long lease to some valuable property, in the heart of New York City. Now, many thousand people are her descendents, or the descendents of her relatives, and all want a slice of the millions, that will be recovered some day. Two distinct families in this country, are among them. Uncle Davie Clark, in Franklin township used to claim relationship, and we believe our Jackson friend John Shugers, or his wife can be counted in. DeKalb is ready to see this fortune go to either of the worthy families.

The fine cut of the new M. E. church, which adorns to day's COURIER, is from a photo by Rice, of Auburn, and excellent copies can be had of him no doubt by all who wish. It will be a fine ornament for the parlor.

Mrs. Fiandt, who resides in the north part of town, died quite suddenly last Friday morning. She was a sister to the late Mrs. Hoover, wife of J. B. Hoover and well known and highly respected by the older people about here.

Jacob Getts of Noble county called up to pay his respects to the Courier last week, in company with his brother W. H. Getts. He resides on the old Spooner place, having married the late Mr. Spooner's daughter, sister to Dr. Spooner.

How would it do for our town council to buy the old M. E. church, move it to the square on which the old school house stood, and fit it up for a city hall? It would be convenient for use on many occasions, besides making a better room than the one now used. We see some of our people favor this.

Saxby McIntosh, was married about Thanksgiving, to a young lady in Steuben county, Miss Cora Conley. He kept it very still having been working here most of the time, but at present assisting Surveyor Hook. Saxby is an enterprising young man and we hope to see him settle down and become a successful business man.

Fairview Celebrated.

In this late day and age of the world, it would be little short of a breach of patriotic devotion and a disrespect to parental remembrance, for Americans to disregard the anniversary of the father of our country, George Washington. It is a happy thought that DeKalb county people bring themselves up to the standard of traditional love, as will be shown in the remainder of this article. On Sunday evening, Feb. 22, an entertainment was given at Fairview church, in Concord township, under the auspices of the Fairview choir, who gave their promise for fifty dollars, which was to go toward paying for a new organ, and a bell. The entertainment was gotten up in such a way that it would commemorate the advent of the father of our country into this world, and at the same time appeal to the people's liberality in giving according to their appreciation of the efforts being put forth by that industrious little body. The program was well arranged, not too long nor too short, and profuse in tasteful variety of songs, both patriotic and religious, recitations, declamations and essays. It was wonderful to see how promptly every one responded to his or her name on the program. The selections, musical and literary, were of the highest order, and in perfect taste with the demands of the occasion. It is a very noticable fact that the young people who compose the family of Jos. Koch, form a first class choir alone. Language is inadequate to give a just description of this grand affair, but it will be in order to say that the ceremonies and their rendition were extraordinarily good and would have done great credit to the best talent of our larger towns. This, of course, was the result of weeks of preparation, for which Mr. C. H. Brown, should receive due credit as master of ceremonies. The money connected with the occasion amounted to $8.30. We hope to be entertained by these young people again in the near future.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. The Indianapolis Sentinel says that Mr. Moughler, of Garrett, has been there a few days, perfecting a valuable patent that he has originated.

Three well-known young men, of Garrett, were in Auburn Monday, J. W. Baker, G. P. Chew and T. A. Carpenter. The last, however, we learn, has not been residing at Garrett for a time, having been located at Burlington, Iowa.

Rev. A. L. Lamport, of Bristol, a brother, and Rev. A. W. Lamport, of of Richmond, a cousin of Rev. H. M. Lamport, of this place, were here over Sunday, a guest of the last named. They were here to attend the dedication. A. W. Lamport preached the dedicatory sermon in the evening.

The Y. P. S. C. E. will give an entertainment next Sunday evening, March 1st, at the Disciple hall in Corunna, of dialogues, recitations, essays, readings, songs, etc. Will close by presenting the Parable of the Ten Virgins, in costume. A collection will be taken to help defray expenses of hall and organ. All are invited to attend.

With the L. L. C.

Everyone feels pleased and honored, who has an invitation to meet with the ladies of this popular club, and enjoy their hospitality and the greater treat that always accompanies it. It was with this feeling that the fortunate husbands and other friends met with them last Saturday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. Zimmerman. In their manual of work for the year, this special occasion had been provided for, and the gentlemen have been looking forward to it for some months. The literary program for the evening was not a long one, but was very appropriate. It being the meeting nearest Washington's birthday, the work was all of a patriotic character, as would befit such an occasion. At the roll call each lady responded by repeating some patriotic verse or sentiment, and these responses showed thought and good taste, and the care they had used in selecting. The chief literary exercise was by Mrs. Geo. Schaab, whose paper "Hatchets," as its name would indicate, led one's thoughts up to the great moral ideas to be derived from the fanciful incident that Weems tells of the boyhood of the Father of his country. Baseless as we know the hatchet story to be, one cannot help wishing it true. Mrs. Schaab made it still more attractive by the bright thoughts and valuable lessons she drew from it. The literary exercises were followed by a season of social enjoyment, finished up by a fine collation, for the ladies are not only critics literary, but are critics culinary as well. The editor of this paper considers himself fortunate in being one of the fortunates. It is good to be a brother-in-law.

The Little M. E. Folks.

About the sweetest little affair we have seen was the entertainment given by the little folks of the M. E. church, at the old building last Wednesday evening. There was the doll drill, in which, by the way, there were two different classes, and which, no words can fully describe. And the little chaps who had earned 25 cents each, created a good deal of laughter. As each one's turn came, he or she told in a quaint little rhyme, how the quarter was earned. Each little stanza was greeted with applause, for there were many cute devices, and for the audience, many surprises. It was an evening of pleasure, for which there was no drawback whatever. Mrs. Robbins, Mrs. Lamport and the other ladies who helped, and the mothers and fathers, who encouraged and assisted the little ones at home, deserve not only the gratitude of the church, which received the cash benefit, but of all in attendance, who had the enjoyment of the pleasant occasion. The receipts were $48.04.

Miss Wiant's Evening.

Miss Wiant's entertainment, secured for the high school library, was fairly well attended, in spite of one of the worst storms known this winter. The lady is both accomplished and entertaining, and gave a series of selections in such a way as to satisfy the most exacting critic. In fact, we think she has greatly improved, even on her former ability, and her audience showed their appreciation by a generous amount of applause. At times it took the full power of her strong, clear, cultivated voice to drown the roar of the storm outside, but she succeeded admirably. The high school is pretty sure to have a bad storm whenever they try to help the library project, but we hope they will persevere, and that their faithful endeavors may be crowned with success at last.

M'KINLEYISM EXPOSED.

THE TARIFF LAW MINUTELY EXAMINED.

An Item by Item Comparision of the Old and New Tariff Laws and the Mills Bill—Specific Duties Changed Into Ad Valorem Equivalents—Some Enormous Duties.

The Reform Club of New York has recently published a pamphlet which will prove of great assistance to all persons who wish to study the McKinley tariff law. This pamphlet is called "Comparison—Item by Item." It gives a comparison of each duty under the old tariff with the same under the Mills bill and under the McKinley law.

The value of this comparison is in the fact that it gives the ad valorem equivalent of the specific and compound duties. The difficulty with most people in getting a correct idea of the extent and weight of the tariff burden is that most duties are levied at so much per pound, gallon, yard, etc. This is called a specific duty. On a very large class of articles, too, there are two duties, one specific and the other ad valorem. Now, if a person does not know the first cost of an article by the yard, pound, etc., it is impossible for him to form a correct idea of just what the duty on it means. He cannot tell how much duty there is on the dollar's worth of goods. Yet this is the only form in which one can decide whether a duty is high or low. When a blacksmith is told that the duty on anvils is 2½ cents a pound he cannot form an exact idea of the size of this duty unless it is estimated at so much on the dollar. In order to get that estimate he must know the price of anvils when brought in at the custom house. That price was an average of 6 cents a pound in 1889; and the duty of 2½ cents a pound is therefore equal to 42 cents on the dollar's worth. That which is landed at the custom at $1 goes to the wholesale merchants at $1.42, and is passed on through other dealers and finally to the blacksmith at a price at least double the first cost.

Still more difficult to estimate are the so-called compound duties, or specific and ad valorem duties on the same article. Take corduroys, for example; when a woman is told that the corduroy goods that she buys pay a duty of 14 cents a yard and 20 cents ad valorem, she cannot tell just how high that duty is. She must know that corduroy costs in England all the way from—15 cents a yard to 70 cents. Then she can calculate the duty on the dollar's worth. She will find that on corduroy worth 15 cents a yard the duty will be 14 cents specific and 3 cents ad valorem, equal to 17 cents, or a single ad valorem duty of 113 per cent. In other words, a dollar's worth of corduroy will leave the custom house at a cost to the importer of $2.13.

The pamplet already referred to changes all duties into their ad valorem equivalents, and any one can learn from it what tariff duty he pays on a dollar's worth of any goods. The three tariffs compared have each two columns, one for specific duties and one for equivalent ad valorem duties. The headings of these columns are given thus:

Tariff of 1883.		Mills bill.		McKinley tariff.
Specific.	Ad val.	Specific.	Ad val.	Specific.	Ad val.
$ cts.	p. c.	$ cts.	p. c.	$ cts.	p. c.

The changing of the McKinley compound duties on woolen goods into their ad valorem equivalents gives a striking exhibition of the enormity of the present tariff law. A few cases will suffice. Here is how the matter looks when the compound duties on woolen and worsted cloth, blankets, wool hats, and flannel for underwear are changed into their equivalents:

WOOLENS AND WORSTEDS.

	McKinley tariff.
	Specific. $ c.	Ad val. ꝑ c
Valued at not above 30c per lb.	33 c &40 ꝑc	150
Valued above 30c and not above 40c per lb.	38½c &40 ꝑc	136
Valued above 40c and not above 80c	44 c &50 ꝑc	125
Valued above 80c per lb.	44 c &50 ꝑc	86
BLANKETS, HATS, AND FLANNELS.
Valued at not above 30c per lb.	16½c &30 ꝑc	91
Valued above 30c and not above 40c	22 c &35 ꝑc	98
Valued above 40c and not above 50c	33 c &35 ꝑc	101
Valued above 50c, and not above 60c	38½c &40 ꝑc	119
Valued above 80c	38½c &40 ꝑc	71

The equivalent ad valorem duties on knit woolen goods range from 79 to 166 per cent.; on woolen and worsted yarns, from 72 to 132; on women's and children's dress goods from 73 to 123. On ready-made clothing, composed wholly or in part of wool, the duties are 49½ cents a pound and 60 per cent., and these duties are equal to an ad valorem duty of 85 per cent.

This tariff dictionary might well be called an exposure of McKinleyism.

Steel Rail Production.

Our total production of Bessemer steel rails last year was 1,797,489 gross tons of 2,240 pounds. The price of rails has recently been fixed by the steel rail combination at $30 a ton. The average total cost of producing a ton of steel rails in this country has been given officially by Labor Commissioner Carroll D. Wright as $25.77. The net difference between this cost of production and the price at which the combination sells rails is $4.23 a ton. If this was the net average gain on the total product of last year our steel rail manufacturers—there are now only six companies—cleared $7,600,000 last year. The price for the first half of last year was considerably above $30.

The present price of rails in England is about $24 per ton, or a difference of $6 cheaper than at our trust price. To cover this difference our trust is given a protective duty of $13.44 a ton. If this difference of $6 a ton continues throughout this year, and we produce the same quantity of rails as last year, we shall be compelled to pay $10,780,000 more for them than the price of the same quantity in England. In order to insure ourselves the privilege of paying more for our rails, and increasing the prices of our railroad tickets and of freights, we tax steel rails $13.44 a ton. The protection on 1,797,000 tons at this figure equals $24,150,000. This is the sum which foreign rail-makers would have to pay if they should try to flood our markets with 1,797,000 tons of rail.

But the home market is sacred, and we must keep it for our own use to make our own millionaires. No wonder that Andrew Carnegie is reported to have said at a dinner in London last year, that the American people are great fools to tax themselves to make millionaires of a few smart men like himself.

Where the Tariff Is a Tax.

Italy is one of the most heavily protected countries in Europe. The high tariff taxation on the necessaries of life in that country lays an intorable burden upon the poor laboring people, and perhaps in no country in Europe is there so much poverty.

But there is strong and intelligent opposition in Italy to high protection. The opponents of protection there have been making a study of the actual cost of protection. One of these, Signor Pareto, has published a statement showing the tariff taxation of a workingman's family at Florence. This family is composed of poor hard-working people.

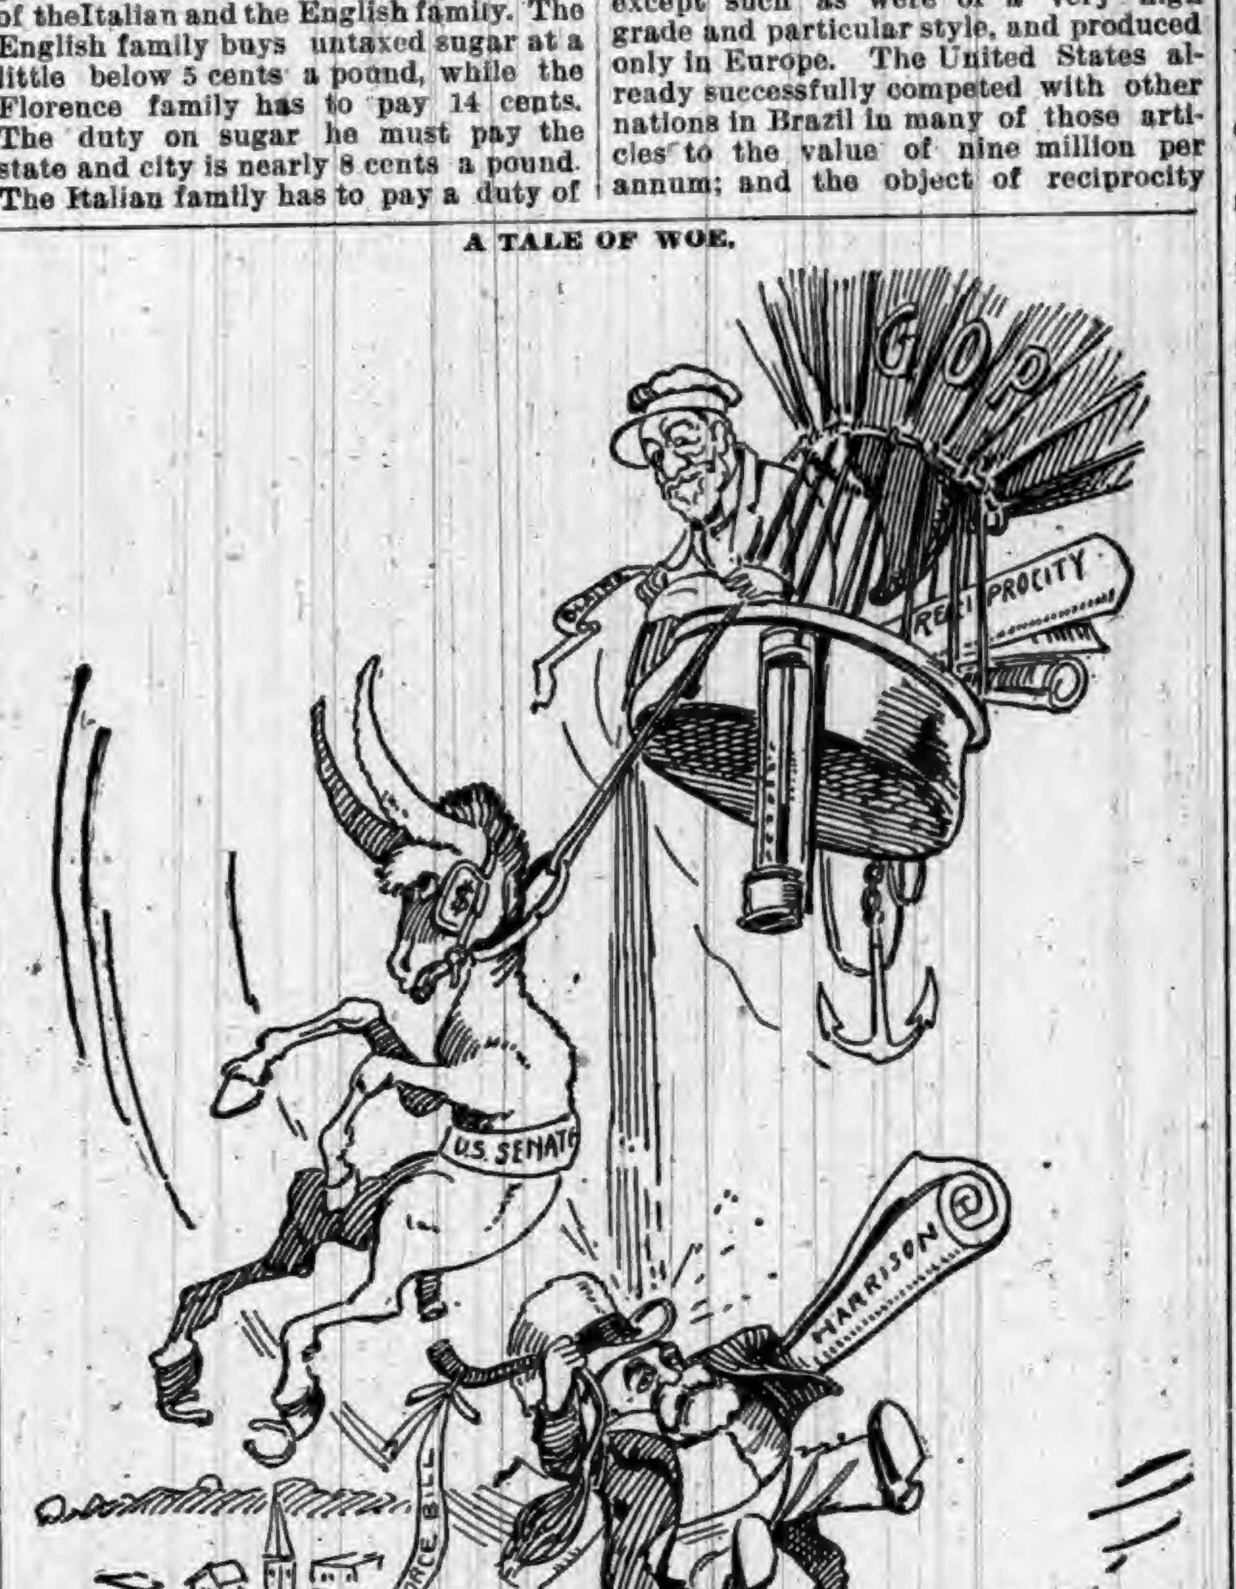
Its entire earnings for a year amounted to $476, and its savings were $5. Out of the family's expenses of $471, taxes direct and indirect amounted to $113, or 23 per cent. of the total expense. The share of the royal treasury was $69, the city took $34, the province $2, and about $18 went into the pockets of protected manufacturers and agriculturists.

This family spends $41.20 for clothing, but that sum included a tax of $7.41, of which $1.28 went to the state and $6.13 into the pocket of the protected manufacturer. In like manner, the family paid out for bread $77.40, in so doing turning over to the state $7.22, to the city $2.69, and to the protected producer $8.85.

So much for protected Italy. A similar study of the expenditures of a family in England has been made. In England there is no protective tariff, and the amount of taxation upon the poor is, therefore, far less than in protected countries. The English family in question was composed of a man and wife and five children. Their expenses for a year were about $385, of which only about $17 went to pay taxes. The rate of taxation of the Italian family was more than five times greater than that of the English family.

A few cases will show why there is so great a difference between the expenses of the Italian and the English family. The English family buys untaxed sugar at a little below 5 cents a pound, while the Florence family has to pay 14 cents. The duty on sugar he must pay the state and city is nearly 8 cents a pound. The Italian family has to pay a duty of over 18 cents a pound on coffee, the English family 4 cents. Kerosene oil costs the Italian family 58 cents a gallon, which includes a duty of 36 cents a gallon. Evidently the tariff is a tax in Italy.

A TALE OF WOE.



The last hold breaks.

Imports for December.

When President Harrison sent his message to Congress he pointed with pride to the fact that up to some time in November the entries of goods at the New York Custom House were 8 per cent. greater than for the corresponding period in 1889. He called attention to this fact in his defense of the McKinley bill against the charge that it hindered importation. The President apparently took delight in noting that the tariff bill was failing to do the very thing it was intended to do.

But the President was too hasty. The recently published report of the Treasury Department on imports and exports for December shows some marked decreases in imports for that month. The total decrease for the month on dutiable goods was nearly a million dollars' worth. The following table gives some of the entries in which a decrease is reported, together with the imports in December, 1890 and 1889:

Articles.	Dec., 1890.	Dec., 1889.
Buttons	$108,000	$211,000
Clocks	9,000	39,000
Cotton manufactures	2,942,000	3,110,000
Fancy articles	447,000	540,000
Manufactures of flax, etc.	1,260,000	1,418,000
Cutlery	72,000	167,000
Gloves of leather	336,000	392,000
Leaf Tobacco	572,000	1,082,000
Wool manufactures	2,597,000	3,981,000

These articles came into the country only because American citizens wanted them. Why should other American citizens seek their own gain by having laws passed to take away liberty of purchase from their fellow-citizens who wish to order their goods from such countries as can make them cheapest and best?

To Form a Tin-Plate Trust.

Our paternal protectionist Government has taken the unborn tin-plate industry under its wing, and already there are signs that when the "infant" is born it will find a ready-made trust to enable it to feast and fatten on the tariff spoils.

A late number of a high-tariff organ, the Boston Commercial Bulletin, prints the following piece of news:

"Edwin Norton, of Norton Bros., Chicago, and C. R. Britton, of Britton & Co., Cleveland, have visited the United States Tinplate Mill at Demmler, Pa., to see how that plant can be embraced in a reorganization of the American Tinplate Association; to include all the present members; to absorb the Western Sheet-Iron Association, which is largely represented in Wheeling, Cleveland and Chicago, and to admit all manufacturers of sheet-iron, steel billets and tinplate who desire to become members—about 25 firms at the start."

Not only are the people to be made to pay a high tariff price for their tin plate, but apparently a trust is to step in and Shylock-like demand the drop of blood. In doing this the trust will simply take advantage of the situation which the McKinleyites have created. Why should the people object to trust prices if they can tolerate McKinley prices? They should not forget that McKinleyism and trusts have the same objects in view, the enrichment of manufacturers by raising prices.

Competing at Home and Abroad.

Protectionists are happy over the prospects of increasing our exports of manufactured goods to Brazil. But one grave question arises, How are we to beat England in South America if we cannot beat her at home? In order to keep England out of our own market we lay heavy duties on manufactured articles. The McKinley duties on the manufactured goods which Brazil now promises to admit free are as follows:

	McKinley protection.
Agricultural tools and machinery	45 per ct.
Mining and mechanical machinery	45 per ct.
Scientific instruments and books	45 to 60 per ct.
Railway construction and material	45 per ct.

and those on which Brazil will reduce the duties one-fourth are as follows:

	McKinley protection.
Cotton manufactures	40 to 60 per ct.
Manufactures of iron and steel	45 per ct.
Furniture of all kinds	35 per ct.
Manufactures of India-rubber	30 per ct.
Manufactures of leather	35 per ct.

It is said that Brazil will be bound to admit all these articles on the same terms with England as from the United States. Can our merchandise pay freights to Brazil and then compete successfully with British merchandise. If so, why does it need protection from England in New York, when it has no ocean freight to pay?

This question was put to Mr. Charles R. Flint, of New York, who was a member of the Pan-American Congress, and who is largely engaged in South American trade. Although a stout protectionist, Mr. Flint, says the report, "denied that the United States were unable to compete in their own market with European nations in those articles of merchandise which it was expected that the United States would find a large market for in Brazil under the reciprocity convention. The United States did successfully compete in their own territory with other nations in those articles specifically mentioned in the convention, and all those embraced under general terms, except such as were of a very high grade and particular style, and produced only in Europe. The United States already successfully competed with other nations in Brazil in many of those articles to the value of nine million per annum; and the object of reciprocity was not to create in Brazil for the United States a now non-existing market, but greatly to enlarge a market already enjoyed."

This being the case, the protective tariff can serve no other purpose at home than to give the protected manufacturer a monopoly of the boasted home market.

McKinley's Somersault.

McKinley is the champion jumper of somersaults. In his Toledo speech he undertook to reply to ex-President Cleveland's utterances at the Thurman banquet in favor of such a policy of taxation as will cheapen commodities to the consumer. After attempting to show that cheapness is not to be desired, that we must have a tariff to shut out European cheap goods and prevent European competition, he claimed that in this way home competition would be developed, "giving the American consumer better products at lower prices, and the farmer a better market than was ever enjoyed under the free trade tariffs of the Democratic party."

McKinley objects to "free trade tariffs" because they make things too cheap; and yet he promises by his protective tariff to make things cheaper than ever a free trade tariff does! McKinley's head is muddled.

Protecting Wool in France.

It is said that the woolen industry of France is having precisely the same experience as our own in regard to the duty on wool. It is pointed out, too, that in spite of protection the domestic supply of sheep is declining, both in quantity and quality, and in consequence the French manufacturers are clamoring for free wool, although they are very strenuous in favor of keeping up the tariff on the manufactured article. All of which shows that there is about as much human nature in one part of the world as in another. One touch of human selfishness makes all protected industries akin.

Dame Rumor Says It.

We are fated in this world to be often misunderstood, and to have our motives misconstrued. If your face is ruddy with the glow of health your kind neighbors will circulate a report that you have "taken to drink." If you chance to attend church or an entertainment without your wife, who may be in New Orleans on a visit, your good neighbors will insist that there is trouble, and that divorce proceedings are not improbable, for Women must gossip, or they can't sleep.

The following anecdote illustrates the ease with which our actions are misconstrued:

"My dear," said young Mrs. Fitts at the play, "it is a humiliating confession for me to make, but I am positively nervous for want of a piece of gum." "I'll go get you some as soon as the curtain falls," said Mr. Fitts. And various of their acquaintances, as they saw him disappear, said what a pity it was that so sweet a young woman should be bound for life to such a slave of the demon drink that he could not even wait until the play was over to satisfy his depraved appetite.—Exchange.

An Indianapolis man went to Europe and on his return was searched at the dock in New York, and several fine watches were found in his pockets. He was trying to save a duty of 25 per cent. How does it happen that this man became a smuggler and ran the risk of going to the penitentiary, if it be true, as the protectionists assert, that goods are made in America and supplied to the consumer as cheaply as in Europe?

Our leather and boot and shoe manufacturers boast that they can beat the world. They exported last year over $12,000,000 of leather and manufactures of leather, including more than a half million dollars' worth of boots and shoes. Yet they are given a protective duty of 25 per cent. on foreign boots and shoes, and 10 per cent on leather.

John M. Smith, an attorney of Portland, claims that the matter was settled in the United States courts, Fourth Howard's U. S. Reports, in a dispute between Massachusetts and Rhode Island. They decided that while the line between the two States was wrong, it had been acquiesced in for years, and the case was dismissed.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

The day in the Senate, February 14 was devoted to the introduction of bills. No quorum was present in the House, and reports of committees were heard.

Appellate Court bill passed the Senate, February 16, with amendments limiting its existence to six years, and reducing the salary of Judges thereof from $4,000 to $3,500 per annum; bill also passed for creating of court of arbitration. House—Indianapolis city charter bill passed; also bill to require street railway companies to pave between rails and two feet on each side; to regulate the system of weighing coal at the mines; the Indianapolis library bills; to protect labels, brands, trade marks, etc.; defining legal fences; to exempt Indian lands from taxation; to recognize the State Board of Health; to protect the dairy product, etc. Resolutions to convene at 9 a. m. adopted.

In the Senate, Feb. 17, bills were engrossed as follows: Placing benevolent institutions under civil service rule; placing appointment of inspector of oils in hands of State Geologist; resolution passed asking city to condemn ground east of State house, to be converted into a park. House—Resolution to investigate T. H. & I. railroad accounts reported. Bill authorizing increase of capital stock of building and loan associations to $25,000,000 defeated. Resolution to compel temperance committee to consider measures relating to temperance laid on the table. Bill authorizing formation safety deposit and guarantee companies passed. Bill to erect natural gas plant in Indianapolis passed, also bill to authorize cities to construct waterworks, electric light plants, natural and artificial gas plants passed.

The following bills were passed by the Senate, Feb. 18: Raising the salaries of Prison Wardens from $1,500 to $2,500, and of Deputy Wardens from $1,000 to $1,500, and providing that these officers shall have no perquisites whatever; adding imprisonment of from ten to thirty days to the penalty provided for selling liquor without license; providing a fine of from $5 to $50 for hunting on inclosed lands without the written consent of the owner.

The following bills were introduced: Authorizing a loan of $700,000 to carry on the State government, and $700,000 to meet special and regular appropriations; authorizing the Auditor of State to sell lands in Rush County purchased for Fairview Academy; prohibiting railroads from making overcharges for freight and providing penalties; providing for the discharge of life and long term convicts after twenty years good behavior; appropriating $200,000 for the Wold's Fair, etc.; amending the common school act; authorizing County Commissioners to borrow money to erect and repair public buildings to an amount not to exceed 2 per cent. of the valuation of property; amending the act relating to the duties of City Councils in the matter of building streets, alleys, and sewers, and issuing bonds in payment of the same; prohibiting the sale of real estate owned by the State, except by consent of the General Assembly.

The following bills were passed by the House: Providing that Sinking Fund Commissioners may use funds to buy bonds for which such funds were levied, at the market price at any time; appropriating $1,000 to advertise for the publication of certain text-books; repealing the law which holds the estates of insane persons liable for their maintenance in insane asylums; establishing the office of Natural Gas Inspector, at $1,200 per year, said inspector to be appointed by the State Geologist; making it unlawful for railroad companies to heat coaches, cabooses or mail cars with stoves; providing that in the settlement of estates where the heirs all live in the same county, and give their consent, the administrator's notices may be limited to ten instead of twenty-one days.

In the Senate, February 19, the bill for civil service for benevolent institutions was defeated; building association killed; bills passed placing control of Evansville metropolitan police in hands of council; giving State Geologist power to appoint oil inspector; abolish water works trustees in towns of 5,000 inhabitants. House—Fee and salary bill considered, but no progress made. Large number of bills passed, including one to publish names of persons receiving aid from township trustees.

Bills were passed by the Senate, Feb. 20, requiring registration of dogs; licensing pawnbrokers; long discussion of the cigarette bill, but no action thereon; bill for discharge of incurable and insane defeated. House—Fee and salary bill engrossed.

Gathering and Drying Tea in Japan.

The gathering is commenced in May. Girls are employed, at an average of 5 cents a day, from sunrise to sunset. The sprig of leaves is nipped off carefully with the finger-nails and deposited in a basket, and other servants carry these baskets, as they are filled, to the tea-planter's house and necessary out-houses. Here other employes spread them out on large palm mats and here the first and only adulteration essayed by the tea-planter is executed. Having decided the percentage of exhausted leaves to mix with his fresh leaves these are put also on the mats. The drying is in the open air and in the sunlight. That having been completed, the next operation is the curling. To effect this the dried leaves are poured into open cast-iron receptacles over a charcoal furnace beneath of accurately graded heat. Sufficient laborers are placed around these pans to constantly take in their hand the leaves as they become heated and to roll them. When the curling is done the leaves are packed in coarse, cheap boxes, freighted to the nearest tea market and there sold to a foreign tea-dealer. Every foreigner keeps a special variety of tea-taster, who has to tell the quality of the fresh leaf and to make a guess at the amount of leaves that have already done service.

Train Struck By Lightning.

It has been thought that lightning could not strike a train. The theory has received a complete contradiction. At Dischau, Prussia, an express train running at the rate of sixty kilometers per hour into the station broke down the buffing apparatus, ran into the interior facade of the station, and broke up against a neighboring house. An investigation established that the accident is to be attributed to the effect of lightning, which fell upon the train.

Iron Production in the United States.

The United States has now become the greatest iron producing nation of the world, having produced 8,202,703 gross tons of pig iron in 1890, against about 8,000,000 gross tons produced in Great Britain, an excess of about 1,000,000 tons, or 15 per cent. It has been attained by the most astoundingly rapid development of a vast industry which the world has ever seen, our pig iron product having increased from 4.04 millions in 1885 to 9.20 millions in 1890, an increase of 5.16 millions or 128 per cent., during which period the British product increased only from 7.42 to 8.00 million tons, or about 7.8 per cent.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN
NERVINE TONIC
—AND—
Stomach AND Liver Cure
The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.
It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If everyone knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDER,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every-one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.
My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic
Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

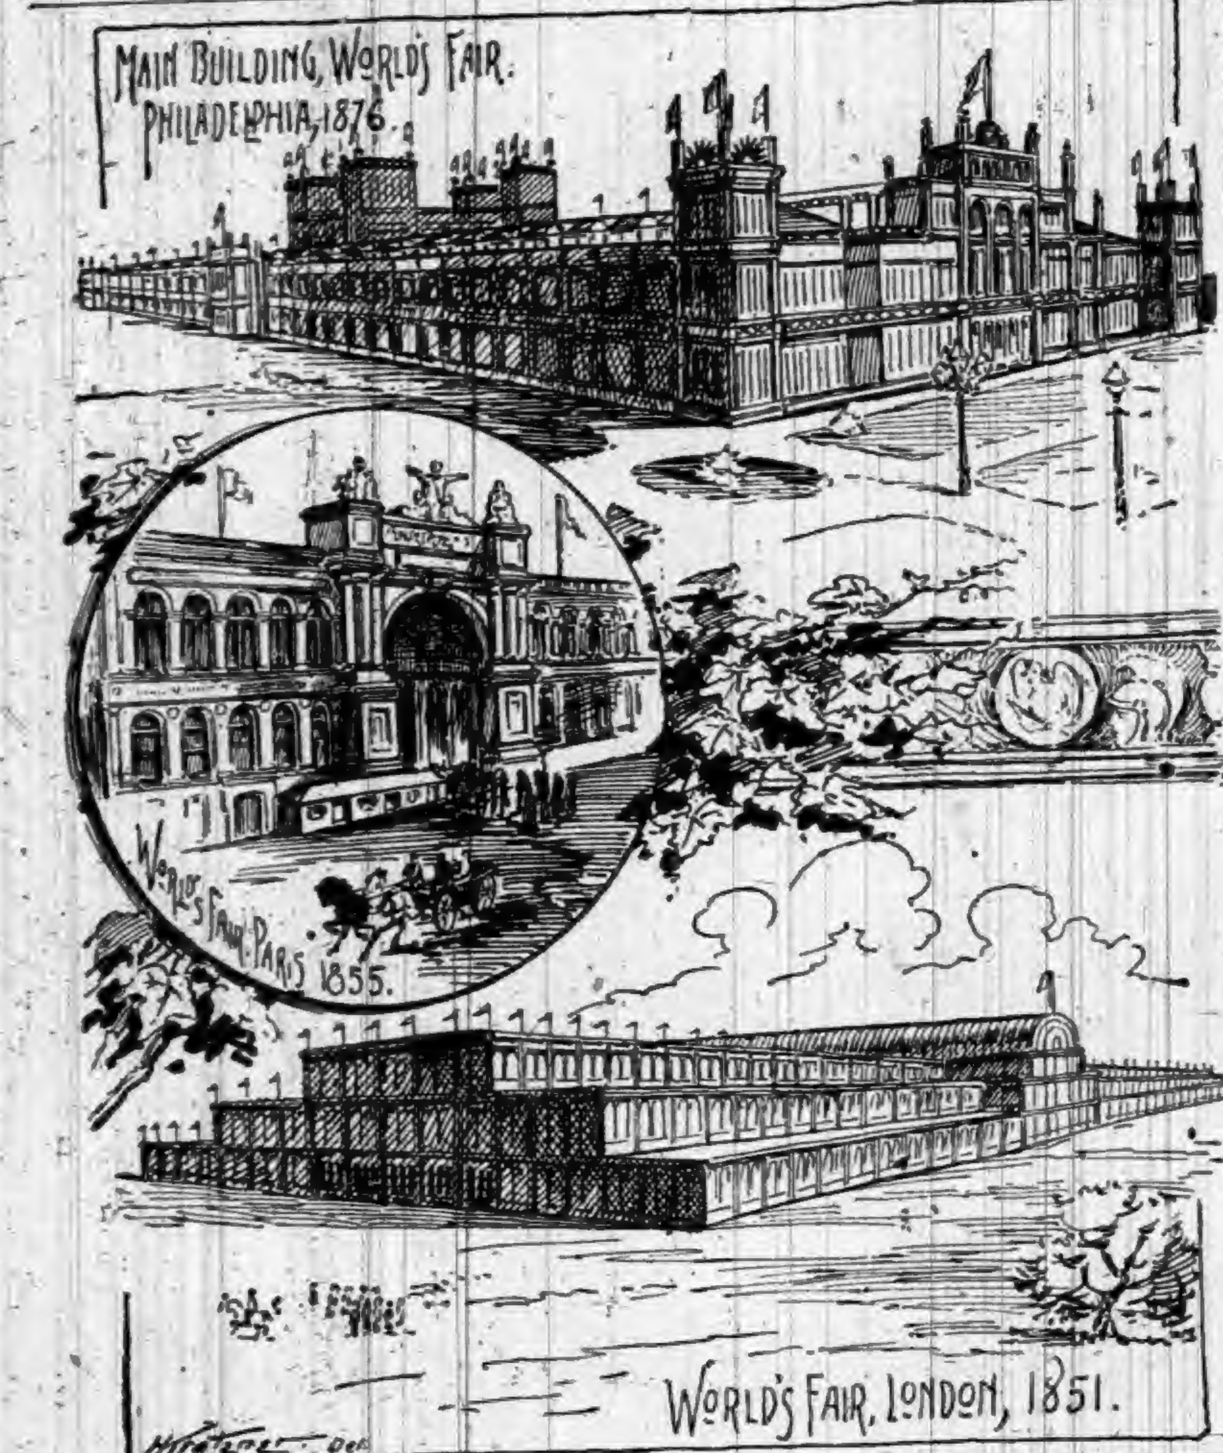
WORLD'S EXPOSITIONS.

THEY DATE BACK AS FAR AS 1797.

Numerous Others Have Since Been Held with Varying Success—That of Paris in 1889 Was the Most Attractive and by Far the Most Largely Attended—A Brief History of World's Fairs.

IN the year 1797, amid the dying embers of that surcharged wave of riot, rage, and revenge that swept over France in that decade, the first national exhibition was held in Paris.

It was the same year that Washington, after having established a people's government, voluntarily retired from the Presidency of the United States, so that this important event—the elevating of labor, by placing its products before the eyes of mankind, in fact pushing it to the fore front of civilization, inaugurating a new era in man's pilgrimage—was ushered into view amid a blaze of glory in the old, as well as the new world, that could only come from a crisis in man's history, which may well be recognized as an epoch that was giving birth to a new order of things.

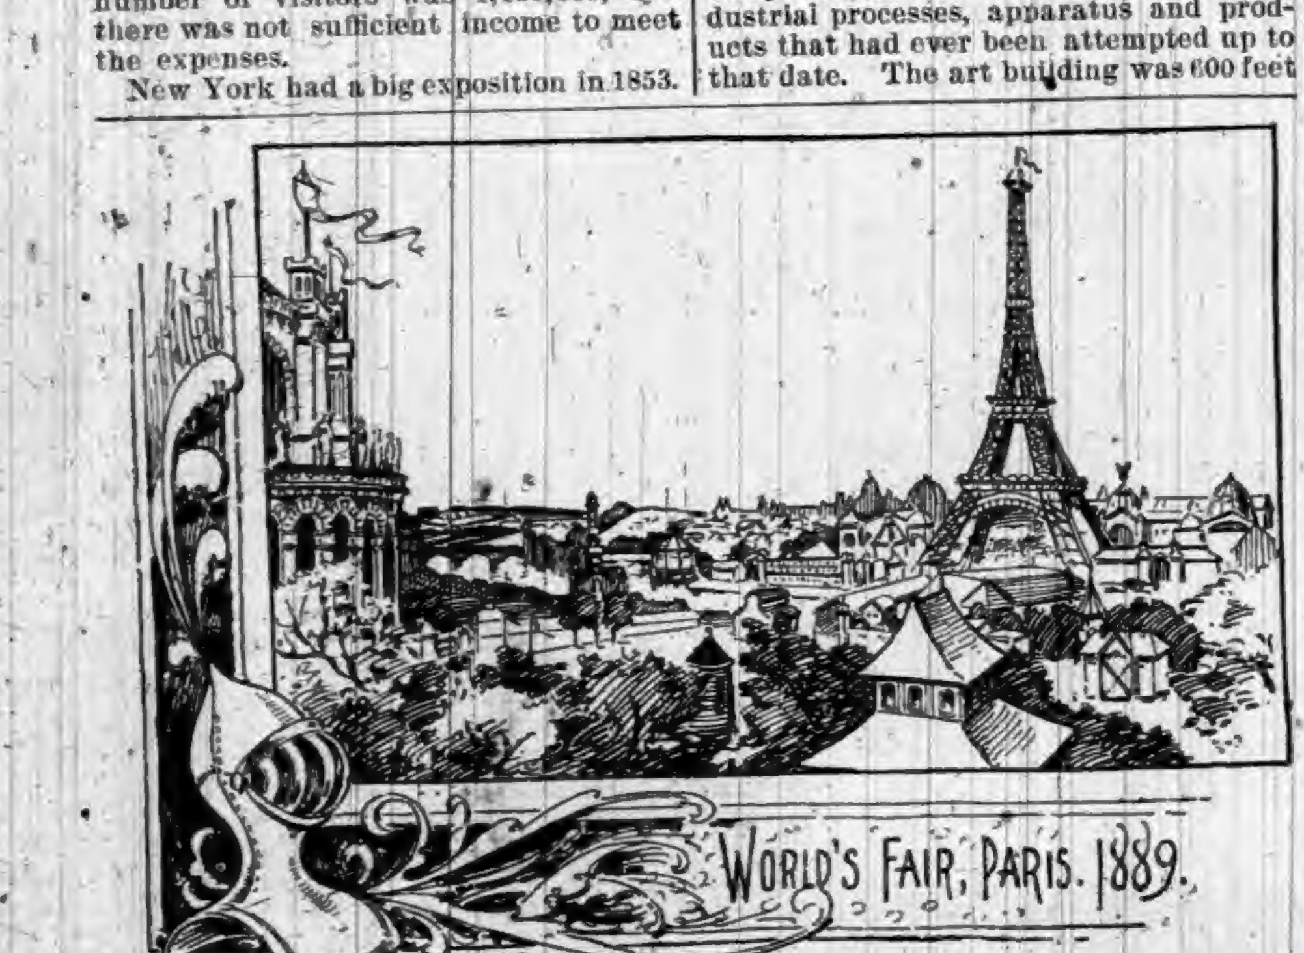


Main Building, World's Fair. Philadelphia, 1876.
World's Fair, Paris 1855.
World's Fair, London, 1851.
H. Kratzner. Del.

There were also gatherings of merchants in India, China and Russia at different times for the furthering of their commercial interests that were then called fairs, but the London exhibition of 1851 was the first that deserved to be dignified with the title of Universal Fair. Its originator was the good Prince Albert, and to him is due the credit of one of the most important events of the present century, for from the starting point of 1851 have followed all other World's Fairs until now, when Chicago, which at that period was little more than a straggling prairie village, will close the century with what promises to eclipse all former universal expositions.

The London Fair of 1851 was all held under one roof. The building, which was constructed of iron and glass, was 1,851 feet long, to correspond with the year, and 450 feet wide. This immense structure was begun and completed in the incredibly short space of four months, and cost $965,000. Over ten thousand persons were employed in one way or another in the work of construction. The exhibition was opened with great eclat on the 1st of May by the Queen in person, Prince Albert in an address explaining the objects and purposes of the undertaking. The managers of this fair secured a profitable return, the surplus left being $930,000. The total number of exhibitors was 13,937. The next attempt at an international exhibition was made in Dublin, but it was in no sense of the word a success. It was undertaken at the cost of a private citizen, who advanced $400,000 for expenses. The building was only 425 feet long, 100 feet wide, 105 high, and with its annexes cost $240,000. The number of visitors was 1,150,000, but there was not sufficient income to meet the expenses.

New York had a big exposition in 1853.



World's Fair, Paris. 1889.
H. Kratzner.

The main building covered 173,000 square feet, and the annex 93,000 square feet. There were 4,100 exhibitors. The financial results were: Cost of building and other expenses, $640,000; total receipts, including admissions, concessions, sale of catalogues, etc., $340,000; leaving a loss of $300,000, which fell upon the stockholders.

The Paris World's Fair of 1855 was the most pretentious exposition that had been held up to that time. It was held in three buildings—the Palace of Industry, the Palace of Fine Arts, and Machinery Hall. The total space occupied in these buildings by exhibitors, including passages, offices and all else used by the public, was about 1,866,000 square feet. The exhibitors numbered 23,954, of which our country had exactly 144. This exhibition possessed one feature of great interest, which has been made quite prominent ever since in connection with world's fairs. That was the department of fine arts. Louis Napoleon, Emperor of the French, assisted by Prince Napoleon, President of the exhibition, did all in his power by awards of decorations and medals to place France in the front rank. The total cost of this exhibition may be put down in round numbers at $2,257,000—or, adding cost of Palace of Industry, paid for by the French government, nearly $5,000,000. The total receipts reached the sum of 3,202,405 francs, or $644,100.

From the World's Fair, Paris, 1855, to the World's Fair, London, 1862, there were several local expositions of considerable importance, all being the result of the impetus given in the start by Prince Albert.

In 1854, Victoria held its first exhibition at Melbourne, in a palace of glass, erected on the site of the present mint. There were also interesting local industrial celebrations at Brussels in 1856; Lausanne in 1857, with 2,050 exhibitors; Turin in 1858, and Hanover in 1859.

In 1859, Greece had her first exhibition at Athens, with 974 exhibitors. In 1861 there were national art exhibitions in Dublin, Edinburgh and Florence.

The World's Fair at Munich was open only three months, owing to the approach of cholera. The building, constructed of iron and glass, was 800 feet long and 260 wide, and cost $450,000. The number of exhibitors was 7,000.

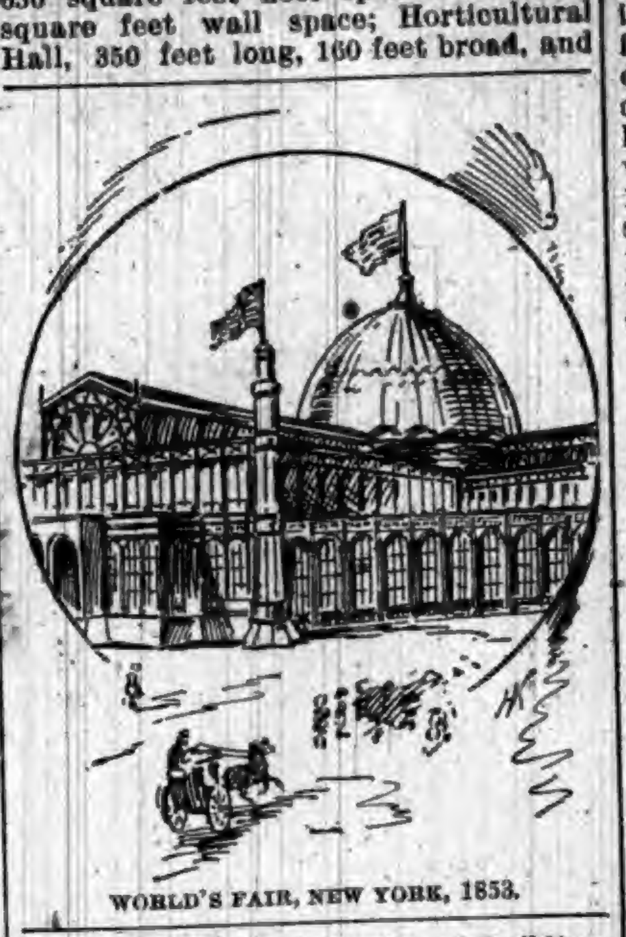
London entered upon and successfully carried through a second World's Fair in 1862. The buildings, which covered an area of twenty-four acres, cost $1,605,000. The number of exhibitors was 28,653. The total number of visitors amounted to nearly six millions and a quarter. The daily average attendance was 36,328, and the largest number on any one day was 67,891.

France's second World's Exposition was held at Paris in 1867. The main building, which was oval-shaped, was 1,550 feet long and 1,250 feet wide. It covered eleven acres, while smaller buildings connected with the main building increased the area to thirty-five acres. In addition was annexed the Island of Billancourt, comprising fifty-two acres, for agricultural purposes. This exhibition opened on April 1 and closed on Nov. 3, being open 117 days, Sundays included. There were 50,226 exhibitors, and 10,200,000 entrances of visitors, and the receipts were about equal to $2,103,675.

In 1865 an international exhibition was again held in Dublin, and, like the former one in 1853, owed its existence to the liberality of a private citizen, Sir Benjamin Lee Guinness. The building was of iron and glass. The total number of admissions was nearly 1,000,000. As in 1853, this exhibition was especially noted for its collection of magnificent works of art, of which many were secured by the British Government.

There was a grand international exhibition at Vienna in 1873. The main building consisted of a central nave 2,953 feet long, 83 feet 8 inches wide, and 73 feet 10 inches high, with sixteen intercepting transepts each 573 feet 6 inches long, 57 feet wide and 41 feet high, and a rotunda or dome in the center 354 feet in diameter, being the largest in the world at that time. The machinery hall was 2,625 feet long and 164 feet wide. Within this great building, which had a floor space of 40,000 square meters, or nearly ten acres, were collected many thousands of exhibits, embracing every known variety of machinery; the Vienna World's Fair, 1873, having brought together the most completely satisfactory exhibition of industrial processes, apparatus and products that had ever been attempted up to that date. The art building was 600 feet long by 100 feet wide. The department of agriculture was confined to three large frame buildings, covering about six acres. Total area of Fair, 286 acres. The actual experiments in agriculture took place at a long distance from the exhibition buildings. Three hundred and five acres were appropriated for the trials of the reapers and mowers, 200 were reserved for steam plowing, and 110 acres for the trials of the ordinary plows. For testing mowing machines there were available 80 acres of rye, 40 acres of wheat, 40 acres of barley, 12 acres of grass, and 90 acres of clover. For threshing and winnowing machines there were provided 64,000 sheaves of rye, 32,000 sheaves of wheat, and the same quantity of barley. The total cost of the Vienna World's Fair buildings was $7,850,000. The total number of exhibitors was 70,000. The number of paid admissions was 3,492,622.

The next World's Fair was held in our own country. The Centennial Exposition was opened at Philadelphia on the 10th of May, 1876, and closed on the 10th of November following. The buildings were as follows: Main building, covering an area of 870,464 square feet; Machinery Hall, covering an area of 504,720 square feet; Art Building, covering 76,650 square feet floor space and 88,868 square feet wall space; Horticultural Hall, 350 feet long, 160 feet broad, and 65 feet in height; Agricultural Building, covering 117,760 square feet; Women's Department Building, 208 feet long and 208 feet broad. There were about 31,000 exhibitors, the United States leading the list with 8,175. The number of admissions was 9,910,966. The largest number admitted on any one day was 274,919—on Pennsylvania Day, Sept. 28.



WORLD'S FAIR, NEW YORK, 1853.

A second World's Fair was held at Paris in 1878. The main building covered fifty acres of ground. The exhibitors numbered 40,366. The display of fine arts was upon a very large and comprehensive scale, and the avenue of nations, a street 2,400 in length, was occupied by specimens of the domestic architecture of every country in Europe and several in Asia, Africa and America. The number of admissions was 16,032,725. Sydney and Melbourne, in Australia, each indulged in the luxury of a World's Fair—the former in 1879 and the latter in 1880—but neither hardly deserved the designation of a Universal Exhibition.

There was a Foreign World's Fair in Boston in 1883, confined to other nations than our own. The total number of admissions was 300,000.

No other big fairs were held until 1889, when Paris again forged to the front with the greatest exposition the world has ever seen. The various buildings cost a little less than $6,000,000. There were in all 55,000 exhibitors, of whom the United States had 1,750. The total space occupied was 173 acres. The largest building on the ground was the Machinery Palace, 1,378 feet long, 406 feet wide and 166 feet high. This building cost $1,500,000, and covered eleven acres. The Palace of Arts cost $1,250,000, and the palace of the French section cost $1,150,000, while $500,000 was expended on the parks and gardens. Among these parks were interspersed that marvelous collection of dwellings representing an Indian dwelling, a street in Algiers, houses of New Caledonia, the Tunisian minaret, Turkish village, English dairies, Dutch bakeries, etc. There is no question but that the Eiffel Tower was the principal attraction in Paris, 1889. The total number of admissions by ticket between May 6 and Nov. 6 was 28,149,353, or more than three times the number of entrances to the Centennial, thus carrying out the steady rule of progression in increased numbers which all exhibitions indicate, the daily average being 137,289. It is estimated that 400,000 people visited the fair on the last day, which makes it the largest single day in world's fairs.

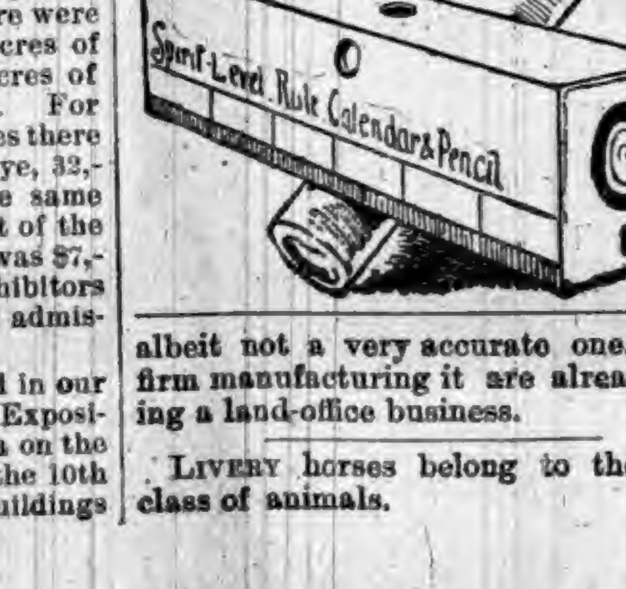
FILLING A LONG-FELT WANT.

Contrivance of a Minneapolis Man for Those Who Travel in Prohibition States.

Minneapolis is the home of the inventor of the most original "original package" ever devised, and which is designed for special use in Iowa and the Dakotas. It is known as the spirit level, and is the invention of Gebhard Laube. Mr. Laube has secured his patent, and it bears the number 436,005. On the side bearing this announcement is printed a rule six inches long, the length of the box. On the reverse side is a calendar for the twelve months. On one of the narrow sides is this: "Any person infringing on this patent will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law." On the reverse is the announcement that so and so are "proprietors and sole manufacturers." The ends of the box are sewed, but a gentle punch breaks the paper and there is revealed on one end a round hole that will receive a lead pencil and on the other end when broken appears a cork. The thirsty purchaser who pulls gently on this brings to view a long vial with brandy or old rye, or anything that may be desired, provided the assortment of "spirit levels" in stock is large enough. Holes in the side admit to view an air bubble, which verily makes the affair a spirit level, albeit not a very accurate one. The firm manufacturing it are already doing a land-office business.



LIVERY horses belong to the hire class of animals.

Changed the Hymn.

The fire bell rang at Grand Ledge, Mich., the other evening while meeting was in progress in the Methodist Church. About two-thirds of the large audience imagined it was their house that was on fire and started for the doors. To subdue the confusion and retain a fraction of the congregation, Pastor Fillibrown hastily announced, "The congregation will rise and sing No. 163." Turning to 163, the humorous appropriateness of singing "Take the name of Jesus with you" while one-half the audience was rushing out to the fire was apparent, and something else was substituted.

A Strange Experience.

Merchant—Anything remarkable happen on your last trip?

Drummer—Remarkable! One of the most phenomenal occurrences ever heard of, gave me such a start that I haven't got over it yet. It was on the night express East."

"Well! Well! What was it?"

"The train suddenly stopped, and when the passengers began asking the conductor what was the matter, he didn't rush away, nor hew nor haw, nor anything. He just stood still and told them."—Street & Smith's Good News.

The Parent of Insomnia.

The parent of insomnia (or wakefulness is in nine cases out of ten a dyspeptic stomach. Good digestion gives sound sleep, indigestion interferes with it. The brain and stomach sympathize. One of the prominent symptoms of a weak state of the gastric organs is a disturbance of the great nerve entrepot, the brain. Invigorate the stomach, and you restore equilibrium to the great center. A most reliable medicine for the purpose is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is far preferable to mineral sedatives and powerful narcotics which, though they may for a time exert a soporific influence upon the brain, soon cease to act, and invariably injure the tone of the stomach. The Bitters, on the contrary, restore activity to the operations of that all important organ, and their beneficent influence is reflected in sound sleep and a tranquil state of the nervous system. A wholesome impetus is likewise given to the action of the liver and bowels by its use.

Offer Accepted.

Nervous Passenger (to mother of howling imp in parlor car)—Madam, is there anything any of us can do to—to pacify your little boy?

Fond Mother (of spoiled child)—Oh, thank you, yes; you are very kind. You see, the dear little fellow wants to throw his lunch at the passengers, and I was afraid they wouldn't like it. Just stand where you are, please. Now stop crying, my pet. This kind gentleman wants you to play with him.—New York Weekly.

Free Coinage.

Free coinage means that the government should coin silver as it does gold, free of charge. There are now four coinage mints in the United States. They are located at San Francisco, New Orleans, Carson City and Philadelphia. Any man who will take gold to any one of those mints may receive the gold in the shape of coin. Silver is not recognized on the same basis and this is what the silver men demand.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

HOW TO GET WELL

is a question of vital importance, but it is equally important that you use some harmless remedy; many people completely wreck their health by taking mercury and potash mixtures, for pimples and blotches, or some other trivial disease. S. S. S. is purely vegetable containing no mercury or poison of any kind. And is at the same time an infallible cure for skin diseases.

DR. FRUTH,

Of New York, the well-known and successful Specialist in Chronic Diseases, and diseases of the Eye and Ear by request of many friends and patients, has decided to visit

AUBURN, TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 1891.

Consultation and Examination free and confidential in his parlors at the SWINEFORD HOUSE from 1 p. m. to 9 p. m. One day only.

CHRONIC DISEASES, —AND— DISEASES of the EYE and EAR A SPECIALTY

FREE. Consultation and Examination

DR. D. O. FRUTH,

—OF THE—

PROVIDENT MEDICAL DISPENSARY,

NEW YORK CITY,

Ably assisted by a full corps of competent physicians and surgeons, treats with unparalleled success all Chronic, Nervous, Skin and Blood diseases of every nature upon the latest scientific principles. He particularly invites all whose cases have been neglected, badly treated or pronounced incurable. Patients who are doing well under the care of their own physicians need not call on us, as our province is to treat those who cannot find relief otherwise. No money required of responsible parties to commence treatment.

Common Sense as Applied to Medicine. It is well known by all intelligent observers that it is impossible for any person, no matter how highly endowed by nature or acquirements, to become thoroughly conversant with all the divisions of the science of medicine. Nearly all who have obtained distinction in medicine have made some special department their life work, being fitted therefor by natural adaption or selection, special education and experience. The doctor having devoted several years to the special study of chronic diseases in hospitals and general practice, and having the most recent and improved instruments for finding out diseased conditions in the organs of the body, he proposes to devote the whole of his time to the practice of these specialties.

He adopts the following plan, which is peculiar to the large hospitals, and is not and never has been the practice of country doctors, viz.: He carefully notes the symptoms of the patient, ascertains the condition of the internal organs, examines the Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat by the most recent and approved instruments and methods, all of which he carefully records in his register for future reference. In this way he ascertains the true nature of the disease and its cause. Knowing the disease, he knows the changes it produces in the tissues, and, knowing the changes, he checks them with specific remedies, and places his patient on the high road to recovery. When sick people consult him he readily tells them whether he can cure or help them, or if they are beyond hope.

The examinations are in accordance with anatomical and physical science, as he will convince the most skeptical. By an examination he will convince anyone of the nature and extent of disease, amount of danger to life, and chance of a perfect cure. Believing that science is truth and "truth is mighty and will prevail" when known, and knowing that disease can be cured with positive certainty, he invites the afflicted to call and receive advice free and be cured of their diseases.

There is no subject that requires so much study and experience as the treatment and cure of chronic diseases. The astonishing success and remarkable cures performed by him is due to a thorough knowledge of the structure and functions of the human system, and the cure of diseases by natural remedies. Let those given up by others call for examination. He has successfully treated the following diseases since his arrival in this State: Eye and Ear diseases, Chronic Diarrhœa, Chronic Inflammation of the Womb, Chronic Inflammation of the Bladder, Painful or Irregular Menstruation, Fever Sores and Ulcers, Incontinence of Urine, Tape Worms, Crooked Limbs and Enlarged Joints, Spinal Curvatures, Club Foot, Hip Joint Disease, White Swelling, Discharging Abscesses, Sterility or Barrenness, Nervousness and General Debility, Impotency, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Leucorrhea or Whites, Blotches, Pimples, Skin Diseases, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Dropsy, Cancer, Epileptic Fits, Erysipelas, Gravel, Goitre, Gleet, Gonorrhoea, Hydrocele, Heart Disease, Headache, Piles, Hysteria, Syphillis, St Vitus Dance, Chronic Dysentery, Enlarged Tonsils, Fistula in Ano, Hernia or Rupture, Ovarian Tumors, Paralysis, Prolapsus Uteri, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Consumption, Chronic Cough, Female Weakness, Spermatorrhoea, Rheumatism, etc. All surgical operations performed.

Curing of Piles guaranteed. Will give $1,000 for any case of failure. No money required of responsible parties.

Young Men who through ignorance or the careless exuberance of youthful spirits, have been unfortunate and find themselves in danger of losing their health and embittering their after lives may call with full confidence.

DR. FRUTH—Has attained the most wonderful success in the treatment of the cases to which he devotes his special attention. After years of experience he has discovered the most infallible method of curing weakness in the back and limbs, involuntary discharges, impotency, general debility, nervousness, languor, confusion of ideas, palpitation of the heart, loss of memory, trembling and timidity, diseases of the nose, throat and lungs, affections of the liver, stomach and bowels—those terrible disorders arising from the solitary habits of youth and secret practices, blighting the most radiant hopes and rendering marriage impossible.

Epilepsy, or Fits, positively cured by a new and never-failing method.

Private Diseases.—Blood Poison, Syphillis, Gonorrhoea, Gleet, Stricture, Hydrocele, Varicocele, Loss of Sexual Power and all diseases of the genito-urinary organs speedily and permanently cured. No risks incurred. Consultation free and strictly confidential. Medicine sent free from observation to all parts of the United States.

Middle Aged Men, who find their vigor and vitality weakened by the traces of old complaints and their bodies racked with pain at a time when they should spend their declining years in peace and comfort, should consult Dr. Fruth at once and find the sympathy and relief you positively require. His cures are thorough and permanent.

Diseases of Women.—We shall continue as heretofore, to treat with our best consideration and skill the diseases peculiar to women. Our operations for Fistula, Ruptured Cervix Uteri, Ruptured Perineum, and for Stricture of the Cervical Canal, a condition resulting in sterility, have been alike gratifying both to ourselves and our patients.

Free Examination of the Urine. Each person applying for medical treatment should send or bring an ounce of their urine, which will receive a careful chemical and microscopical examination.

Remarkable Cures perfected in old cases which have been neglected or unskillfully treated. No experiments or failure. Parties treated by mail and express, but where possible personal consultation preferred. Curable cases guaranteed. List of questions free. Western Address, DR. FRUTH,

TOLEDO, OHIO.

REFERENCES—We, the undersigned, do cheerfully and conscientiously recommend Dr. Fruth as a gentleman of rare professional ability, ripe in judgment, humane to a fault, considerate in price and enthusiastic in relief of his fellow men, and we therefore urge the afflicted to avail themselves of his superior skill:—Granville M. Weeks, M. D., L. L. D., President Provident Dispensary, N. Y.; T. Meredith Maxwell, A. M., M. D., N. Y.; Orrin Pomeroy, M. D., N. Y.; V. M. Davis, M. D., N. Y.; W. E. White, M. CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

W. O. Butler Sundayed at home.

A. K. Hite will move to Ft. Wayne shortly.

Rev. W. O. Butler visited his family Monday.

D. A. Garwood gave our town a short visit on Tuesday last.

Sheriff Plum was in the city a few hours on last Tuesday.

Charles McBride, of Elkhart, was in our town over last Sunday.

The "Ashtabula" factory is not running now as they are out of logs.

The Misses Baxter and Sprangle, from Butler spent Sunday in Waterloo.

If you want to hear a first-class joke, just ask Jesse Johnson about the beef bone.

S. Dickinson, Sam. Milliman, P Montevon have been on the sick list the past week.

Dr. J. N Chamberlain has been under the weather for a few days past with an attack of the grip.

An infant child of Lafayette Miser and wife, was buried in the Waterloo cemetery last Sunday.

Mrs. J. W, Baxter, of Auburn, was here a few hours on Tuesday of this week to call on her father and family.

I. J. McFadden's wife and boy are sick His father-in-law, Johnson, of St Joe, is lying at the point of death.

Sam Beck has concluded not to move into Simon Strow's building. It is a little too close to Ab. Kelley.

J. N. Wilson & Son propose, we believe, to move the rest of their stock of boots and shoes to Auburn the first of April.

"Sanitarium California Wheat Wafers" is the newest and best food yet found for the sick. Go to Speer & Co., and get a trial lot and be convinced.

Mrs. Stevens and Mrs. Juliet Dickinson were sick last week, and Mrs. Shoner and daughter Lillie were ailing. Della Shoner is still confined to her bed.

The protracted meetings at the different churches have all closed except in the United Brethren, where they will continue, conducted by Rev. Loudy.

E Dickinson, the mail man, has invested in a new horse and buggy. Mrs D. is an expert horsewoman—that is, can drive any horse, however spirited.

Rev. Mr. Marshall, of Albion, preached in the Presbyterian church last Sunday morning and evening. Many persons were pleased with the sermon, a few not.

There seems to be a larger number of people complaining of colds, headache, pain in the limbs, and feeling bad generally, than usual at this season; perhaps due to the warm, open winter.

Sam. Beck has made a proposition to a prominent church member of this place that he will unite with his church if the said member would unite with his church (the Masons). Will he accept?

It will soon be time for the sun to cross the line again, but we want it to understand that it can not get across this year without paying the tariff. Sunshine will be dear this year.

The Religious Telescope reports seven church law suits, all decided in favor of the Liberals last week. This is the largest number of cases decided in any single week. And at that rate they ought soon to get through.

Rev. Wm. Dillon, of Dayton, Ohio, through the Radical pastor, Mr. Loudy, of this place, has challenged Elder Stewart of the Christian church for an open debate of the subject of baptism. Elder Stewart has accepted the challenge Now will the discussion take place?

Last Wednesday evening Bishop Becker, of Kalamazoo, Mich. preached an excellent sermon at the U B church to a full house. Three ministers were here from other places to listen to the learned Bishop. He is a fine speaker, a scholarly man, and a polished gentleman. His pronunciation is perfect. The words seem to fall from his lips without effort, almost without thought; while he seems to speak rapidly his enunciation is clear and distinct. He has visited Palestine and, it may be, been around the world, at least he spoke of following the route taken by Joseph Cook. He also speaks the Arabian language, as he used it in telling of their appeals to send bibles and missionaries to them. When he speaks of some of the places he has visited, he brings it right before you until you seem to see it.

GARRETT.

Dr. Clevenger is smiling all over now since the arrival of a little girl at his home Monday morning.

Miss Ell Phillips, of Waterloo, who has been working for Mrs. Blackburn, has gone home for a couple of weeks to rest up for the spring trade.

There will be a social given at Mrs. H. M. Biddleman's on Friday evening of this week by the ladies of the M. E. church. Everybody is invited to attend, and especially the young folks.

The K. of P's gave a reception last Thursday evening which was a success. There were 186 in attendance. They had fine refreshments, as the guests can testify. They report a good time.

L. J. Gengler was over to Auburn on business Monday and while there he met Messrs Carpenter, Chew and Baker who seemed to have the same business. They all came home on the noon train.

Miss Nellie Shrock, of Findlay, Ohio, who has been visiting her brother, the proprietor of the depot hotel, has gone to Ft. Wayne to visit her brother She will return here in a week or ten days.

The horsemen meet almost every evening at Halter's Any person having a horse that can go a mile in 19 minutes is invited to attend They will surely learn to get him down to a 3:40 gait. Metzger is chairman.

A couple of our young men are feeling badly over the move of a couple of Auburn's popular dressmakers. It makes it very inconvenient for those interested, as there are no sidewalks between Garrett and Ft. Wayne.

Mr, Walters still hands out the Pride of Garrett cigars on the wedding. He knows what the boys like something good that is made at home The boys all know that Mr Smith puts in his best licks on the "Pride."

The rain of last week has made the roads very muddy and it is very bad in getting around. We hope it will let up, as the people of our city who have business at the Hub do not like to walk as they have had to do the past few days.

The alarm of fire was given last Friday evening and everybody was out There was not much fire, but lots of smoke. It was in the store occupied by Mesdames Kerr & Reinhelderfer, the milliners. There was considerable damage done by water

On account of the inclement weather on last Wednesday evening, the Garrett delegation to the Old Folks Hop at Auburn was rather limited Those who were lucky enough to attend were royally entertained, and all report a jolly good time.

Chas. Fisher, who met with the sad accident at North Baltimore some months ago, and lost his foot by having it mashed while making a coupling has suffered a good deal since. It appears that the doctor who amputated the foot did not know much about it and did not do a good job. It healed up very well and then broke out again. Drs. Thompson, Skilling and Huges last Friday had to take it off just half way between the knee and ankle The latset report says he getting along nicely.

BUTLER.

Mrs. Emma Thomas, of Van Wert, Ohio, is visiting with her Butler friend.

The heavy rain last week overflowed the sewers and filled some of our streets and cellars. It had subsided by Sunday

Prof. Myers, of Mich., is conducting a musical convention in the old M. E church and is meeting with quite good success.

Thursday evening about six o'clock train No. 69 on the Wabash was wrecked about one-half mile east of town, caused by the parting of the train, six cars being ditched. No one was injured.

George Hollinger was buried at Sawdust last Sabbath His death took place quite suddenly last Thursday, caused by heart trouble superinduced by typhoid fever He leaves a wife and two married children.

Prof. Warren, of Mo., has been holding forth at the Opera House for the past week to crowded houses on the subject of Phrenology, which has proven a source of no small merriment to the crowds that filled the hall.

J. A. Campbell had a lightning loss reported from a Mr Weaver near Auburn, that occurred Thursday Feb. 19 This he says is the first lightning loss that has come in this month under his observation in twenty years of his experience.

Rev. Brad', of Ann Arbor, Mich., the revivalist spent Sabbath in Butler on his way home from Warsaw, where he has been conducting a successful revival He was very warmly received, by his many friends of Butler. He filled the M E. pulpit last Sunday evening with one of the most eloquent and impressive discourses.

(From Another Correspondent.)

Mrs. Charley Fanning, of Garrett is visiting in town.

The ladies' society of the M. E. church, will meet with Mrs. Eva Kniseley Friday afternoon.

The Disciples are about to engage the services of Rev. Mr. Stewart, as pastor of their church at this place.

Lucia May Wiant's entertainment last Monday, proved to be a success. The house was crowded to its utmost capacity, and all were well pleased with her.

Mrs. Plum has been visiting her sister, at Pleasant Lake, for the past week. She expects to start for Florida soon, to join her husband who went last fall for his health.

The meetings at the U. B. church closed Sunday evening, Rev. Kellar being present over Sunday with them. Much good has resulted from the meetings and many have been added to the church.

Warren Mason's new house is now nearly ready for occupancy. In fact, some of the rooms are already furnished. Everything in the house is beautiful and convenient and if riches can bring happiness, surely Mr. and Mrs. Mason ought to be happy in their new and beautiful home. And we have no doubt they will.

UNION CHAPEL.

Frank Pyles spent Sunday with friends in St Joe

The Hub's mill is doing a big business this spring.

We made a slight mistake week before last in saying the literary at Pyle's school house. It will take place the 27th.

We dropped into the reading room at Auburn a short time ago and was surprised to see so many books and papers. It is a good place to spend one's time when loitering about town.

The strife between the Liberals and Radicals of this place is very destroying upon its members and also upon the outsiders. At one time we could boast of as fine a Sabbath school as any church, but that time is a thing of the past.

The parting of two lovers is very affecting. We had it for our privilege to witness one of these affecting scenes a short time since. As we were passing a place by the roadside we noticed a gate in gentle vibration as if the evening breeze had stirred it into life, but drawing nearer we discerned two forms with hands clasped and lips touching, and then we heard the echo of a kiss Then there was the tender clasping of hands and heart breaking partings, and then everlasting farewells. The old gate vibrated again, and again re-vibrating everlasting farewells The scene which was but for a moment was closed, all was hidden for ever in driving showers.

SPENCERVILLE.

The late rains have gotten the St. Joe river on a bender

Henry Beams and wife attended the dedication services at Auburn Sunday,

Rev J. S Nelson commenced a protracted meeting in the Lutheran church Saturday evening.

The protracted meeting in the M E. church closed last Tuesday. Over fifty conversions are reported.

J. A. Provines is the busiest man in town. He manages a drugstore, a dry goods store, is postmaster acting brick mason, manufactures molasses and as vehemently as ever, discusses politics.

There are certain practices carried on by Sunday individuals, in barns and in some private houses, that we are informed, will be submitted to grand jury investigation, if not speedily stopped.

Our butcher complains of his inability to find stock suitable for the market. If our farmer friends would keep their eyes open to the demands of the markets they would have less reason to complain of hard times.

An Epworth League was organized in the M. E. church Thursday evening with about fifty members. We regard this as an excellent move on the part of the young people, as there is great personal benefit accruing to active christian work.

CORUNNA.

The teachers' institute was held at the school house Saturday.

The Ladies' Aid Society met Wednesday with Mrs. J. Griffith.

Miss Della Orr went to Waterloo last Saturday to visit with relatives.

Miss Kittie Knauer is spending a few days with her brother at Altona.

The entertainment given by the K. P. brothers was an eminent success.

L. J. Miller and grandson, Charley Borst, of Auburn, spent Sunday in town.

Mrs. C. H. Knapp and Mrs. W. Drury spent Tuesday of last week at Waterloo.

Mrs. Jennie Adams and Miss Inez Knapp were at Kendallville last Saturday.

Mr. E. Knauer drove over to Auburn last week, taking advantage of the good (?) roads.

The friends of Mrs. McDonald gave her a pleasant surprise on Tuesday evening of last week.

Mrs. Edward Orr is spending a few days in Auburn visiting with her daughter, Mrs. H. Little.

Miss Minnie Finch entertained a number of her young friends on last Wednesday evening.

Miss. Snyder, one of the teachers of our public schools, spent Sunday with her parents in Waterloo.

Mrs. E. Cochran returned to her home at Auburn, Friday, after a week's visit with relatives and friends.

Mrs. Williamson returned to her home at Waterloo, last Saturday after a several days' visit with her old friends.

There will be service at the M. E. church Sunday evening, March 1st, by Rev. Mr. Pierce. Subject: Infant Baptism.

Dr. Snyder has sold his Main street property to Dr. Rudolph of Fairfield. We have not learned where Dr. Snyder will locate.

Mr. Dave Shaffer, who moved his family into the country some time ago, is still in the employ of Mr. Fried, and will finish his year out before farm work begins. Dave was a good salesman and his place will be hard to fill.

JACKSON CENTER.

A small attendance at the Alliance last Friday evening, bad weather the cause.

James Dove and Lem Farver are just recovering from a serious attack of the grip.

B. F. Moffat is clearing off more of his low ground. He says it yields abundant corn crops.

William Essig and two or three assistants are busy splitting rails and cutting wood for Wm. Carr.

H. G Elson and Alexander Provines took a flying trip to Ohio a few weeks ago to visit relatives and friends.

Sam Morr has lost considerable sleep lately from various causes; the one least desired was a catarrh on the hand.

We understand that Frank Stafford has contracted to build a house for John Morr, north of Grove Bethel church.

Wm. Stafford, a resident of Auburn, is soon going to move on the old Walters place, now occupied by John Smith, who is going to remove to the neighborhood of Kendallville.

National Taxes.

The Globe figures the republican tariff in this fashion:

The people in the United States are taxed for federal purposes $890 a minute.

The people are taxed in the United States for federal purposes $53,400 an hour.

The people are taxed in the United States for federal purposes $1,281,600 a day.

Notice of Final Settlement of Estate.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the will of Mary Walborn, deceased, to appear in the DeKalb Circuit Court, held at Auburn, Indiana, on the 9th day of March, 1891, and show cause, if any, why our FINAL SETTLEMENT ACCOUNTS with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and all others interested are notified to then and there make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares,

Witness my name this 14th day of February, 1891. JACOB WALBORN, Executor

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein James O. Blake is plaintiff and William Sprankle, Mary Sprankle, his wife, John J. Baxter, Anna Sprankle, Sarah Myers, August C Treutman, Henry J. Ash, Robert H. Lane, Charles W. Bell and James F. Cummings ar defendants requiring me to make the sum of seventeen hundred fifty-three dollars, seventy cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at Public Sale, to the highest bidder, on Saturday, February 28, 1891.

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the Court House in Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to-wit:

The west half (½) of the northeast quarter (¼) of section two (2) in township thirtyfive (35) north, of range thirteen (13) east, and also twenty-one and fifteen one hundredths acres off the east end of the north half (½) of the northwest quarter (¼) of said section, described as follows, to-wit:

Making the northwest corner, fifty-eight rods west of the northeast corner of said lot, thence east to said northeast corner of said lot, thence south to the southeast corner of said lot, thence west forty-five rods, thence north twenty-eight rods in a straight line to the place of beginning. Situated in DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

PHIL. PLUM,
Sheriff of DeKalb county, Indiana.

D. D. MOODY, Attorney for Plaintiff.

ALL GROCERS KEEP IT.
SANTA CLAUS SOAP
FOR WASHING, SCRUBBING, SCOURING, CLEANING, IT HAS NO EQUAL.
Made only by N.K.FAIRBANK & CO.÷CHICAGO.

WHAT IS SAPOLIO?

It is a solid handsome cake of scouring soap which has no equal for all cleaning purposes except in the laundry. To use it is to value it...

What will SAPOLIO do? Why it will clean paint, make oil-cloths bright, and give the floors, tables and shelves a new appearance. It will take the grease off the dishes and off the pots and pans. You can scour the knives and forks with it, and make the tin things shine brightly. The wash-basin, the bath-tub, even the greasy kitchen sink will be as clean as a new pin if you use SAPOLIO. One cake will prove all we say. Be a clever housekeeper and try it.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. THERE IS BUT ONE SAPOLIO.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1845.

In searching for interesting items of Auburn's infancy, we are taught the lessons of change and oblivion. Each pioneer departing carries with him some part of the unwritten history of his day and rarely do we find that any have refreshed their memory by cotemporary or later memoranda of their early hardships, privation and struggles for homes and their comforts.

Few are left at this day who are able to depict pioneer character or relate the incidents of the ups and downs of village life in 1845.

The lines of difference between life in town and on the farm, in those days intermingled. The dread ague chill visited alike villager and settler and the mill dam north of the village was deemed a breeder of fevers of the same insidious potency as the interminable woods and oozy swamps outlying, and the evening breezes of springtime mingled their odors to poison the else balmy air of the season.

Effort was made to abate the milldam as a nuisance but without avail. The villagers securing the services of T. R. Dickinson brought their case in the circuit court before Judge Borden. The owner employed Newton Dawson and the dicision sustained his rights.

Mr. Ralston speaking of the old fashioned sawmill run by water power and of the abundance and consequent cheapness of timber says that he recalls a time when David Weaver was operating the mill alone and parties hauled in a number of extra fine beech logs. These logs were good enough timber but hard to saw and the sawyer disliking the intended job, cooly rolled the logs over into the bottom where they were left to decay.

In this mill was cut much of the material which entered into the construction of the old framed Methodist church, now retired from use. The mill was run about 1856 by Harvey Bowman brother of Cyrus and James Bowman and not long after this date torn away, and slight if any vestige of mill or dam now remains. The old mill was more than a convenience, it was a necessity and not a few of the old buildings in Auburn are indebted to its vicinage and services for the durable and excellent material in them.

After the death of George Brandt, an Auburn pioneer so familiar to our people for many years. Joseph McKay, his son-in-law made many changes in the line of improvement about the old home. The weatherbeaten old barn was included in proposed repair and parties offered to do the work for the weather boarding which was composed of a superior quality of black walnut and when the old school house, later the home of Mrs. Penny became the property of S. A. Rakestraw and he undertook its conversion into a house of modern conveniences, he obtained a large quantity of excellent walnut lumber which he utilized in articles of furniture. It is evident that the sawyers did not roll the walnut logs into the bottom nor dislike to saw them.

Samuel W. Ralston now over fourscore years of age, hale and hearty and ably discharging the duties of justice of the peace, having his office with Sheriff Plum in the court house, has for nearly half a century been a prominent figure in the affairs of both town and county.

In 1837, he had entered land now owned by Jesse Brumback and the location and character of soil reflect credit upon his judgment. On his return from Ft. Wayne from making his entry, 'Squire Ralston bought of Wesley Park, the west half of the southwest quarter of section 31, Union township now near Auburn Junction, and known as the Christian Benner farm. The deed was the sixth to be put on record and was made April 30, 1837 It called for 38.51 acres and the consideration was $96.28, "lawful money of the United States." It was acknowledged May 27th and recorded by J. F. Coburn Sept. 5th following. The recorder did a rushing business on that same day, as no less than eleven deeds were then entered for record The next year he bought of Thomas Freeman the lots on Main street, the one occupied at present time by the Swineford House, the other by himself as his home and for these two lots he paid Freeman, his price $200.

But it was not till the last of November, 1842, that 'Squire Ralston set out from Plymouth, Ohio, accompanied by his family consisting of his wife and three children, Helen, Emily and Jackson, taking with them their household goods in covered wagons as was the custom of that day.

There was no lack of nominal accommodations by the way. The tavern was ubiquitous. Between Fremont and Perrysburg alone there were not less than thirty-one places of entertainment for man and beast. The journey occupied thirteen days and on the 12th of December the family reached Auburn and after some difficulty found temporary quarters.

WHY ARE SOME PEOPLE ALWAYS LATE?

They never look ahead nor think. People have been known to wait till planting season, run to the grocery for their seeds, and then repent over it for 12 months, rather than stop and think what they will want for the garden. VICK'S SEEDS never disappoint, is the verdict from the millions who have planted them. If it is Flower or Vegetable Seeds, Plants, Bulbs, or anything in this line, MAKE NO MISTAKE this year, but send 10 cents for Vick's Floral Guide, deduct the 10 cents from first order, it costs nothing. Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C. Feb. 27, 1891.

Czar Reed is in the saddle, backed by a quorum of republicans in the House, and anything is liable to happen during the remaining four days of the session; but there is consolation in the fact that the regular appropriation bills will leave little time in either House or Senate for political legislation. The ship subsidy "job" is to be railroaded through the House this evening, thanks to Reed's outrageous code of rules. When the resolution for the consideration and calling of the previous question on this republican "job" was reported to the House by Reed's lieutenant, McKinley, Representative McMillan, a democratic member of the committee on rules, stated that the prophecy he had made in the beginning of this congress had been verified. "I stated," continued he, "that these rules had been adopted for four reasons: To pass the election bill, which subjected the ballot box to the bayonet—that has been done; to pass the tariff bill that would rob the people—that has been done; to pass the direct tax bill—that has been done; to pass a bill placing further taxes upon a depressed and burdened interior for the benefit of shipping interests—that is about to be done."

Mr. Mills suggested sarcastically that the republicans pass acts of congress by proclamation instead of by legislation, but he wanted them to understand that the democrats would avail themselves of every moment of discussion to expose to the American people the wrongs which were being perpetrated upon them. Mr. Dockery mentioned the fact that up to the present time the net increase of appropriations made by the present congress as compared with those made by the last congress was $102,000,000. The republicans could not reply, so they yelled "chestnuts."

The death of Senator Wilson, of Maryland, which occurred suddenly from heart disease Tuesday night, removed a good and conscientious legislator, who was beloved by all. The Senate adjourned Wednesday in his honor, but not before Senator Spooner, who stated that he would not be a member of the Senate when a day would be set apart for eulogies on the dead statesman, had paid a most loving tribute to his colleague who had entered the Senate the same day as himself and who had served on the same committee with him ever since. The funeral took place here yesterday morning, after which the remains, in charge of committees of the House and Senate, left on a special train for Snow Hill, Maryland, where the interment will be made to-day.

Secretary Foster, has always been known as a thrifty man. Having been confirmed by the Senate he came here at once and yesterday took the oath of office in order that his salary might begin, although he will not take actual charge of the treasury department until he straighens up his business affairs in Ohio. Although the senators concerned have denied it, I have reason to believe that certain republicans tried to get the democratic senators to vote with them to reject Foster's nomination, and that the democrats refused, on the ground that the president should be allowed to select his own cabinet officers and that no senator was justifiable in voting against the confirmation of such a nomination, unless charges were made and proven against the character of the nominee.

Time is a good friend of the people, and his friendship was particularly timely when he compelled the Senate to abandon the bill for the guaranteeing of $100,000,000 of the bonds of the Nicaragua canal company. That settles the scheme for good and all, and if the news received here be correct it probably settles the canal too for some time to come, for it is certain that the next House will not pass that or any other subsidy scheme.

It is noticeable fact that everyone of the Farmer Alliance representatives-elect that has been to Washington, and a number of them are here now, favors free trade out and out, with no ifs, ands or buts.

One of the neatest little steals ever proposed to congress is that amendment the Senate put in the diplomatic appropriation bill granting a subsidy of $3,000,000 to a company which proposes—if it gets the subsidy, to lay a cable between San Francisco and the Sandwich Islands. It has now transpired that the subsidy is considerably more than it would cost to lay the cable, and also that another company stands ready to lay the cable without a subsidy, if congress will give it the authority to do so. Ordinarily this would be sufficient to kill the "job," but this being the last chance of a lot of very hungry republicans there's no telling how they'll vote.

If an extra session is escaped it will be by as close a shave as it would be possible to make, and all sorts of errors, some of them intentional, are almost certain to occur in bills that will be rushed as everything will be from now until the end.

MERIT WINS. We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. Robbins & McCord, Druggists. 1

PROTECTION EXPOSED.

THE TRUE INWARDNESS OF THE PAUPER LABOR CRY.

Report of Labor Commissioner Wright—Steel and Iron Making in Europe and the United States—Cold Facts About Pauper Labor—A Pitiless Arraignment of Protection.

Col. Carroll D. Wright, United States Labor Commissioner, has sent to Congress the most important report yet made by him. The subject of this report is the cost of production of iron and steel in their various forms, both in this country and in Europe. The efficiency of labor here and in Europe is also the subject of investigation, as well as the cost of living among laborers engaged in the various forms of the iron and steel industries.

This investigation is pursued in an absolutely non-partisan spirit. For this reason the facts brought out in the report are all the more damaging to the cause of high protection. The mass of facts and figures given by Col. Wright may be regarded as absolutely trustworthy and authoritative; and there can be no doubt that this report will play an important part in future discussions of the tariff. Its arsenal of facts will be used to meet the cheap talk of the protectionists about the pauper labor of Europe, and to refute their claim that the cost of production is so much less in Europe than to us as to make McKinley's high duties necessary for the protection of the American iron and steel industry.

The figures given by Colonel Wright were taken in every case from the books of the manufacturers and mine operators, and may be accepted implicitly. The report does not cover all the companies engaged in mining ore, making pig-iron, and manufacturing steel rails and other forms of steel. Naturally there was a disposition on the part of some to keep secret their methods of business and their profits. Thus the report contains information about only two American steel rail establishments, the eleven others reported being European. The other rail manufacturers here "showed a sensitiveness about giving information."

The report contains information about 618 establishments in this country and in Europe which are engaged in the various forms of iron and steel manufacture, and it required the labor of three years to collect the information embraced in it.

The cost of making pig-iron is examined in detail in 118 separate establishments. In the following table the cost of materials, of labor, and the total cost of making one ton of pig-iron in eleven establishments in Europe and eleven in the United States is given. The cost of materials includes, of course, all the iron ore, coke, coal and limestone as laid down at the furnace; and the column headed "labor" gives simply the cost of converting the ore into pig-iron. The establishments here quoted represent fairly the highest, lowest, and average cost in each case.

The average cost of turning out pig iron at eleven American furnaces is $13.10 a ton; in the eleven European establishments the cost is $10.74, or a difference of $2.36. And this $2.36 is the basis for all the protectionist rant and twaddle about cheap European iron! To cover that slight difference—less than the present freight rates from Liverpool to New York—our wise protectionist law-makers impose a duty of $6.72 a ton on foreign pig iron.

Another examination shows the entire labor cost in producing a ton of Bessemer pig iron, including the labor of mining and transporting the materials to the furnace. In five Bessemer establishments in the United States the average labor cost of a ton of pig iron is $6.08. In one of these, however, the labor cost was abnormally high, being $9.44. Omitting this one, the average of the other four was $5.24 a ton. In the summaries of the report thus far made public, only one English establishment is given at which Bessemer pig iron is made. In this one the total labor cost was $3.32 a ton, or only $1.92 a ton lower than in the four American establishments. It is a significant fact that these four American furnaces charge on an average $3.70 a ton more for Bessemer pig iron than it costs to produce it, while the English establishment contents itself with a profit of $1.73. The tariff of $6.72 a ton enables the four American producers to net $1.97 a ton more on their iron than the Englishman gets.

The report also includes the figures showing the cost of producing steel rails. The surprising result of Col. Wright's investigation is that it actually costs less for labor, on an average, to convert steel bars into rails in the United States than in England, and considerably less than on the continent of Europe. The average for the two American establishments reported is $1.41 per ton; for the three English establishments, $1.83; for eight establishments on the continent, $2.45. As some of the American mills refused to give information, it is highly probable that the true American labor cost is less than $1.41.

Such figures as these are the most damaging facts against protection that it is possible to imagine. They simply crush the protectionist's case and drive him out of court with all his rot about European cheap labor.

New Candidate for Protection.

When men in Florida want protection for their industries they have an old-fashioned and pathetic way of flinging themselvelves upon the ground, bemoaning mother earth with their tears, and lifting up a lamentation before the great McKinley. Here is how the orange men of that State concluded their petition last year: "To you, gentlemen of the North, gentlemen of the East, gentlemen of the West, a sister State holds out her imploring hands for succor, and sends through us, from the bosom of her blossom-laden orange groves, the prayer for protection on her nurseling industry. Protect us now and the future will enable Panama to send her fragrant greetings to every man, woman and child in the United States, holding a penny in their hands, and across the waters to the marts of the world, we can compete with those that have prayed your honorable committee to grant petitions from them that would mean ruin to thousands of our people."

Now, Florida seems to have a fair prospect to create two new industries which are up to the present unknown in the United States. It is reported that somebody has found a bed of meerschaum in that State, and an attempt is being made to introduce the cultivation of the camphor tree there. Crude gum camphor and manufactured meerschaum are both on the free list as raw materials needed by our manufacturers. But how long can this continue? Will not Florida's weeping committee soon discover that meerschaum comes from Asia Minor, where there are inexhaustible supplies of the cheapest pauper labor in the world—where the poor laborer does not get meat to eat but once a week and has to make slaves of his wife and children? Will they not discover, too, that gum camphor comes from Japan, another country of pauper labor? The services of the weeping committee may be needed again to "stretch forth their imploring hands for succor."

SUGAR TRUST IN HIDING

HOW THE OFFICERS OF THE TRUST AVOID EXAMINATION.

The Treasurer Off on Business—President Not to Be Found—Great Profits of the Trust—Watering Stock to Deceive the Public—How the Tariff Helps the Trust.

A committee of the New York Legislature has been investigating the affairs of the sugar trust. This trust has for some years been one of the greediest and best fed among the many combinations which have been begotten and nurtured by our tariff laws. It was stated some time ago, by Messrs. Willet & Gray, the highest authority upon matters pertaining to the sugar trade, that the profits of the sugar trust have been $10,000,000 per annum. This is a profit of 30 per cent. on the capital, which is $50,000,000. But this capital is the result of watering its stock. How this stock watering went on may be seen from the testimony of Mr. John Moller, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Moller said that he had been a stockholder in the Baltimore Sugar Refining Company. This company was absorbed by the sugar trust in October, 1887, and the stockholders received in payment $1,050,000 in sugar trust certificates.

The amount of actual capital represented by the various concerns which were absorbed by the trust was $15,000,000, the remaining $35,000,000 being watered stock. This watering was of course done to disguise from the public the enormous gains which the trust was making.

Now an operation in simple arithmetic will show the actual profits of this tariff trust. A profit of $10,000,000 on a watered capital of $50,000,000 is equal to 20 per cent. earnings; but on the actual value of the capital, which is $15,000,000, the profits were 66 per cent.

It is no wonder that the officers of the trust got out of the way in order to avoid the examination into its affairs. The secretary and treasurer, it was announced, had gone to New Orleans "on business," a thing which he had done on a previous occasion when the trust was about to be investigated. It was stated by the committee's sergeant-at-arms that he could not find Mr. Searles, the treasurer of the trust anywhere, that all search for him had been in vain. The officer had also made attempts to serve subpœnas on Mr. Havemeyer, the President of the trust.

This Mr. Moller testified that the Baltimore company had just been closed up by the trust in order to limit the production of sugar, and thus raise the price. This was actually done, but the trust did not succeed in keeping the prices up as high as it had put them. One of the stockholders of the trust testified that the competition from Claus Spreckels and the other independent refiners had prevented the trust from maintaining the prices at the point to which it had raised them.

As the time draws near when raw sugar is to be admitted into the country free of duty, it is well for the people to be reminded that they will not yet escape from the grasp of the trust. Although raw sugar goes on the free list, the duty on refined sugar will be 50 cents a hundred weight, which is actually higher protection than the trust had under the old law. Claus Spreckels said that 40 cents a hundred afforded him ample protection, and McKinley fixed the duty on refined sugar at this point in the bill as it passed the House. The Senate raised the duty to 60 cents. When, however, the bill was in conference committee there was a long wrangle over the sugar duty. The New York Tribune, one of the most extreme high-tariff papers in the land, reported during that wrangle that one of the most conspicuous lobbyists seen flitting back and forth about the doors of the conference committee rooms was this same John E. Searles, who now hurries off to New Orleans when the trust is under investigation. His chief "counsel" on this occasion was the notorious Col. W. W. Dudley, of blocks-of-five fame.

The result was that the Senate and House split the difference, and refined sugar was put at 50 cents a hundred. As the trust was able to make 66 per cent. under the old law, it ought to have no difficulty in making still more under the McKinley law. So, although sugar will be much cheaper at an early day, the trust will be in a better position than ever to gather in its tariff spoils.

The trust may have a legal right to its existence and to its higher profits due to protection; but the people are fools to continue voting for members of Congress who go to Washington and pass tariff laws in the interests of rich and powerful monopolies.

SELLING LARD ABROAD.

An Example Showing the Value of the Farmer's Foreign Market—The Foreign Effect of Our McKinleyism.

The great value of the farmer's foreign market may be seen from our exports of lard. The exports of lard during January show an increase of over 6,000,000 pounds over the exports during January last year, the figures for this year being 133,989,834 pounds, and last year 127,646,435 pounds.

Our lard exports are growing rapidly, as the following figures will show:

	Pounds.
1888	270,000,000
1889	398,000,000
1890	521,000,000

The values of these exports were as follows:

1888	$23,000,000
1889	30,000,000
1890	36,000,000

This vast quantity of lard was of course paid for in manufactured goods of various kinds. Is it not, true, then, that the freer admission we give to foreign goods the greater will be the foreign demand for our lard and all other products? And is not the other side of the question equally true, that the more we obstruct importation the more we drive away foreigners from buying in our markets?

The farmer, more than anybody else, it interested in the foreign market. His exports of meat and dairy products alone are almost equal to all the exports of our manufacturers. In 1890 our exports of farm products were over 74 per cent. of all exports; while exports of manufactures were less than 19 per cent. The farmer, therefore, has four times as much interest in the foreign market as the manufacturer has.

From this fact one important conclusion follows: When we raise a high tariff wall to protect our manufacturers and thereby arouse a spirit of retaliation against us in foreign countries it is mainly our farm products that are affected. It is believed that Germany and France would by this time have withdrawn their prohibition of our pork if we had not entered upon the wild and extravagant protection scheme embodied in the McKinley law. France is now engaged in framing a new tariff law, and although our protectionists always classify France among "the poor and poverty stricken nations of the earth" from which they assert that we need protection, yet France herself is now putting up duties against us upon the pretense that she cannot compete with the products of American labor. Many of the changes made in the French tariff will bear heavily upon our farm products, lard itself having a heavy duty placed upon it. It is even proposed to withdraw the prohibition of our pork and substitute a duty nearly prohibitory.

This effect of our tariff in stirring up adverse legislation in foreign countries is one of the ways in which protection hurts our farmers which is too little considered by them.

$7,800 A DAY.

Rate at which Andrew Carnegie Will Grow Rich—A Case of Tariffs, Trusts, and Spoils—A Lesson for "Fools."

The Edgar Thomson Steel Works of Carnegie Bros. & Co., limited, at Braddock, Pa., according to report, shut down recently for extensive repairs. Three new 15-ton Bessemer converters, a new blowing mill, a new rail-mill engine, improved hydraulic machinery, and twenty new boilers will be added. With these improvements the works will be able, it is said, to turn out 1,500 tons of rails daily.

In the recent report of United States Labor Commissioner Wright, the cost of making rails at two establishments in this country is given. Only two mills were reported, as others showed a "sensitiveness" about giving information concerning their business. The total cost of making steel rails is given at $27.68 a ton in one mill, and at $24.79 in the other. Senator Carlisle stated, however, in the Senate debate on the tariff, here was good reason for believing that the cost of making steel rails in some of the establishments not reported is considerably less than in those embraced in Col. Wright's report.

But taking the lower of the two figures here reported, what will be Carnegie's net daily profit from his rail mill? The steel-rail combination has recently put up the price of rails at all Eastern points to $30 a ton ($31 in Chicago). The difference between this figure and $24.79 is $5.21. At this rate of profit Carnegie's 1,500 tons of rails will bring him $7,815 daily.

That is the rate at which we tax ourselves to make tariff millionaires. In order to insure Carnegie and other prosperous manufacturers the greatest possible opportunity to grow rich upon the consuming public, our protectionist Solons put a duty of $13.44 a ton on steel rails, and in order to enjoy this protection to the fullest extent possible, Carnegie and the five other rail-making companies form a combination and put up prices.

Yet these men deny strenuously that they are in a trust; in answer to which the New York Engineering and Mining Journal says: "The rolling mills have seen fit to increase the price of steel rails, and for these, which two months ago could be purchased for $28, they now demand $30. The officers of the steel companies deny that a combination has been effected between them, but only an arrangement to regulate output and prices. In other words, it is a trust in all but name and organization. We shall watch with interest this attempt to control market prices in defiance of all natural conditions."

All this recalls the remark which Carnegie is said to have made last summer at a dinner in London, that the American people are great fools to tax themselves to make millionaires of a few smart men like himself, which remark ought certainly to suggest to these American fools the question whether it is not time to cease being fools.

ASTONISHING success has attended the efforts of Dr. Lannelonge, an eminent specialist of Paris, to give intelligence to an idiot girl. Though four years old, the child could neither walk nor stand, and never smiled or took notice of anything. The doctor concluded that the abnormal narrowness of the head obstructed the growth of the brain, and in May last he made an incision in the center of the skull, and cut a piece of bone from the left side of it. The result was marvelous. Within less than a month the child could walk, and she is now quite bright, playing, smiling, and taking notice of everything around her.

THERE is no limit to the development of trusts and combinations to maintain prices. One of the latest cases reported is that of the manufacturers and dealers in corks, who recently adopted a uniform price list for all corks. The McKinley duty on all manufactured corks is equivalent to a large increase on the more common grades.

A FRENCH banker has just beaten the Chicago churchman, Kean, by getting away with about $4,000,000 of depositors' money. He couldn't have done much better had he opened the bank every morning with prayer.

Minor State Items.

—Legislatures of many other States will copy Indiana's school-book-law.

—An ambitious LaPorte County man has patented an ingrowing toe nail protector.

—As a result of the Murphy meetings at Morristown that town is now without a saloon.

—Tipton City Council passed an ordinance to increase saloon license from $100 to $250.

—The Hamilton County Alliance is trying to raise $5,000 to build an elevator at Noblesville.

—George W. Walker was crushed to death by a descending cage in a coal mine at Evansville.

—Mrs. Rebecca Miller, one of the first women that settled in the Wabash valley, died at Peru, aged 92.

—A company, headed by D. J. Mackey, will develop the cannel-coal fields of Daviess and Martin counties.

—M. O. Nisley, of Tippecanoe County, shot an arctic owl which measured fifty-four inches from tip to tip of wings.

—The house of Alexander Beasley, near Linton, was robbed of a gold watch and several hundred dollars in currency.

—The 3-year-old daughter of James Pritchard, of Franklin, was fatally burned, her clothing catching fire at a stove.

—The new natural-gas company of Shelbyville are about completing their first well, with prospects of a fine flow of gas.

—W. F. Pettit is at work in the chair shop of the Prison North. He is confident the Supreme Court will grant him a new trial.

—While doing switch work in the yards in Muncie, Mark Morton, a Big Four freight brakeman, had his right hand badly mutilated.

—Hydrophobia is raging in Shelby County, farmers having lost many cattle and hogs from mad-dog bites. John Reinhart had to kill two fine horses.

—Louis Stanton, aged 19, went out hunting near Sandborn, and was found dead next morning, with a portion of his head blown off, near a boat, and a part or his body in the water. His death was accidental.

—The 3-year-old child of John Henry, of Tipton, fell into a tub of boiling water and was scalded so badly that it died.

—Mary Ural, wife of John Ural, killed last year by a premature blast at Scanlan's stone-quarry, at St. Paul, has brought suit against John Scanlan for $10,000.

—Olive Lee, a young man, while trying to board a moving train at Hazelrigg station, fell between the cars and was mangled in a horrible manner. He lived about one hour after the accident.

—Jacob Williams, the Washington County giant, is but 22 years old, and stands seven feet six inches in his boots.

—The mothers of Greencastle are holding weekly meetings with a view to the repression of vice of every description. The meetings are held in the different churches, and are participated in by earnest Christian workers, irrespective of denominational differences. The association aims at the suppression of billiard halls, the reclamation of fallen women, and a social edict against progressive euchre as well as all games of chance.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

IN the House, Feb. 21, the Oppenheim tax bill was considered in committee of the whole. The bills amending the Barrett ten-year-street-improvement act, was advanced to a third reading with an amendment exempting Indianapolis from the application of the bill. Mr. Claypool introduced a bill, which passed under a suspension of the rules, authorizing the sale of a certain tract of land at Fairview, in Rush County, which had lapsed to the State from a defunct college. Mr. Cullop introduced a bill authorizing the Governor to appoint three members of the legal profession, one of whom shall be the Attorney-General, to prosecute the claim of the State against the Terre Haute and Indianapolis Railroad. It was referred to the Committee on Education, because the money to be recovered belongs to the school fund. Mr. Fippen introduced a bill giving women the right to vote at municipal elections.

IN the Senate, Feb. 23, the bill imposing a license of $200 on cigarette dealers was indefinitely postponed. This virtually kills it. The following bills were passed; authorizing boards of school commissioners in towns of 30,000 and upward to issue bonds to the amount of $100,000 for construction of new library building; licensing itinerant venders. The fee and salary bill passed the House with a clause exempting officers elected last November from its provisions. The Oppenheim new scheme of taxation was ordered engrossed with amendments. Its consideration in committee of the whole occupied nearly the entire session. A resolution by Mr. Gent to strike out the provision which requires counties to turn over to the State all taxes collected from railroads was defeated by one vote—ayes 47; noes 48. The Terre Haute metropolitan police bill passed without discussion.

IN the Senate, Feb. 24, Mr. Ewing's bill, providing for the creation of a world's fair commission and the appropriation of $200,000 for the exhibit of Indiana's product at the fair came up on second reading and evoked considerable discussion. An amendment offered by its author was adopted providing that the commissioners shall receive no compensation beyond the amount absolutely necessary for their expenses. The Senate then went into committee of the whole on the tax bill. In the House the following bills were passed: To raise revenues by taxing corporations when filing articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State; to authorize the appointment of attorneys to prosecute claim against Vandalia Railroad; to relocate county seats of Jennings and Jackson; to apportion the State for legislative purposes; to authorize Union County to issue bonds to complete court house, etc.

IN the Senate, February 25, a bill passed appropriating $100,000 for exhibit of Indiana products at the World's Fair; tax bill engrossed with amendments; bill placing appointment of Inspector of Oils in the hands of State Geologist passed over the Governor's veto.

HOUSE—Oppenheim's general tax bill passed, with railroad tax feature eliminated; bill engrossed to place the Soldiers' Orphans' Home in hands of a non-partisan board; Coal Oil and Mine Inspector bill passed, the former over the Governor's veto; sanitary plumbing bill killed; Appellate Court bill passed.

THE Senate, Feb. 26, took up and passed the congressional apportionment bill. It makes only one change in the present districts. It removes Shelby from the Seventh into the Fifth District. The coal mine screen bill with amendments passed. Substitute for Inman liability bill reported by Judiciary Committee. Long discussion of measure requiring street railway company to bear proportion of expenses in street improvements; bill still pending. In the House numerous local bills were passed. Amendments to election law reported. Bill to reorganize State Board of Agriculture engrossed. Bill to prevent piping of gas passed.

IN the Senate, Feb. 27, the entire day was devoted to consideration of fee and salary bill; amended so as to make law take effect June 1, 1892; to provide for taxation of corporations and associations; allowing the Lieutenant Governor a salary of $1,000 per annum. House—Hudson suburban street railroad bill passed, also bill to reorganize State Board of Agriculture.

Americans of High Lineage.

"One of the most remarkable things I've observed in all my experience and travels around the world, 'says Count Valcourt, a writer on heraldry,' is how fond Americans are of titles, and how proud they are to trace their lineage back to some illustrious origin. I compiled a book of the prominent families of America a few years ago and sent out prospectuses. You would be surprised to see how many scions of prominent people offered to pay me to prove them of noble origin and enroll them within the magic circles of aristocracy. The appearance of Mrs. Hammersly, Duchess of Marlborough, in a box at the Lyceum Theater created quite a flutter of excitement the other day. There are few of the belles of Gotham who do dot envy the Americans who have allied themselves with the nobility of Europe. You will remember some of the more prominent of these alliances. Miss Jerome married Lord Randolph Churchill, and one of her sisters married Sir John Leslie. Miss Consuelo Yznaga married Viscount Mandeville, and Sir John Lester Kaye married Lady Mandeville's sister. Miss Stevens married Lord Alfred Paget. Lady Angelsy, Lady Vernon, Lady Hesketh, Hon. Mrs. Plunkett, Lady Kartwright, Hon. Mrs. Carrington, Mrs. Edward Balfour, Hon. Mrs. Oliver Northcote, Mrs. Baring, Mrs. Beresford Hope and Lady A. Butler are all nieces of Uncle Sam. I might of course increase the list."

A Camera Plumb Level.

For those amateurs who cannot tell at a glance whether their camera is level or not there is now manufactured a small plumb indicator, which is screwed to the camera, and which will show whether it is placed as desired. It consists of a pendant of flat brass suspended freely by a screw at the top and always preserving a vertical position. A point is made on the camera, so that when the point of the pendant is opposite this mark the camera is level. Any ingenious person can easily make one for himself.—New York Journal.

An Old-Fashioned Fine.

One of the ways of our fathers of ye olden tyme had of dealing with an evil, much more prevalent now than then, is shown in the statement made that in the year 1632, Robert, of Massachusetts, was fined £10 for "abusing himself shamefully with drink," and sentenced to stand with "a drunkard" in great letters on a white sheet on his back "soe longe as the court thinks meete." If the courts of the present day and generation were to adopt the same mode of punishment for similar cases, what a tremendous "standing" army there would be.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN
NERVINE TONIC
—AND—
Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.
It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

SCIENTIFIC SEWERAGE.

A CITY WITH A MODEL SEWERAGE SYSTEM.

Proper Drainage of Towns and Cities a Question of Vital Municipal Importance—A Sketch of the Work Accomplished at Pullman, Ill.—Its Suggestive Value.

PULLMAN is the most remarkable business enterprise of this or any age. Its entire population of working people are sharers to a greater degree than ever before in the results of good work. These benefits come in better homes than the people could have hoped for by their own unaided efforts. All modern conveniences such as gas, water, and perfect drainage and sewerage, together with the best of libraries, schools, churches, stores, and markets, and every facility for rational amusements are found here. This new city marks an era in the history of human labor—an era which carries workmen to a higher level. The example set by its founder in his demonstration that capital can profitably take far better care of labor than it has heretofore done, cannot but be of incalculable benefit to the whole human race, and when every stone of these structures shall have crumbled into dust, the Pullman idea will go down the ages, "down the ringing grooves of change," as one of the world's best thoughts and great benefactions.

ITS SITUATION.

Pullman is situated upon the west shore of Lake Calumet, fourteen miles south of the Chicago Court House, where the Pullman interests have about 4,000 acres of land. It is reached by the Illinois Central Railway from Chicago. Lake Calumet is three and a half miles long by a mile and a half in width, and connects with Lake Michigan by the Calumet River. It is the intention, eventually, to make a harbor of this lake. The land upon which the city stands is blue clay, ninety feet in depth, resting upon lime rock, and its surface is from nine to twenty feet above the lake level.

HISTORICAL.

Work was begun upon the town in May, 1880, and the first family came here Jan. 1, 1881, and it now has a population of 11,000. The present industries here are the Pullman Car Works, which manufacture cars of every kind, such as passenger, freight, street, palace and sleeping cars, and they are the largest car shops in the world, employing over 4,000 operatives. The Allen Paper Car Wheel Works, the Union Foundry, the Pullman Iron and Steel Works, the Standard Knitting Mills, the Paint Works, the Terra Cotta Works, the Screw Factory, and the Drop Forge and Foundry Company's Works, are other industries now here, and they employ, with the Car Works, 5,500 workmen. Other industries are negotiating to come to Pullman.

THE DRAINAGE.

Pullman is the only city of the world built scientifically and artistically in every part, and is exceptional in this respect. In every other street running east and west there are brick mains laid to Lake Calumet. From the intermediate streets as summits, laterals are laid in the north and south streets leading to the mains. The mains and laterals take the atmospheric water directly into Lake Calumet. The down spouts from the buildings and the street catch basins readily carry off these waters. No sewage goes into these drains, and they are intended to carry nothing but rain waters.

MR. GEORGE M. PULLMAN.

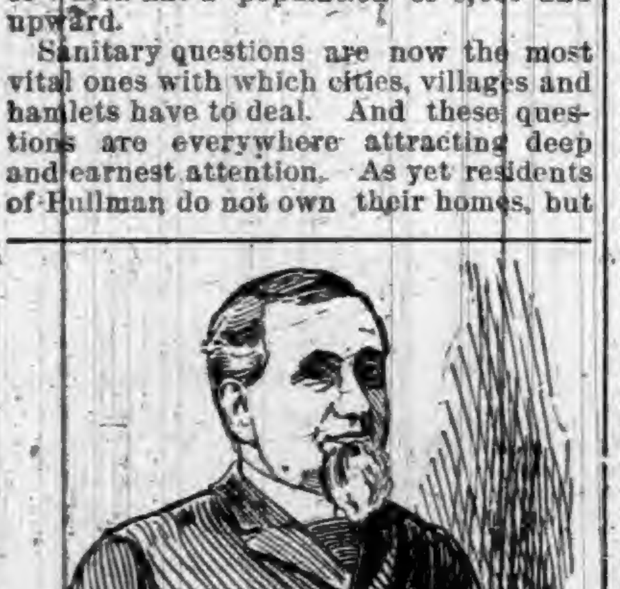
One cannot well speak of this city without mention of its founder and builder, though he is so widely known that such mention might seem unnecessary. We herewith present his portrait. Said Victor Hugo: "Fifty is the old age of youth, but it is the youth of age." Though President Pullman has turned the half-century point in the number of his years, he is in the prime of a vigorous manhood, and is regarded by his peers as one of the ablest executive officers in this hemisphere. By nature a leader of men, he is clear, capable, and so self-reliant as to seem imperious to those not intimate with him. He handles vast interests with apparent ease. His time is about equally divided between New York and Chicago, though his residence is in Chicago. His new city is a favorite enterprise, and one to which he has given much careful thought. He is the typical American executive officer.

AN AGE OF CITIES.

In this age of city building the question of the proper sewerage of towns has become one of great and growing importance. Twenty-five per cent. of the population of our country resides in cities having a population of 10,000 and upward, but when we include those who reside in smaller towns, villages and hamlets, we find not less than 40 per cent. of our population urban in character.

A recent letter from Supt. Porter, of the Census Bureau, states that there are now 447 cities in the United States each of which has a population of 8,000 and upward.

Sanitary questions are now the most vital ones with which cities, villages and hamlets have to deal. And these questions are everywhere attracting deep and earnest attention. As yet residents of Pullman do not own their homes, but lease them from the company; but it is the intention to permit them to purchase homes in the near future.



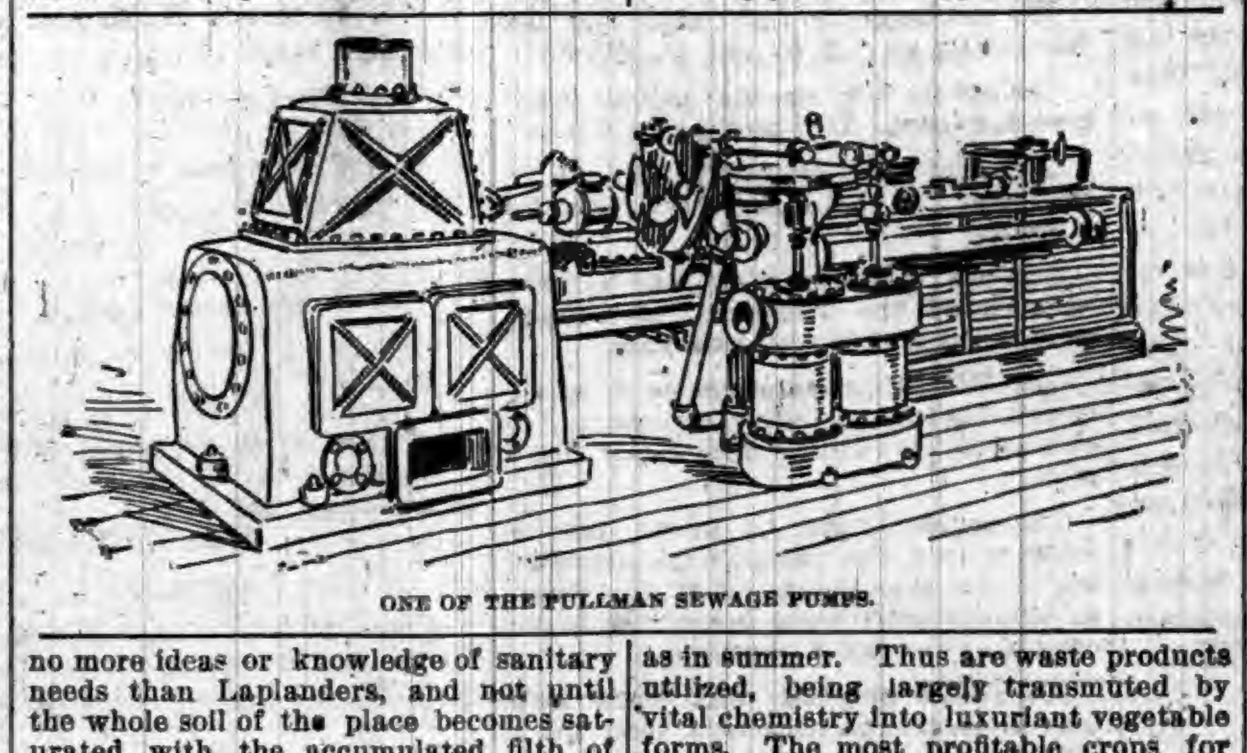
GEORGE M. PULLMAN.

IMPORTANCE OF SEWERAGE.

When any territory becomes densely settled, like Massachusetts, people readily begin to see and understand the necessity of preventing the pollution of streams and lakes with sewage, and that commonwealth is grappling with this subject in a way that must lead other States, very soon, to make it one of State if not of national interest and action. Just what ought to be done with sewage is by no means a settled question, each locality presenting its peculiar problems for solution. But one thing is well understood and that is, that sewage ought not to be allowed to go into lakes and streams. Among the methods of disposal, and the one of which it is the chief object of this article to speak, is that of land purification. It is an old process, traces of it being found in the ruins of ancient Nineveh.

THE GROWTH OF A TOWN.

Here, for the first time in the building of cities, the drainage and sewerage preceded the population. The ordinary small city is a haphazard collection of buildings, whose inartistic forms and relations would, as likely as not, be improved by an earthquake. The inhabitants of such places, at the outset, have no more ideas or knowledge of sanitary needs than Laplanders, and not until the whole soil of the place becomes saturated with the accumulated filth of years, and an epidemic improves society by removing the pachyderms and amphibious bipeds, and with them some whose lives could not well be spared, do those who are left realize the necessity of sewerage, and adopt some imperfect and inadequate method of relief.

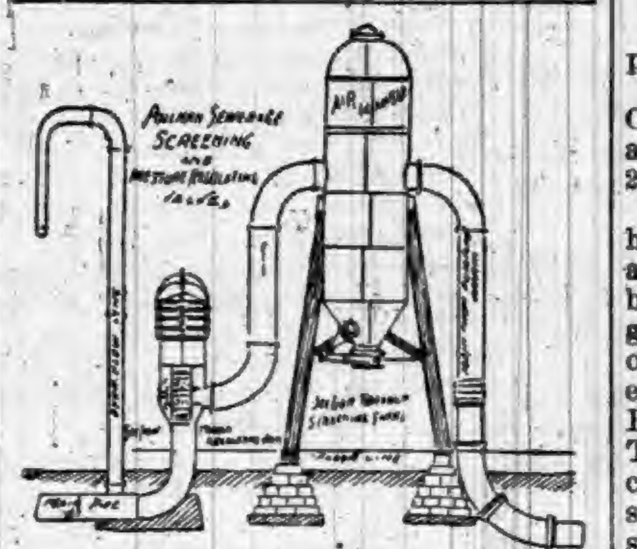


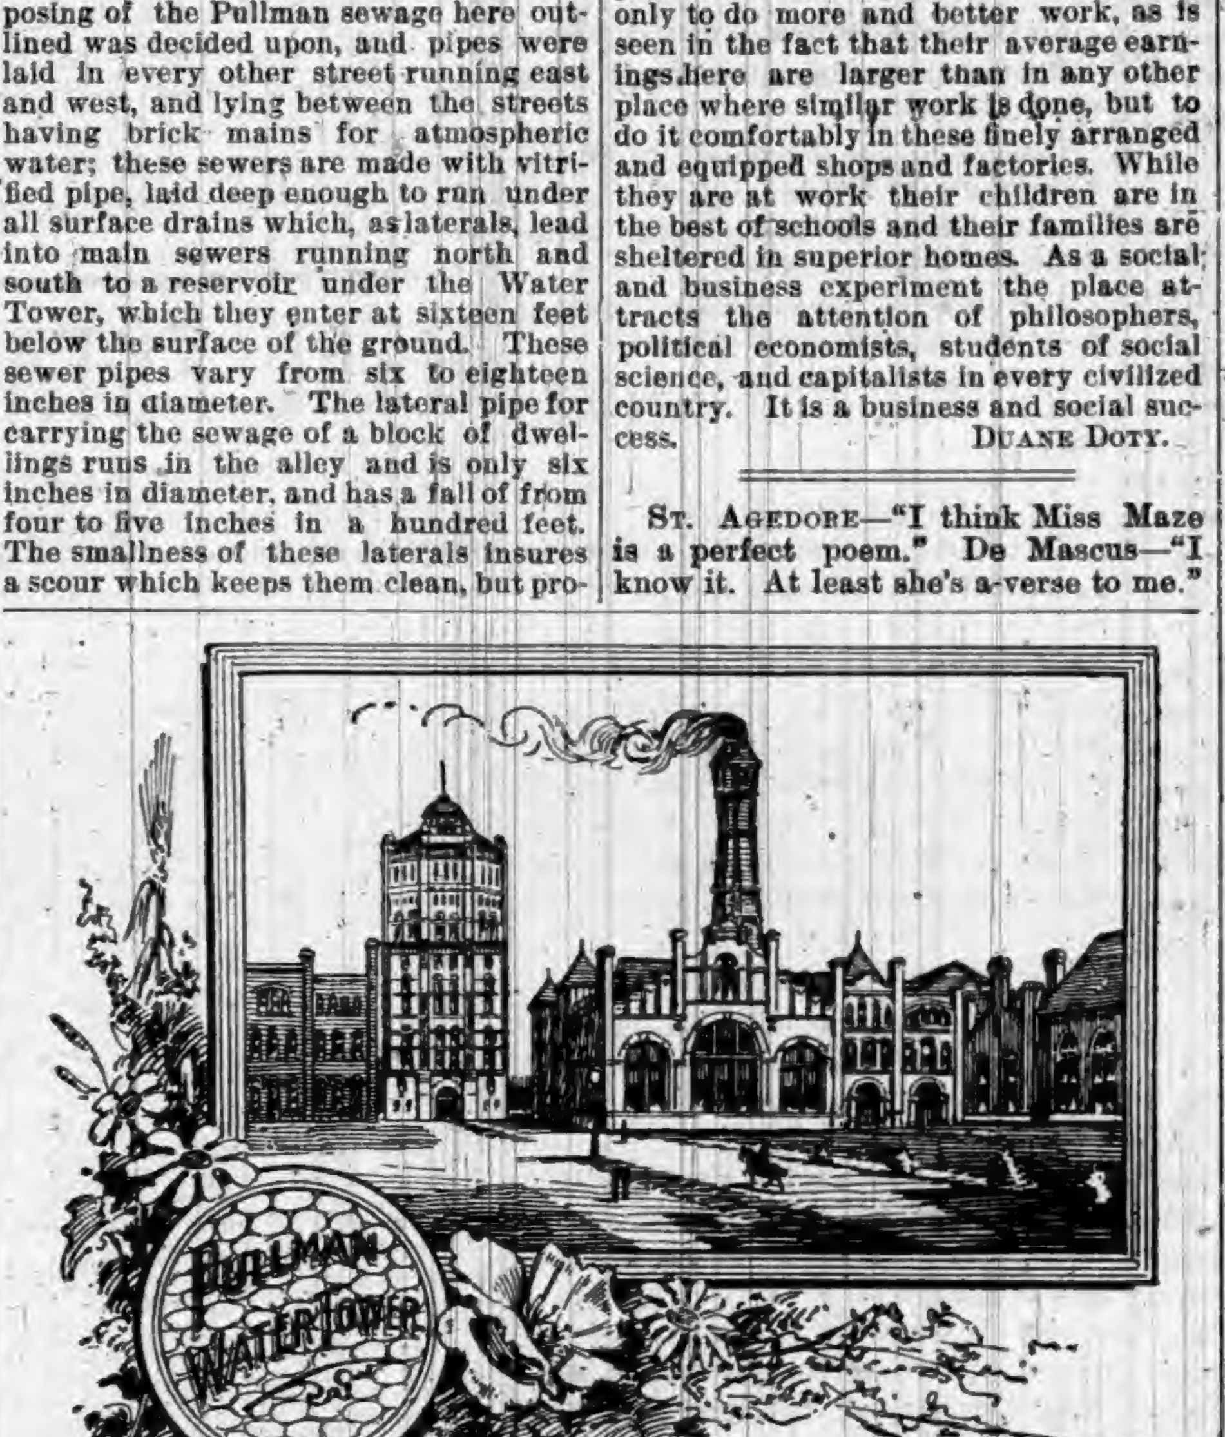
ONE OF THE PULLMAN SEWAGE PUMPS.

SEWERAGE PIPING HERE.

The great value of the work done here is principally suggestive, and is studied by travelers and scientific men of every continent.

At the outset it was decided that it would never do to permit sewage to flow into Lake Calumet, as it would make a cesspool of that body of water, and to obviate such a result, the mode of disposing of the Pullman sewage here outlined was decided upon, and pipes were laid in every other street running east and west, and lying between the streets having brick mains for atmospheric water; these sewers are made with vitrified pipe, laid deep enough to run under all surface drains which, as laterals, lead into main sewers running north and south to a reservoir under the Water Tower, which they enter at sixteen feet below the surface of the ground. These sewer pipes vary from six to eighteen inches in diameter. The lateral pipe for carrying the sewage of a block of dwellings runs in the alley and is only six inches in diameter, and has a fall of from four to five inches in a hundred feet. The smallness of these laterals insures a scour which keeps them clean, but provision has been made for flushing the pipes should they require it. Service pipes from houses and lots, provided with suitable catch-basins in the rear of dwellings, each basin connected with from four to six houses, convey the sewage from sinks and closets to these alley laterals.





THE RESERVOIR.

The sewage goes by gravity from buildings to the reservoir under the Water Tower. This reservoir is 60 feet in diameter and 15 feet deep, and holds over 300,000 gallons. The sewage is pumped from it as fast as received, and before sufficient time elapses for fermentation to take place. Standing over the reservoir the visitor never detects anything unpleasant, the air being just as pure as it is in the Corliss engine room, the only odor being that from the oil used about the pumps.

THE SEWAGE.

The sewage from dwellings averages probably from 120 to 130 gallons a day for each person of the population. Of the 1,800,000 gallons pumped every twenty-four hours (the daily average for 1890), the excess above the amount coming from dwellings is from the shops and factories. This seems a large amount of sewage for a population of 11,000, but when it is remembered that every tenement in the city is provided with the best of water closets and sinks, that the faucets for obtaining water are all inside the houses, and that about ten per cent. of the dwellings are provided with bathrooms, it will be seen that a large amount of sewage per capita is unavoidable.

FARM END OF IRON SEWAGE PIPE.

The sewage is pumped from the reservoir through a twenty-inch cast iron pipe to a sewage farm about three miles south of the city. At the farm end of this pipe the sewage goes into a receiving tank made of boiler iron, which is set a few feet above the surface of the ground. Through the center of this tank there is a screen in an oblique position, through the meshes of which substances more than half an inch in diameter cannot pass and get into the piping in the farm. The sewage waters pass through this screen and thence into the distributing pipes, a pressure of not more than ten pounds being allowed upon those pipes. See drawing of the screening tank and pressure regulating valve at the farm end of the iron main from the pumping works.

THE SEWAGE FARM AND ITS PIPING.

One hundred and forty acres of land have been thoroughly piped and underdrained for the reception and purification of sewage with which these acres are irrigated. Hydrants are placed at suitable intervals so that the distribution can be conveniently effected. All organic matter in the sewage is taken up by the soil and the growing vegetation, and the water, making from 200 to 600 parts of the sewage, runs off through underdrains to ditches which carry these filtered waters into Lake Calumet. Where the sewage water, purified by filtering through the soil, leaves the drains, it is as clear and sparkling as spring water, and purer than the water from the surface wells used by people on neighboring farms. In winter the sewage runs upon one field or upon one filter bed and then upon another, the filtering processes appearing as perfect as in summer. Thus are waste products utilized, being largely transmuted by vital chemistry into luxuriant vegetable forms. The most profitable crops for this farm have been found to be onions, cabbage and celery. In Europe the question is, at how little expense can such a farm be operated, the primary object being the necessary disposal of sewage, and the proceeds from crops raised merely diminishing operating expenses. A European sewage farm operated at a profit is the exception and not the rule.

COST OF OPERATING THE PUMPS.

The cost of operating one of these pumps for twenty hours and pumping 1,800,000 gallons of sewage is as follows:

Cost of coal used	$1.73
Cost of oil and waste	.57
Engineer's wages	3.75
Total	$6.05

This is a trifle less than 33 cents for pumping 100,000 gallons.

During the months of last September, October, and November the daily average of sewage pumped was a little over 2,000,000 gallons.

There are no saloons, gambling houses, or other debasing and hurtful agencies here to allure men, but the beautiful library, theater, Arcade, playgrounds, lake, and park-like avenues offer many attractions. The society is excellent, and the Pullman Military Band is considered the best in the State. There are now about forty secret societies, clubs, and organizations for social purposes, as well as eight church societies in Pullman. With these improved surroundings men are able not only to do more and better work, as is seen in the fact that their average earnings here are larger than in any other place where similar work is done, but to do it comfortably in these finely arranged and equipped shops and factories. While they are at work their children are in the best of schools and their families are sheltered in superior homes. As a social and business experiment the place attracts the attention of philosophers, political economists, students of social science, and capitalists in every civilized country. It is a business and social success.

How a Queen of the Ocean Looks When Undressed.

The new cruiser San Francisco's great speed has called more than ordinary attention to the principle of the twin screw. What will be the limitations of speed with the double screw? is the question now being largely discussed. In spite of the most elaborate plans and workmanship the speed is increased by only a small fraction of a knot.

The accompanying cut of the cruiser Frisco in the dry-dock is of great interest to those who say that the twin screw makes a steamer less safe than the single screw. The argument is that the screws, being fastened to the ship's ribs, are necessarily less solid than if attached to the keel, and rack the vessel to a weakening degree. When one comprehends the tremendous force required to drive a big ship through the sea the value of a keel support to a twin screw is very apparent.

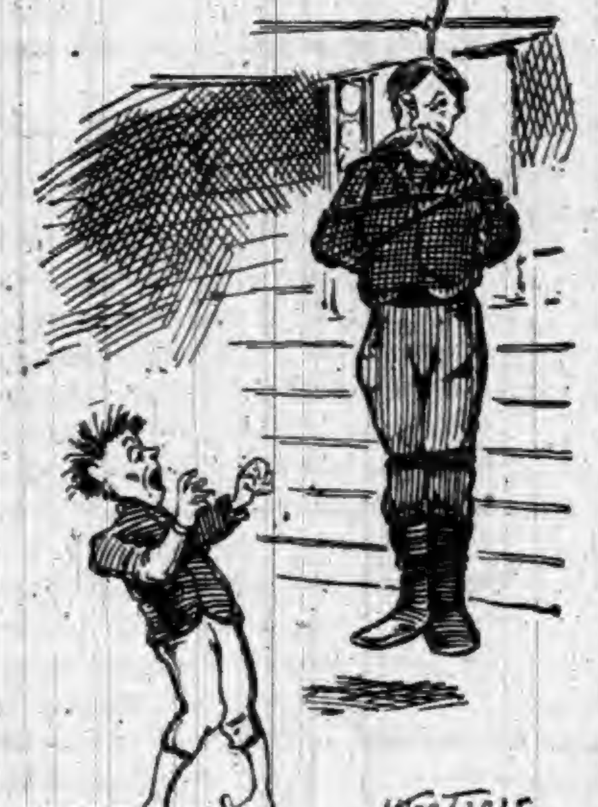
HUGH BLAKE WILLIAMS.



"HIT WUZ ER MAN."

By Honesty and Energy.

We learn of a country boy who worked in an evaporator during the autumns of his thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth years, attending district school during the intervening winters. His total earnings were about $250. The winter of his fifteenth year he attended a business college from which he graduated with honors. The autumn of his sixteenth year he became principal of the business department of a flourishing school, and is now filling the position with honor to himself and satisfaction to all concerned. This gratifying result was possible to this young man only because he made the most of his opportunities. There are thousands of men, young and old, who spend their time and strength in proclaiming what they might do if they had this one's "chance", or that one's money. Are you acquainted with any such? Did they make the most of the opportunities they have had? In spite of all that may be said about the advantages of those possessed of wealth and influence, the fact remains that no country on earth offers such opportunities to the young man—or woman—of brains and pluck as our America. The "grasping monopolists," about whom we hear so much, Gould, Rockefeller, Armour, and many others, began in poverty and rose by hard work and shrewd foresight. You, young reader, have the benefit of the past experience of thousands of successful men without cost. Will you use it? Any young man who has a sound mind in a healthy body ought to be ashamed of spending his time in lamenting over the things he might do if he only had some other man's money. There's a weak spot somewhere about the individual who permits such fancies to blind him to present possibilities.—Rural New-Yorker.

He Thought It Fragile.

An American, proud of the wonders of the new world and of New York City in particular, was busily engaged last week in showing an Englishman the sights of the city.

Among other places of interest, the two visited the Brooklyn Bridge, and started to walk across the structure. They reached the center of the mighty span and paused to gaze at the harbor and adjacent islands.

"Isn't it a beautiful scene? Isn't it a magnificent structure?" said the American enthusiastically to the Briton.

"I've seen many far finer in Great Britain," replied the other. "And as for the structure," he continued after a pause, "it is quite frail. I feel it trembling under my feet this very instant. While you Americans were about it why didn't you build it of solid masonry?"—New York Herald.

THE champion birth-room of America is in the house now occupied by Francis Gibson, in Spring township, Perry County, Pennsylvania, in which occurred the births of John B. Gibson, Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania; George Gibson, commissary of the United States; Dr. John Bernheisel, the Mormon who first represented the Mormons in Congress; Hon. John Bigler, Governor of California from 1852 to 1855; and Hon. Wm. Bigler, Governor of Pennsylvania from 1852 to 1855.

Advice to Young Men.

A correspondent writes to inquire if there is room in this city for a young man to dig in his toes and clamber for success. He says the avenues of employment and the great high roads to success in the quiet little town where he lives are closed, and that a young man might wander about all summer and never find anything to do that will eventually make him a great man, and place laurels of fame within his reach, so he will only have to reach up with a pole and knock off chunks of fame enough to last him through life. Yes, sir, there is plenty of room in this city for young men. There is plenty of room in any city, village or town for a young man who wants to climb up the ladder of fame. But there is no room in this city for more young men who expect to knock laurels off a tree with a pole. Laurels don't grow on trees in this city any more than they do in country places, even where trees are more plentiful, and laurels couldn't grow on them if they wanted to. But there is still room in the most crowded city on the globe for young men of energy and push, and who rather spend their leisure time in hustling for bread than smoking cigarettes, wearing tight pants, and posing as a masher, at nothing per day, and beating some boarding house out of their sustenance. All this talk about the avenues of employment being closed to young men is gammon, and any young man need not move into the city from some country town, in the hope of getting on better than he could in the country. The young man who don't catch on in a small town, where competition in labor and capital is less, does not possess the ingredients to give him a very startling lead in the city. If the correspondent can extract any consolation out of this information he is welcome to it at the usual rates.

The Ladies Delighted.

The pleasant effect and the perfect safety with which ladies may use the liquid fruit laxative, Syrup of Figs, under all conditions make it their favorite remedy. It is pleasing to the eye and to the taste, gentle, yet effectual in acting on the kidneys, liver and bowels.

Another Electrical Wonder.

"The most wonderful electrical invention that I have heard of this winter," said a well-known patent lawyer recently, is by Mr. Samuel D. Mott, who was for years Edison's confidential man, and who says that he has, which I believe, devised a scheme by which a single operator on a race-course or base-ball field may automatically display the whole progress of the race or game on a series of dials not unlike clock faces hundreds of miles from the scene of the contest. In the same way he claims to be able to show in the city of New York, on dials which would present a fac-simile diagram of the floor of the United States Senate, for example, exactly how each Senator is voting or speaking on any important question under consideration contemporaneously with the actual vote or speech in the Senate."—New York World.

Where to Fnd Contentment.

"The most contented people in this State," said a State functionary, "are the public paupers. The average length of life of paupers after entering the poorhouse is nearly twenty years, as is shown by official statistics; and when you consider that most of them at the time of admission are beyond their prime you will see that they must live under conditions favorable to longevity. When once safely lodged in the poorhouse they not only lay aside that ambition which disturbs the peace of ordinary mortals, but are perfectly contented to stay there through life. Twenty years of content, no botheration about money or provender or rent or clothes or taxes or doctors' bills, and no fear of failure of business. It is not always so bad to be a pauper in a poorhouse after all!"—New York Sun.

"NOW GOOD digestion wait on appetite and health on both." This natural and happy condition of the mind and body is brought about by the timely use of Prickly Ash Bitters. While not a beverage in any sense, it possesses the wonderful faculty of renewing to the debilitated system all the elements required to rebuild and make strong. If you are troubled with a headache, diseased liver, kidneys or bowels, give it a trial; it will not fail you.

Let's reason together.

Here's a firm, one of the largest the country over, the world over; it has grown, step by step, through the years to greatness—and it sells patent medicines!—ugh!

"That's enough!"—

Wait a little—

This firm pays the newspapers good money (expensive work, this advertising!) to tell the people that they have faith in what they sell, so much faith that if they can't benefit or cure they don't want your money. Their guarantee is not indefinite and relative, but definite and absolute—if the medicine doesn't help, your money is "on call."

Suppose every sick man and every feeble woman tried these medicines and found them worthless, who would be the loser, you or they?

The medicines are Doctor Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," for blood diseases, and his "Favorite Prescription," for woman's peculiar ills. If they help toward health, they cost $1.00 a bottle each! If they don't, they cost nothing!

Origin of Mermaid Stories.

The dugong, a species of whale found abundantly in the waters of both the great oceans, but especially off the coast of Australia in the Pacific, is believed to have furnished the slender basis upon which all mermaids and all mermen stories have been founded. Its average length is from eight to twenty feet. It has a hand much resembling that of the human species, and breaths by means of lungs. It feeds upon submarine seaweeds, and when wounded makes a noise like a mad bull. "The flesh of this species of whale is used for food, and is said to have the flavor of bacon, mutton or beef, according to the part of the body from which the meat is taken."

PURIFY YOUR BLOOD.

But do not use the dangerous alkaline and mercurial preparations which destroy your nervous system and ruin the digestive power of the stomach. The vegetable kingdom gives us the best and safest remedial agents. Dr. Sherman devoted the greater part of his life to the discovery of this reliable and safe remedy, and all its ingredients are vegetable. He gave it the name of a name every one can remember, and to the present day nothing has been discovered that is so beneficial for the BLOOD, for the LIVER, for the KIDNEYS and for the STOMACH. This remedy is now so well and favorably known by all who have used it that arguments as to its merits are useless, and if others who require a corrective to the system would but give it a trial the health of this country would be vastly improved. Remember the name—PRICKLY ASH BITTERS. Ask your druggist for it.

Prickly Ash Bitters!

CONGRESS adjourned yesterday March 4. Legislature ends next Monday.

SALARY bill has passed the senate fixing June 1, '92 as the date to go into effect. The House will likely agree in the main with the senate changes and pass it yet. A few fees are reduced. For salaries the clerk gets $2,400; auditor $2600; recorder, $1,450; treasurer and sheriff $2,200.

JUDGE JOHN D. MILLER of Greensburg, has been appointed by Gov. Hovey, to succeed the late Judge Berkshire on the supreme bench of the state. It is considered a good appointment, but Hovey missed another golden opportunity to prove his honesty in the matter of non-partisan appointments.

J. A. LEMCKE, till recently the state treasurer of Indiana, has been appointed by Harrison to succeed Huston as treasurer of the United States, the most important place under the secretary of the treasury. Thus one Indianian takes the place of another. The appointment seems a good one.

THE new state tax bill will leave on the feature transferring the railroad taxes to the state. This change was made by northern members, as the counties that have the most railroads would have been losers. DeKalb would have lost several thousand dollars. Kelly, Teal and Rosco stood together for the interests of this end of the state.

SEVERAL over zealous democratic papers are passing something like this to one another, "Up to the present time, only two or three democratic papers in this state have the hardihood to speak of Cleveland as a presidential possibility since his silver letter." They might also have said, that most of the democratic papers of the state have the good judgment not to be fighting the presidential battle two years ahead of time.

WE are to have a new set of judges to relieve the supreme court of this state. A law has been put through both houses and signed by the governor, creating an "appellate court" which can do a half at least of the work now done by the supreme court. The supreme court is several years behind in its cases and the new law will be a great relief to people who have been waiting several years to hear from the cases they have sent up to supreme court. The five new judges are to be appointed by the governor, and many legal gentlemen have put up their lightning rods, hoping to be hit. In the Ft. Wayne district Judge John Morris, well known here, is talked of for the place. In our own district, we see they are pushing forward our own townsman, W. L. Penfield. The governor will have a lively time till the seats are all filled.

A Road Auburn Wanted.

Under the head "A Herculean Pigmy," the Indianapolis Sentinel of Feb. 28, discusses the merits of the "Indiana Pacific," the road Auburn made a slight effort to have built from North Judson to this place. It may interest our Auburn readers to see that its valuable points are just what its friends then claimed. The article says: The Indians; Illinois & Iowa is at present the biggest little road in the west. It's 120 miles of track between Streator, Ill., and Knox, Ind, have in the last three months sustained more freight than any 120 miles in the country. Over 80 per cent. of the dressed beef traffic from Omaha during January, for instance, went by way of this herculean pigmy. The same is true of nearly 50 per cent. of the entire traffic from the west which formerly came through Chicago. Streator in the west, Chicago in the north, and Knox in the east form a triangle. Knox takes the Chicago rate on business billed to the east. Business to the west, in consequence, is billed from Streator to the east. "It ketches 'em both ways," like the darkey's coon-trap. From the western roads it takes 20 per cent. of the rate and from the eastern 17 per cent. This equalizes the rate via Chicago, but in no wise accounts for the vast business it is doing.

A Novel Machine.

The Kendallville News lately had the following:

"Vincent J. Fleischman, a jeweler in the employ of Charles Basset, at Waterloo, has a novel invention, which comes as near solving the problem of perpetual motion, probably, as the inventive genius of man will ever attain. It is certainly a novel and a wonder to all who behold it. The Press thus describes it: "It consists of a plate glass twenty-three inches square, a black dial painted thereon, a hole in the center through which is a spindle attached on which are two wooden hands; the shorter one or hour hand moves around the disc once in twelve hours; the long or minute hand once every hour. It tells the time of the day. The inventor, Mr. Vincent J. Fleischman, says there is a bedbug and a cockroach in each hand of the clock, which furnishes the motive power."

It might be added that this curious invention cannot be set back or forward, but no matter what is done with it, the hands will keep their proper places, or return to their places after being shifted into any other position. It is a real automic clock and a great puzzle, in fact, a scientific puzzle. We met the inventor recently, and had a conversation about his queer invention. He is evidently a great genius as well as a skillful workman and we have no doubt every watch that passes through his hands comes out "reformed and rejuvenated." He has also built a model ship fifteen inches long, and ten inches wide, which is worth coming miles to see, especially as it rides on waves that move automically giving them the appearance of reality.

She was Seventy.

EDITOR COURIER: Last Tuesday quite a number of the friends gathered at the home of Rev James Barton and wife to celebrate the 70th anniversary of Mother Barton's birthday. Large baskets were soon unloaded and a splendid dinner was prepared of which all partook of the good things to their utmost. After dinner all joined in an old time friendly visit and had a jolly, good time. About 4 p. m. after wishing the old couple many returns of similar occasions, we departed for our houses feeling that it was good to be there.

Life of General Sherman.

No literary announcement of the year is of greater interest to the general public than that of a comprehensive Life of General Sherman, which is about to be published and sold through agents by the noted house of E R Curtis & Co, of Cincinnati, O, and Boston, Mass. Admirable biographies of Grant and Sheridan, complete to the time of their death, are already familiar to the public, but a life of the third great commander, to finish the series, has been lacking. The various biographies of Sherman hitherto published have necessarily been incomplete; and even his own memoirs, written in 1875, said almost nothing of his intensely interesting early life, and not a word, of course, of the more than twenty years of social activity and fraternity with old comrades since the war.

The work which is now to be issued will splendidly supply the widely felt demand for a history of the great strategic commander. It is being written by General O. O. Howard, a man of fine literary attainments, who knew Sherman better than any other of his comrades now living, and ranked next but one to him in the army, and by Willis Fletcher Johnson, whose ability as a historian is familiar to the reading public of America through his former unusually popular works, which have had millions of readers, and the sales of their vast editions enriched an army of book agents. That this history of Sherman, the last of the great Generals, will surpass all others in popularity is not to be doubted.

The story of this great general's career is of a marvelous march from the mountains of time to the sea of eternity. Of the three great war heroes, Sherman was by far the most interesting personality. He was the best known to the public and best loved for his genial disposition and warm sympathy with the popular heart. He has joined his illustrious compeers in the eternal bivouac of the dead. His is a life study—to emulate—and is a profound inspiration. The forthcoming volume will tell the whole story of his marvelous career, and from the authorship engaged upon it, we are assured it will be told in a way that will enthrall the attention and interest of every reader from first to last. It is a book every American will, and one every American youth should read. It will doubtless be the best life of the great chieftain published, and we predict for it wonderful popularity. See display ad. in another column.

Obituary.

Addie B. McCord, was born in Ft. Wayne Dec. 5, 1871, died at her home Feb. 28, aged 19 years, 2 months and 23 days. She came to Auburn with her parents in her third year, where she has grown to beautiful womanhood. She was converted in her 11th year and received into the M. E. church on probation Feb. 28, 1881, during the pastorate of Rev. H. J. Norris. There are two remarkable coincidences in her history. She was born in 1871, united with the church in 1881 and died in 1891. The second is she died on the 10th anniversary of her reception into the church, she was baptized on the 28, of the month joined the church on the 28, and died on the 28, so that this date has been an important one in her history. She was an earnest and active worker in the church and Sunday school, doing willingly whatever her hands found to do. The cause of missions lay very near her heart, having been trained to this work from a child, first in the "Busy Bee," then in the young ladies' society. She was a dutiful daughter, an affectionate sister and a loving friend. By her modest winning ways she ingratiated herself into the hearts of all she met. She was a model young lady and died lamented by all. Her funeral services were held from the new church Monday afternoon conducted by the writer. The large auditorium was filled by loving friends who came to pay this last tribute to her memory.

H. M. LAMPORT

Card of Thanks.

We find it impossible to express in words the gatitude we feel towards our kind neighbors and friends who did so much for us during the sickness, death and burial of our beloved Addie. You have done all that human sympathy and kindness could to ameliorate our sorrow, and we shall always hold you in grateful remembrance. We especially thank the neighbors for kind ministrations, the mission circle and Sunday school class for flowers, the choir for beautiful music and all others who so promptly came to our relief in this hour of supreme sorrow.

Gratefully Yours,

G. S. McCORD AND WIFE.

Obituary.

Sarah J. Shurts was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, Aug. 31, 1856, was married to W. H. McGiffin June 3, 1875. There were born to them five children, one of whom preceded the mother to the better world. Sarah McGiffin died at her home two miles north of Corunna on Wednesday morning Feb. 18, 1891, at 8 o'clock, aged 34 years 6 months and 17 days. The funeral took place at the M. E church, Corunna and was attended by the order of K. P's in a body, Mr McGiffin being a member of that organization. There were present at the services about five hundred people which showed the respect in which she was held. The sermon was preached by Rev. M. R. Pierce form I Kings, VII, 22. She leaves to mourn their loss, a husband, four children and a host of friends.

Resolutions of Condolence.

CORUNNA, IND, Feb. 23, 1891.

WHEREAS: In the providence of Almighty God, the wife and bosom companion of our worthy brother W. H. McGiffin has been removed from our midst by death, thus casting the greatest gloom and sorrow over the bereaved family, leaving the home lonely and heartsad and in need of kind words and acts of sympathy, therefore be it

RESOLVED: That we the members of Corunna Lodge No. 248 K. of P., do most heartily and sincerely extend our fraternal love and sympathy to the husband and family of the deceased.

RESOLVED: That we will spare no pains to aid, assist and comfort them in this their hour of sorrow.

RESOLVED: That we attend the funeral in a body and thus pay our last tribute of respect to our departed sister.

RESOLVED: That a copy of these resolutions be presented to our brother and family in appreciation of the worth of those we love.

RESOLVED: That these resolutions be published in the county papers, and that they be inscribed upon the records of the Lodge in remembrance of the sad event.

Surprised

The friends of Issac Hornberger planned a pleasant surprise Feb. 25, to remind him that he had reached the sixty-seventh milestone in life. Though the weather was bad and roads almost impassable the people poured in from all directions to the amount of fifty-four and it would be needless to say that they came with their baskets well filled with all the good things that would make one of the best of dinners. The subject of this sketch was made the recipient of a watch, the donors of which were his friends and neighbors. The presentation speech was made by G. D McGowan. Father H. responded as best he could in his embarassment and surprise. Dinner was announced to which all did ample justice. The afternoon was spent in a social way and a pleasant time was had. Being one of the number must say that it is a day long to be remembered. Thus through this social gathering we have again been reminded of the passage of time. Oh! how swiftly the years come and go and with them we are nearing our eternal home. And though in this world we may never meet again as we thus met, may we so modify our lives that we may have a happier meeting in the beyond.

Commissioners' Court.

Commissioners Patterson, Hoffelder and Henderson are on hand, and up to the top of their ears in business. If questions are not properly settled it will not be for want of care and attention on their part. They appointed Geo. Walker, Garrett, as justice to fill a vacancy, J. Wm. Wagner and H N. Coffinberry being his bondsmen. Work at this date is not complete enough for publication.

United Brethren in Christ.

EDITOR COURIER:—As the "Radical from Principle" has again been heard from through the columns of your paper, I beg leave to again reply.

Bishop (?) Barnaby, in a meeting held sometime ago, said: "True radicals can not be either coaxed or driven, but will fight to the end."

Now the question is, what is a "true radical?" Can anyone conceive of anything that can not be either coaxed or driven? We not unfrequently find men who can be coaxed and cannot be driven. And sometimes we find people who dislike to be coaxed, and must be driven. But, generally, either class will succumb rather than "fight to the end." I have been wondering for a few days past what would answer the description of a "true radical." And at last my natural curiosity has been satisfied. A liveryman at one time came in possession of a mustang pony that was considered unmanageable and would not work. His master said, "I will break him or kill him." But he failed in both. On getting the pony rigged up with a heavy horse to a heavy wagon, he commenced kicking and continued on and on until he kicked himself to death.

I do not wish, however, to compare Simeon H. Maurer with the bucking mustang as a "true radical," although he seems to express a willing desire to "drop out," as he clearly states in his last that we will not hear from him again. He makes a desperate effort to explain to your readers the great and noble principles of true radicalism, and why he adheres to the constitution of 1841, by saying, "When I joined the church, I was asked the question, 'Are you willing to be governed by our church rule?' and I answered 'I am.'" And finally falls through himself by charging me with breaking said vow and seceding from the true United Brethren church. What forcible arguments he can produce! I thinks it lucky for O. A. Radical that S H Maurer did not succeed in learning his name, thereby escaping the criticisms of his able and witty pen. As usual, he fails to explain how the change was brought about. And I hereby challenge him to prove to your many readers the illegality of the amended constitution.

Because the church of the United Brethren in Christ has opened her doors only wide enough to admit anyone whom she believes and acknowledges Christ has received, some meddlesome, bigoted men who, if they could, would resort to thumb-screws to compel all to subscribe to their restrictive dogmas, declare that "the church has surrendered to the lodge."

S. H. Maurer will and must confess that during the past many of those converted at our altars were turned away, some to find homes in sister churches, others to turn back to the world and perish, because the church in which they were converted, in which Christ had received them, shut them out in the cold. While on the other hand, if such could have been received in her communion when converted would doubtless have proved faithful members and become pillars in the church. And yet, knowing this to be true, S H. Maurer will stand out and boast of the great principles, when he conscientiously knows he is in the wrong.

Undoubtedly he is a "true radical" and will "fight to the end."

Coughing

IS Nature's effort to expel foreign substances from the bronchial passages. Frequently, this causes inflammation and the need of an anodyne. No other expectorant or anodyne is equal to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It assists Nature in ejecting the mucus, allays irritation, induces repose, and is the most popular of all cough cures.

"Of the many preparations before the public for the cure of colds, coughs, bronchitis, and kindred diseases, there is none, within the range of my experience, so reliable as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. For years I was subject to colds, followed by terrible coughs. About four years ago, when so afflicted, I was advised to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and to lay all other remedies aside. I did so, and within a week was well of my cold and cough. Since then I have always kept this preparation in the house, and feel comparatively secure." —Mrs. L. L. Brown, Denmark, Miss.

"A few years ago I took a severe cold which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continual use of the Pectoral, a permanent cure was effected."—Horace Fairbrother, Rockingham, Vt.

KLINCK

IS THE NAME OF THAT

Wonderful Remedy

That Cures Catarrh, Hay-Fever, Cold in the Head, Sore Throat, Canker, and Bronchitis.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

From the Hon. Harvey D. Colvin, Ex-Mayor of Chicago:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

It may perhaps be interesting and beneficial, at least in a financial sense, for our people in the vicinity of Auburn Junction, to know that Geo. Morr, is at this time making a special effort to give his many customers value received and a just appreciation for all money and patronage subjected to his dispensation. He is carrying on a first-class grocery business, and means to help his patrons to beautify their homes with works of art, without extra expense. He has on hand a lot of magnificent oil paintings, which he proposes to give away under the following conditions: Every person who buys $30 worth of goods and pays cash, will get one of those excellent oil pictures as a present. These landscapes are not to be confounded with the cheap, trashy chromos, with which this country has been flooded. They are beauties, and real works of art, well worthy to find a resting place on the walls of the grandest parlors. A copy of Dickens Works with $15 purchases. These books need no special recommendation. But they are entitled to room in any library. Go make the purchase, get a picture, hang it on the parlor wall and be up with the times in matters of artistic luxury.

St. Joe News: The editor of this paper and wife had the pleasure of attending a reception at Auburn last Saturday evening, given by Mrs. E Zimmerman to the ladies of the L. L. C. and their husbands, on the anniversary of Washington's birthday. About fifty persons were present and after a brief literary program appropriate to the occasion, refreshments were served, consisting of fruits, cake, etc., and the remainder of the evening was spent in a sociable manner. The L. L. C. is an organization composed entirely of ladies, who meet once a week for study and mental improvement.

For reasons that are likely to bring about the best developments, the managers of the reading room have concluded to discontinue the lunch counter. A first class stock of fruits and confectionery will be put in its stead. Mr. W. A. Rose will continue to superintend the institution. The stock of goods will be under the direction of the board, who are desirous that this room should be self sustaining. The change will take place at once and we trust that the public will give the enterprise a patronage that will justify the managers in doing what they have. All will be with us on the point that there is a great and constant expense incurred, by keeping this room in operation, and those expenses must be met either by a direct attack upon the contribution pocket book or by carrying on some legitimate business whose profits will meet the demands. Let us, as a people, give the institution the hearty support so justly deserves.

A Golden Wedding.

On Wednesday, Feb. 25, the children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Spitler, together with a number of other friends met at the home of their daughter Mrs. Wm. Treace for the purpose of arranging a pleasant surprise on them. They all went together to their home at 2 p. m. This was their 50th anniversary. They were each presented a pair of gold rim glasses from their children and a number of other valuable presents were received. Refreshments were served at 5 o'clock, and about 9 o'clock they retired wishing them many more happy anniversaries. They were the parents of four children, L. Spitler, of Auburn; Mrs. Wm. Treace and John Spitler, of Allen Co., and W. Spitler, near Auburn.

The Arions.

We ought to say, "The Hoosiers" for that is their name now. They are taking the audiences they meet, by storm. The Logansport Times has no less than four articles about them and Mr. Bennett. We give three of the notices to show how the "Hoosiers" are received:

The Hoosier Quartet, now traveling with Mr. Bennett, is composed as follows: First tenor, I. N. Fisher; second tenor, George W. Quinee; baritone, E. H. Bottenberg; basso, J. M. Widney.

The speeches delivered by Bennett and the music rendered by the quartet Saturday night and Sunday were well received by large and attentive audiences. Some winced a tittle, but then you know the truth is a wonderful thing to prick the conscience. Give us more truth!

Cyclone Bennett gave us "Our boys and how to save them" Thursday night. It was a most splendid lecture and did much good. Owing to the protracted meeting and a very stormy night there there was not as large an attendance as we hoped for, but many converts were made and we hope much good done. The Hoosier quartet took the house by storm.

WINE OF CARDUI, a Tonic for Women.

Peter Helwig and his son, J. R. Helwig, remembered their friends of the COURIER Tuesday, while here paying taxes. Uncle Peter is now a full fledged town chap, having moved to Butler.

S. W. Ralston has been confined to his home for a few days. He seemed to have taken cold, or as is thought exposed himself while shoveling snow last Saturday morning. We hope it is not serious. Mrs. Ralston is also in poor health.

There will be preaching at the Presbyterian church, from this time on, regularly, every Sunday morning and evening. The services last Sunday were well attended and the sermons very able and interesting. The church and its accessories will be repaired and improved greatly during the coming summer.

D. C. Headley died in Chicago, Tuesday morning. The same day, the papers reported him an increase of pension. He was up there for treatment, for kidney disease, and had an operation performed, that it was hoped would cure him. He suddenly grew worse and Mr. Rainier went up there Monday evening, and next morning sent word he was dead. Mr R. brought the remains home Tuesday night. The funeral is at the M. E. church to day, at 2:30.

Miss Addie McCord died at her home here Saturday evening about seven o'clock after a long and severe illness. She was a worthy young lady whose loss will be deeply mourned by a large circle of friends.

The young ladies of the Presbyterian church have postponed their drill entertainment until March 20. They have prepared a fine musical program, with a "sword drill" and many other interesting features. Remember the date, Friday March 20, at Opera House.

G. A. R. Hall Dedication.

It is not generally known, as yet, but it will soon be made manifest that De Long Post No. 67, G. A. R., is about to dedicate to its use one of the most beautiful and spacious halls to be found in northeastern Indiana. It is located on the second floor of the south half of Ensley block, east of public square. This hall was fitted up with a view to making it a model of artistic grandeur. Labor, care and expense have not been spared to bring about the desired results. It stands as a monument of patriotic pride and common interest, and it is with an anxious interest that our people look forward to the time when they will be permitted to view the handsome interior of magnificent institution. The dedicatory services and ceremonies will held on Monday evening, March 16, 1891. An admisson fee of 25 cents will be charged which goes toward paying for the furnishings. Get your tickets early, and watch for the excellent program which will appear in next week's issue.

He wanted to Paint the Wrong House.

How many poor mortals are suffering from that enemy to undisturbed propriety, absent mindedness. The ratio of individuals who are in the habit of forgetting everything they ought to remember, is frightening. People ofttimes lose their bearings and subject themselves to merciless ridicule just because they forget to remember the more important things in life. A rich and funny story comes to us on this line, as it is told on Wm. Murphy, city painter. Now, everybody knows "Pat," as he is commonly called, as one of the commonest, jolliest and best natured "dope slingers" in town, and can consider a joke as calmly as the next one. The story goes like this: "A few mornings ago when the mercury stood quite low and the frigidity of the atmosphere brought a crimson flush to the cheeks and chattering to the teeth, Bill started to the North Side, where he was doing some inside work. Before he got to his work, however, he found it comfortable to carry his "bread hooks" over his ears. In this attitude he pranced along Main street, until near the end of the street, when he turned abruptly and bolted right into the residence of Mr. Kain. The family was somewhat startled at his sudden entrance, and it is not known what excuse Bill conjured up, or whether he even made an apology. But when he came on the street again his awe-stricken countenance told in unmistakable language of the agonies he endured by forgetting himself and getting "into the wrong pew." This joke is a harmless one and it is thought the genial mixer of pigments and oil, will knock hereafter and give people warning before scaring them.

REVOLUTIONARY RELIC.

We give above a fac simile copy, as nearly as modern type will show, of a revolutionary relic, the property of J. B. Hoover. His father got it among the papers found in settling up an old estate. It is an execution levied to collect a debt due for furnishing a substitute to serve in Washington's army. The "return" on the back reads: "Oct, 22, 1777, Levied by execution on a wagon and fether Bed."

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A Noyes, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

REMAINS OF THE LATE EMMA ABBOTT CREMATED.

A Woman Confesses to a Murder—Dressed Beef Bill Defeated—A Large Estate—A Schooner Sank—For Life.

The Abbott Cremation.

Pittsburgh special: It has leaked out here that the remains of Emma Abbott, the famous opera singer, had been cremated in this city two weeks ago. The matter was kept quiet out of deference to the feelings of the mother of the deceased. The cremation took place in Samson's crematory, and was witnessed by none but the executors. The body was shipped quietly from Chicago on February 16th, and reached here the following morning. The furnace had been heated in the meantime, and as soon as the remains arrived they were placed in a natural gas retort. In one hour and fifteen minutes incineration was complete. The ashes were then placed in a small urn and shipped to New York. They are now in the vaults of a safe deposit company in that city, where they will remain until the erection of a monument to the deceased prima donna. Samson was committed to secrecy, but when confronted with the above facts, admitted that they were true.

Confessed to Murder.

The Chief of Police of Kansas City received a message from the Chief of Police of Denver, Col., stating that a negress named Dayton, under arrest there had confessed to the murder of James Wade in Kansas City about two years ago. Wade was a driver and collector for the Jacob Dold packing-house, and at the time of his mysterious disappearance was known to have had several hundred dollars in his possession. The Dayton woman confessed that she killed him by cutting his throat, and then threw his body into the river. She secured about $300 in cash from his body. She implicates Oscar Collins, who is serving time in the State Penitentiary, and Stella Green, both colored and desperate characters. These three persons were arrested at the time of the disappearance of Wade, charged with his murder, but nothing could be definitely proved, and they were released.

Chief Bushyhead Wins.

A special from Guthrie says: Ex-Chief Bushyhead, of the Cherokee Nation, who has a lease upon the stone quarries near Arkansas City, Kan., in the Cherokee Strip, has obtained a temporary restraining order from Judge Green, enjoining Lieut. Golden from removing Bushyhead and his employes from the strip, destroying buildings, side tracks, derricks and machinery. A short time ago Lieut. Golden took possession of the quarries and ordered the work to cease. The Cherokes at once applied for an injunction, which was granted.

The Bride Was a Man.

Henry Sewers, of Chicago, was married to Johanna Sebus on Feb. 22. Immediately after the ceremony the bride was called to her father's home out of the city, borrowing $150 of Henry to pay her expenses. The other day she returned and endeavored to have her husband give her $2,000 he had recently inherited. He refused and a fight ensued, when it transpired that the "bride" was a man. He married Henry for his money.

Deed of a Demon.

Delos Boswell, a farmer 70 years old, who lives in Copley Township, Summit County, Ohio, went insane, and, grabbing an axe, dashed his son's brains out. The old man then rushed at his wife dealing her a terrible blow, after which he tried to cut his own throat. Neighbors hurried in before he could put an end to his life, and it is hoped that both his wife and son may recover. His troubles are the result of financial difficulties.

Dressed Beef Bill Defeated.

By a vote of forty-one to twenty-five the Lower House of the Indiana Legislature defeated the bill which provides for a general system of dressed beef inspection by the appointment of inspectors in all cities and towns, who were empowered to collect fees which were practically prohibitory. The bill was aimed at the dressed-beef industry of Chicago, and was similar in its provisions to the measure declared unconstitutional two years ago.

A Large Estate.

Several heirs to an immense fortune, which it is said is left from the estate of Robert Edwards, of Kentucky, have been discovered in Houston, Texas. The inheritance involves the right of ownership in land on Broadway, Wall street, and under and around Trinity Church, New York City. The property is said to be valued at $267,000,000.

Twenty-four Men Drowned.

Richmond (Va.) special: In the terrible gale which swept the Lower James River, twenty-four oyster men, mostly colored, were drowned at points just above and below the mouth of the Warwick River.

A Royal Betrothal Announced.

George Victor, Prince of Waldeck-Pyrmont, has been betrothed to Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein. The Prince, who is 60 years of age, is the father of the Duchess of Albany.

A Place for Judge Woods.

President Harrison has decided to let Judge William A. Woods go on the circuit bench.

A Schooner Sank.

The new screw-propeller ferry boat, Bergen, of the Barclay street line of Hoboken, on her trip over to the New York side, ran into the Buena Vista, a three-masted schooner, about one hundred feet from her slip. The schooner had her side stove in and sank almost immediately. No lives were lost.

Given a Life Sentence.

The jury in the case of George Hathaway, who has been on trial, at Chicago for the murder of Billy Whelan, returned a verdict sentencing Hathaway for life in the penitentiary.

George Ingham Dead.

George C. Ingham, Assistant States Attorney under Julius S. Grinnell, and law partner of Luther Laflin Mills, died suddenly of heart disease at his residence, 552 Englewood avenue, Chicago. Mr. Ingham left his office, at 122 Lasalle street, at 6 o'clock in the evening and complained of feeling tired. He went directly home. During the time he was eating supper he told his wife of a peculiar case he had been trying. After supper he read the newspapers, and about 8 o'clock was taken with cramps and died. He was a skillful cross-examiner and an eloquent pleader. One of his most notable addresses was his speech before the jury in the Cronin trial, in which case he was one of the lawyers for the prosecution. He was also one of the leading counsel for the State in the Anarchist case.

ON THE SCAFFOLD.

A Condemned Man Is Chloroformed.

Murderer West was hanged at Washington, Pa. West was carried from his cell to the scaffold strapped to a plank.

During the night the condemned negro, William West, made an attempt on his life while the night watchmen were within a short distance of him. He detached a small piece of iron from his cot and first attempted to swallow it. Failing in this he tried to stab his throat. His neck was horribly gashed. The night watchmen were at his side almost immediately upon hearing his gasps and succeeded in stopping his suicidal attempts. West was carried from his cell to the scaffold strapped to a plank. When the rope was adjusted and the trap sprung West's body fell a distance of four feet. The rope snapped and the victim fell on the ground. The spectators rushed forward and assisted in carrying the body of the gasping, struggling criminal to the scaffold. The rope was again adjusted about his neck and three minutes after the first fall West again swung off, dropping a distance of two feet, where he hung until dead.

When West was being dressed for the execution, he rolled about so much in his bed that it was almost impossible to clothe him. He also fought as best he could, when being strapped to the board. Chloroform was administered, which probably accounts for his dazed appearance on the scaffold.

An Insane Man's Attempt to Crucify Himself.

With the marks of the cruel nails on both hands and feet James Quinn, an old man, lay on a cot in the Philadelphia Hospital suffering from wounds self-inflicted while seeking to crucify himself as his Savior was crucified by His persecutors. Though the pain of the wounds has been intense the old man seemed not to notice it, but to suffer great mental agony over imaginary sins. He clasped his hands in constant prayer in penance for past misdeeds. Quinn's attempt at self-crucifixion, which is only the second instance of its kind known to medical science, came as the culmination of long religious brooding and other troubles which had unhinged his mind. He marked out a cross on the floor of his room, and then drove nails through his feet into the floor. It was necessary to break off one of the nails before he could be released. He may die of lockjaw.

May be Murder.

The Northern Indiana prison was the scene of a horrible cutting affray between two convicts, which will likely result in a case of murder, as the victim lies in the hospital in a precarious condition, while the assailant is locked up, reflecting upon his crime. The participants were John Stumbaugh, aged 23 years, and Edward Carroll, 19 years, the former being from Logansport, while the latter was from Peru, though his mother lives in Indianapolis. Stumbaugh made the assault in a most ferocious manner, using a good-sized pocket-knife, and he cut Carroll in a dozen different places about the head, face, and neck before the officers could interfere. The men had been at swords' points for a long time, having been pals on numerous tramping expeditions before their convictions.

Destitution.

A special from Oklahoma says: A deplorable state of affairs exists among the negroes who have lately emigrated to this Territory. They have come to the number of several thousand, with the understanding that the government would feed them and give them a piece of land, and they are now opening their eyes to the fact that the land is all taken up by white men, and that the government will not feed them, and as they have no money and there is no work for them to do, they are in a deplorable condition. They are at starvation's door, with not a friend within a thousand miles, as many of them are from Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas.

A Stormy Voyage.

The National Line steamer France, which has arrived in New York from Liverpool, experienced unusually rough weather. She left Liverpool February 7, and encountered a succession of terrific gales from the southward, shifting to northwest, with high cross seas lasting nearly all the passage. February 14, during a heavy southerly gale, an enormous sea boarded the ship, flooding the after-deck and washing overboard Second Officer William C. Baines, a native of Liverpool, who was lost. The after-rail was carried away, companion-way smashed, bridge damaged, and the ship received other damage about deck.

Obeyed Orders.

A tragedy took place in front of 70 Spring street, New York. Paulina Robertice, an Italian girl, sent two pistol balls crashing into the body of her lover, Nicolai Piero. One ball struck him in the stomach and the other in the back. About four months ago Piero and Paulina became lovers. One day when she was alone in the house Piero assaulted the girl. He swore then that he would marry her, and gave her a revolver, telling her that if he failed to keep his promise she should shoot him. He failed to keep his word and Paulina shot him. Piero will die and the girl has been arrested.

Three Killed.

An accident occurred at the White Wall coal mines in Marion County, Tenn., by which three men lost their lives, while five others were seriously injured. The brake on the drum at the top of the incline refused to work while a trip was being made with sixteen men in the car going up. The car crashed into the top, the rope broke and the car started down the incline at a frightful speed. J. W. Stewart, Lawrence Wattery, and John Abbott were instantly killed, and Ed Knox, B. L. Arledge, John Gentry, Harry Rider, and John McPherson seriously injured, some of whom may die.

Poor Anna Dickinson.

A special from Wilkesbarre, Pa., says: The case of Anna Dickinson is a most pitiable one. The gossip is here that she is reduced to the most abject poverty. It is stated that the poor board of West Pittston had to defray her expenses to the Danville Insane Asylum. It is now said that it is this dread of poverty that drove her insane. The patient was seen at the insane asylum. She refuses to eat, and says that the attendants want to poison her. Dr. Schultz refuses to give any opinion as to wheather recovery in her case is possible or not.

A Brutal Burglar.

A masked robber entered the residence of J. S. Morris at Kansas City. A daughter of the owner of the house, Miss Clara, was in the parlor alone. The robber told her that he would kill her if she screamed. He attempted to take her diamond ring from her finger, but it was too tight. He then took her gold watch and tore her diamond ear rings from her ears. The robber then made his escape. The young lady's ears were badly mutilated.

A Mysterious Case.

At New Albany, Ind., Mrs. Nicholas Long and her husband quarreled over her determination to join church, and Mr. Long threatened her life. Next morning Mrs. Long and her three children were taken violently ill, and lie at the point of death. The physician pronounces the case one of poisoning. Mr. Long attributes the illness to escaping gas from a stove.

Obscene Letters.

Della Bird, the notorious woman now held in jail at Tiffin, Ohio, as a witness in the Kuhns murder case, is a witness in another case. Charles McCarthy, a fellow-prisoner, became enamored of her and wrote her a letter filled with the vilest possible obscenity. This letter fell into the hands of the Sheriff, and was by him turned over to the United States authorities. As a result McCarthy was taken to Toledo by government officials to answer to the charge of sending obscene matter through the mails. The Bird woman was taken along as a witness.

Redskins Still Dancing.

Atoka (I. T.) special: Rev. G. W. Hicks, superintendent of the Baptist mission, about fifteen miles north of Anadarko, writes to the Indian mission under a recent date that the Wichita, Caddo, Delaware, and Kechis Indians are still dancing. Their dances commenced during the Sioux troubles and have continued since, with only temporary intermission. They have recently gained a new impetus from the arrival of "Sitting Bull," their leader, who has been absent several weeks. About 1,000 Indians are participating. Rev. Hicks considers the situation critical.

Lepers Abroad.

Dr. Blanc, Chief Sanitary Inspector of the State Board of Health of Louisiana, and one of the ablest physicians in the State, announced that there are in New Orleans twenty-five fully-developed cases of leprosy, and that no steps can be taken for the care of the afflicted people, as no provision has been made by the city or State Government to look after them and prevent the spread of the terrible disease. The lepers are allowed to roam about unrestrained, and can rub elbows with the healthy and so spread the loathsome affliction.

Shot His Son.

A terrible tragedy occurred at Decatur, Ind. Judge J. R. Bobo, who is a prominent citizen of that place, was quite petulant when he went home, and ordering his son to do something, the son, a young man of 23, refused, whereupon the Judge pulled his revolver and fired at the boy. The ball entered the young man's back, inflicting a severe and perhaps fatal wound. The Judge was arrested and jailed until the result can be ascertained. He had been drinking heavily all day and the son mildly protested his father's actions.

Two Persons Drowned.

San Diego (Cal.) special: The town of Tiaquana, on the Mexican line, has been wrecked by the floods. Aside from the Russ Hotel, which is so badly damaged as to be of no further use, not a building remains standing. The Otay River broke its banks and swelled the Tia Juana River until it flooded the entire country, sweeping away stores, houses, cattle, and everything that came in its path. Two persons are reported drowned at Tia Juana. No other fatalities are reported.

A Rich Newspaper Man.

The death of Senator Hearst makes his son, Wm. R. Hearst, the richest newspaper proprietor of the country. It is said young Hearst will have complete control of the bulk of the Senator's estate of $20,000,000, and that he will at once set about the establishment of a daily newspaper in New York, as he regards Frisco as too small a field.

Boiler on a Tear.

The boiler in the engine-room of the Fort Wayne Furniture Works, sprung a bad leak, and commingled steam and hot water was forced into the fire-box below in a great volume. The doors of the furnace were forced open and the contents blown into the engine-room. Frank Schrantz, the fireman, was badly burned about the head and shoulders, and it is thought he will die.

A Fatal Wreck on the Wabash.

A collision between two Wabash freights near Carbon, Davis County, Iowa, resulted in fatal injuries to two passengers, William and Oren Hunt, of Downing, Mo. Brakeman Long Bledsoe had an eye torn out, and three other trainmen were slightly injured.

Shot His Brother.

John Fallon, aged 12, picked up a gun at his home, Wilkesbarre, Pa., and playfully pointing it at his 6-year-old brother, Robert, pulled the trigger. A loud report followed and the little victim received the heavy load of shot full in the face and was instantly killed.

Gov. Oglesby Meets with Misfortune.

The mansion of ex-Governor Richard S. Oglesby, at Oglehurst, Elkhart, Ill., was destroyed by fire. Loss $20,000. All the Governor's and Mrs. Oglesby's curiosities of the war were destroyed. Mrs. Oglesby was painfully but not dangerously burned.

Will Not Appoint.

Gov. Jackson, of Maryland, has decided not to appoint a successor to the late United States Senator Wilson, and the seat will remain vacant until the Legislature, which meets in January.

Hunter's Head Blown Off.

Louis Stanton, aged 19, went out hunting near Sanborn, Ind., and was found dead, with a portion of his head blown off, near a boat, and a part of his body in the water. His death was accidental.

MANGLED IN A WRECK.

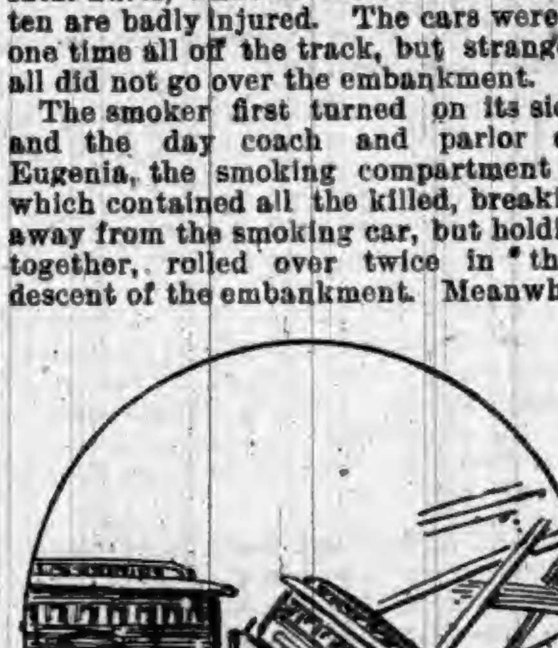
SHOCKING DISASTER ON THE PANHANDLE ROAD.

A Passenger Train Becomes Derailed and Plunges Over an Embankment, Four Persons Being Killed and Many Injured. Two of Them Fatally.

Four lives crushed out and thirty persons mangled and maimed was the fearful result of a railroad wreck on the Panhandle at Hagerstown, a little town sixteen miles from Richmond, Ind. The fast express train which runs between Chicago and Cincinnati, while going at a high rate on the down grade before reaching Hagerstown, was derailed by a portion of the framework of the engine falling under the wheels. Every car was thrown off the track, but the fearful momentum carried the train on. The engineer applied the break and reversed the lever, but all was unavailing to check the onward rush. Right ahead was a deep cut canal, which was crossed by a little bridge. The engine clung to the roadbed, but the swinging cars, forging to one side, missed the crossing and plunged over the embankment, into the fifteen-foot cut. The heavy coaches and the sleeper were piled up in a heap, the struggling passengers, crushed and bruised, being caught in the wreck. Almost before a hand had been lent to help them, the smoking car burst into flames, and it seemed as if the horrors of fire were to be added to the already dreadful calamity.

Soon the passengers who were not disabled struggled forth and these with the trainmen set to work to take out the dead and those of the wounded who were unable to help themselves. By strenuous efforts all were removed from the shattered coaches before the flames had gained sufficient headway to stop the rescuers. Three of those in the sleeper were taken out dead, and of the wounded one survived but for a few hours. Two others of the wounded received fatal hurts, while of the others at least ten are badly injured. The cars were at one time all off the track, but strangely all did not go over the embankment.

The smoker first turned on its side, and the day coach and parlor car Eugenia, the smoking compartment of which contained all the killed, breaking away from the smoking car, but holding together, rolled over twice in their descent of the embankment. Meanwhile the derailed baggage car had hung to the engine and away beyond the other cars struck a guard at the road crossing, again mounted the track and escaped almost uninjured, but the engine, though holding the rail, was about as badly wrecked as the parlor car and day coach. In leaving the track the cars tore down the telegraph poles and it was almost impossible to get any accurate news of the accident until the trains arrived at Richmond with the dead and wounded. The wrecking crew was gotten out as soon as possible, carrying surgeons and assistance of every kind, and a second train was sent up at 6 o'clock with a large number of people.



THE CRASH AT THE CULVERT.

Following is a list of the killed: Arthur M. Reeves, capitalist, Richmond; S. G. Needham, claim agent, Richmond division, Richmond; Charles B. Care, conductor, Logansport, Ind.; Otis F. Deal, engineer, maintenance of way, Richmond division.

The following were injured, the first two fatally: Mrs. George McGrew, Richmond; Mrs J. C. Busin, Sacramento, Cal.; H. Hilb, West Front street, Cincinnati; G. Webster, porter Pullman car, Newport, Ky.; infant grandchild of Mrs. McGrew Staub, of Chicago; John M. Edwards, Richmond; Adam Steinberger and brother Wiley, Westville, Ohio; Frank W. Eddy, Westfield, Mass. Miss Roth and her sister, Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. C. E. Dudley, Dayton; Mr. and Mrs. Benson and their two small children, Logansport, Ind.; Mrs. Anna Englebecht, Logansport, and her three children; Henry C. Fox, Richmond; W. H. Kelley, Richmond; T. W. Gilpin, 251 West Fourth street, Philadelphia; John Crocker, Chicago; Charles Page, Richmond; G. H. Edmonds, Troy, Ohio; Mrs. Susan Stambaugh, Trenton, Mo.; Sophia Evans, New Castle, Ind.; Dora Clark, New Castle, Ind.; Clifton Irwin, Martin's Ferry, Ohio; J. P. Stanzea, Eaton, Ohio; J. W. Kramer, brakeman, Logansport, Ind.; Harriet S. Lombard, Amherst, Wis.; James T. Bootes, Richmond; Bob Hodgin, road foreman of engines.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

WHEN, in considering the sundry civil bill on the 24th, the Senate reached the World's Fair paragraphs, Senator Farwell moved to so amend the bill as it came from the Senate Committee on Appropriations as to increase the whole amount appropriated for salaries and expenses from $40,000 to $120,000. The motion was lost, however, and the appropriation remains at $40,000. The Senate confirmed ex-Governor Foster as Secretary of the Treasury. The direct tax bill was passed by the House, after considerable discussion. The bill has already passed the Senate, and now needs the President's signature to become law. The shipping subsidy bill got another backset, and it is now exceedingly doubtful if its advocates will be able to get it before the House again this session.

THE immigration bill was taken up on the 25th. The bill as passed directs the Secretary of the Treasury to provide rules for inspection along the Canadian frontier so as not to impede travel between the two countries, and provides that nothing in the act shall be deemed to exclude persons convicted of political offenses, notwithstanding such offenses shall be denominated as felonious, infamous crimes, a turpitude of the laws of the land from which the immigrants come or by the court convicting them. The clauses relating to the admission of other classes of convicts and of paupers and incurables are even more stringent than in the existing law. Senator Gorman announced the death of his colleague in the Senate as soon as the journal was read and offered resolutions expressing the great sorrow with which the Senate had heard of the death of Mr. Wilson. The Senate, out of respect, adjourned until the following day.

IN the Senate, on the 25th, the House amendment to the direct tax bill was presented and was laid on the table for the present. Among the papers presented and referred were numerous protests from the northwest portion of Nebraska against the neglect of the Government in the matter of disarming the hostile Sioux and asking protection from Indian depredations. The sundry civil bill was then taken up and its consideration resumed. All the amendments were agreed to, and the bill was then passed. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was taken up. In the House there were less than twenty-five members in attendance. The Senate bill authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge at Little Rock, Ark., was passed; also the Senate bill for the relief of the assignees of the late John Roach. The House then proceeded in committee of the whole (Mr. Burrows, of Michigan, in the chair) to general debate on the shipping bill.

THE Vice-President, on the 27th, laid before the Senate a message from the President returning without his approval the bill to establish the record and pension office of the War Department. The President states his objection to the bill at some length, to the effect, generally, that it is not competent for Congress to nominate a particular person to fill an office created by law. The message was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. In the House the Senate bill was passed amendatory of the law providing for the selection of school lands. A bill was passed authorizing the Fort Gibson, Tahlequah and Northeastern Railroad Company to construct a road through the Indian Territory. The House, then in committee of the whole, resumed the consideration of the shipping bill. The House substitute for the Senate bill was read by paragraphs for amendment.

THE Senate on the 28th agreed to the conference reports on the bills to establish a United States land court, and to define and regulate the jurisdiction of courts of the United States. The House substitute for the Senate tonnage bill was laid before the Senate, and Mr. Frye moved for the appointment of a conference committee. This motion was resisted on both sides of the chamber. In the House Mr. Caswell, of Wisconsin, supported the conference report on the bill to define and regulate the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and after a short debate it was adopted. The conference on the bill establishing a private land claim court was also agreed to. Conference held between Republicans and Democrats resulted in a tacit agreement that none of the contested election cases should be called up, and that the Democrats should not place any obstruction in the way of the appropriation bills. In pursuance of this agreement the sundry civil and legislative appropriation bills were sent to confrencee without objection.

Took Her or Bric-a-Brac.

At a reception recently given by a well-known citizen a young society blood was earnestly engaged in a conversation, and, with his hands behind him, was playing with what he supposed was a piece of bric-a-brac or the arm of a chair. But instead of that it suddenly moved, and he turned to find that he had been rubbing the gloved arm of a lady, and moved up as far as the elbow. He is a nervous fellow, and in the explanation that followed he said:

"Pardon me, madam, but I thought it was a piece of bric-a-brac."

The explanation amused her so greatly that she fell into a convulsion of laughter, and the young man, continuing, and presumably referring to her funny-bone, said:

"Your sense of the humorous has relieved me of my extreme embarrassment."

Perhaps it has, but it hasn't relieved him of the torture of his friends, who are now asking him the price of gloves, and how he is succeeding with his collection of bric-a-brac.—Buffalo Courier.

Do Not Worry.

About the hardest achievement is to live without fret and worry in the midst of uncertainty. A business man doesn't know how the vital venture is going to turn out. A housewife is placed in such circumstances that her position to-morrow is utterly unforseeable. What shall be done? Let to-morrow alone. Attend to the nearest duties. Above all, don't chafe. You will need all your vitality, perhaps, and all your courage, to meet those dreadful contingencies. But nothing wastes vitality, nothing depletes courage like apprehension. Provide, if you can. If you can't, go on calmly in the round of present occupation. Tackle to-morrow when it becomes to-day. Don't cross the bridge before you come to it.

The Laziest Man on Record.

Even the preachers are not averse to a joke that lies in the line of the professional funny man. One of them told the following in an East-Side church lately when he was invited to speak: A traveler discovered a man lying on the ground one warm day within a foot or two of the shade of a tree. "Why don't you lie in the shade?" he inquired. "I did," replied the man, "but it has moved away from me and I can't afford to follow it." "Well, if you are not the best specimen of a lazy man I have ever seen yet! Make me another remark on a par with that and I'll give you a quarter." The man said, "Put the quarter into my pocket." He got it.—Buffalo Express.

A Mystery.

How the human system ever recovers from the bad effects of the nauseous medicines often literally poured into it for the suppositive relief of dyspepsia, liver complaint, constipation, rheumatism and other ailments, is a mystery. The mischief done by bad medicines is scarcely less than that caused by disease. If they who are weak, bilious, dyspeptic, constipated or rheumatic would oftener be guided by the experience of invalids who have thoroughly tested Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, they would in every instance obtain the speediest aid derivable from rational medication. This medicine is a searching and at the same time a thoroughly safe remedy, derived from vegetable sources, and possessing, in consequence of its basis of pure spirits, properties as a medicinal stimulant not to be found in the fiery local bitters and stimulants often resorted to by the debilitated, dyspeptic and languid.

The Mule Laughed.

When Enos was a youngster his uncle one day drove a new span of mules into the yard. As the children were standing around admiring them, one of the mules suddenly gave vent to a most terrific bray. The little fellow had never heard such a frightful sound before, and, badly scared, ran screaming into the house. The next day the mules were driven out again, but Enos refused to go near, and when asked the reason he replied: "I's so f'aid Uncle David's mule will laugh at me again."—Voice.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. A Fact.

In an interview with a leading drug house the New York World, Nov. 9, 1890, gives the following comment on the proprietors of reliable patent medicines:

"He is a specialist, and should know more of the disease he actually treats than the ordinary physician; for while the latter may come across say fifty cases in a year of the particular disease which this medicine combats, its manufacturer investigates thousands. Don't you suppose his prescription, which you buy ready made up for 50 cents, is likely to do more good than that of the ordinary physician, who charges you anywhere from $2 to $10 for giving it, and leaves you to pay the cost of having it prepared?

"The patent medicine man, too, usually has the good sense to confine himself to ordinary, every-day diseases. He leaves to the physician cases in which there is immediate danger to life, such as violent fevers. He does this because, in the treatment of such cases, there are other elements of importance besides medicine, such as proper dieting, good nursing, a knowledge of the patient's strength and so on. Where there is no absolute danger to life, where the disease is one which the patient can diagnose for himself or which some physician has already determined, the patent medicine maker says fearlessly: 'I have a preparation which is better than any other known and which will cure you.' In nine cases out of ten his statement is true."

This is absolutely true as regards the great remedy for pain, St. Jacobs Oil. It can assert without fear of contradiction, that it is a prompt and permanent cure of pain. It can show proofs of cures of chronic cases of 20, 30 and 40 years' standing. In truth it rarely every fails if used according to directions, and a large proportion of cures is made by half the contents of a single bottle. It is therefore the best.—From an interview, New York World.

The dining-room is most attractive, employing for waiters some half-dozen sweet, rosy cheeked country girls. How I admired one beauty I saw there—such a rosebud mouth, and what eyes and hair! When I was ready for desert she came for my order. 'Pie or puddin'?' she queried. 'Well, I asked, 'what kind of pie have you?' 'Oh, we've three kinds—open face, cross-bar, and kiver-top—all made uv apples.' Shades of all departed grace! And with such a face and form!"

March April May

Are the best months in which to purify your blood. During the long, cold winter, the blood becomes thin and impure, the body becomes weak and tired, the appetite may be lost, and just now the system craves the aid of a reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla.

These are the months in every year when thousands of old friends resort to a regular course of Hood's Sarsaparilla. The fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla, once fairly tried, becomes the favorite spring medicine speaks volumes for its excellence and medicinal merit.

March April May

Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted to the needs of the body during these months. It thoroughly purifies and vitalizes the blood, creates a good appetite, cures biliousness and headache, gives healthy action to the kidneys and liver and imparts strength to the whole body.

In these months this year thousands of new patrons will take Hood's Sarsaparilla and realize its benefits in blood purified and strength restored. Will you be one of the number? Hood's Sarsaparilla costs but little, and the investment yields profitable returns. Just try it.

March April May

Now is the time when you should give Hood's Sarsaparilla a fair trial. That scrofulous taint which has been in your blood for years, may be thoroughly expelled by giving Hood's Sarsaparilla a fair trial. It is really a wonderful blood purifier, and building-up medicine.

"Last spring I was completely fagged out. My strength left me and I felt sick and miserable all the time, so that I could hardly attend to my business. I took one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it cured me. There is nothing like it." R. C. BEGOLE, Editor Enterprise, Belleville, Mich.

SCOTT'S EMULSION
PALATABLE AS MILK

A State of Siege

How many people there are who regard the coming of winter as a constant state of siege. It seems as if the elements sat down outside the walls of health and now and again, led by the north wind and his attendant blasts, broke over the ramparts, spreading colds, pneumonia and death. Who knows when the next storm may come and what its effects upon your constitution may be? The fortifications of health must be made strong. SCOTT'S EMULSION of pure Norwegian Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda will aid you to hold out against Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility, and all Anæmic and Wasting Diseases, until the siege is raised. It prevents wasting in children. Palatable as Milk.

SPECIAL.—Scott's Emulsion is non-secret, and is prescribed by the Medical Profession all over the world, because its ingredients are scientifically combined in such a manner as to greatly increase their remedial value.

CAUTION.—Scott's Emulsion is put up in salmon-colored wrappers. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared only by Scott & Bowne, Manufacturing Chemists, New York. Sold by all Druggists.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,

THE LITTLE SHOES.

BY WILL P. CHAMBERLAIN.

A pair of little slippers,
  Or shoes, no matter the name,
I sometimes meet as I rummage,
  And a sigh betrays the pain
That lingers in my bosom;
  And I sit in the garret there
In thought of a vanished summer
  That gave a bud most rare.

You would forgive the tear-drop—
  Tho' men must be firm, they say—
If you knew of the blossom which faded
  And fell with the flowers of May;
Of how, on the quiet hillside,
  We broke the carpeted sod
And laid away our portion
  Of the angel returned to God.

Unsung sleep these dear secrets,
  And only now and then
Are we permitted to wander
  Away from the marts of men—
To dwell with our household treasures
  And their history, as we choose—
Dreaming such dreams as mine to-day
  Of this little pair of shoes.

CHAPTER XXVI.

ETHEL NEVERGAIL RECEIVES AN OFFER.

"Miss Nevergail," said Andrew, a pompous footman at Castle Cairn, as he knocked at the door of Lady Linwood's boudoir, and was bidden to enter, "a gentleman is in the drawing-room who wishes to see you."

"Did he give you a card?"

"No, miss, neither would he tell his name."

"Do you know him?" still queried Ethel.

"I cannot call his name, yet I have often seen him."

"It is of no consequence. I will be with him presently," returned the governess, as she resumed her book and continued the lesson she was giving her charge.

On no account would she neglect a duty for any person whatever.

When the task was finished, and not until then, she descended the grand broad stairway and entered the drawing-room of the castle.

There a surprise, indeed, awaited her, in the presence of Robert Glendenning.

Certainly she had never anticipated a visit from her former tormentor, and the sight of him now brought back so many unpleasant recollections that she hastily turned to retreat.

Too late!

The young man started forward and placed himself between the door and her slight figure, thus completely preventing her sudden flight.

"Pardon me, Miss Nevergail," he remarked, in a perfectly respectful manner, very different from his former unpleasantly familiar one. "I am very anxious to have a little conversation with you, before leaving this place forever, and therefore I beseech you to remain a few minutes. I promise not to detain you long."

"Very well," returned the young girl, gravely, taking the seat he offered her. "Why do you leave ——shire?"

"The death of my uncle has, of course, deprived my sister, and myself of his care and guardianship. As the title and estate now fall to his younger brother, Fitzroy, the present incumbent must remove and leave the hall, to be occupied or not by the new baronet, as he sees fit. Lady Constance will seek a residence with some relatives in London, and we shall make a home somewhere together, unless—unless——"

Here the young man paused, greatly embarrassed for a proper conclusion to the sentence he had commenced.

Breaking the silence again, for it was becoming oppressive, he resumed:

"Miss Ethel, I come this morning to lay before you a proposition that I hope will meet with your approval and sanction. I must first, however, express to you my deep regrets for the offensive manner in which I used to treat you. I know not why I was led to make myself so disagreeable. I was probably prompted by a spirit of mischief, but as soon as you left the Hall so suddenly I became aware of my great mistake.

"I never thought I should miss you as much as I did, but as soon as I could see you no more I became miserable. I lost my appetite and was almost beside myself with despair. I saw then, for the first time, that I really loved you.

"Nay," said he, seeing her start up indignantly, as though to leave him, "do not go. Allow me to finish what I came to say. I loved you, but I felt that it was without hope. In my egotistical haste I knew that I had won, perhaps what I merited, your contempt.

"To-day I felt that I could endure this misery no longer. I resolved to see you, to ask forgiveness for my course in the past, and to crave the privilege of retrieving my former mistake by being allowed to visit you as a friend until I can win your love and ask you to become my wife. If you will permit me thus to visit you, I will send my sister to a safe retreat with a lady friend, and will take board in this village, where I can see you often, and finally succeed in perhaps winning your regard."

"Mr. Glendenning," interposing Ethel, "what you propose is an utter impossibility. I can and do forgive the annoyance I confess your conduct occasioned me in other days, but the proposed visits I must positively decline. It could never result as you seem to imagine, for I assure you my affections could never be won."

"You are hasty in thus answering," interrupted the lover. "You surely cannot thus foretell what your feelings would be under such different auspices. Allow me."

"Indeed, indeed, Mr. Glendenning, I must interrupt you by distinctly saying that, as I am situated, I cannot receive visits; therefore, I must beg of you to receive this, my final answer. It would be the same after years of friendly intercourse. I do not love you, and I never can love you. I forgive you, and will ever think of you kindly; beyond that we can never go."

"Then there is no necessity for my remaining," he said, sadly, as he arose to leave.

"None whatever," was the firm reply.

"Miss Nevergail, believe me, as long as I live I shall regret having made your residence at the Hall so disagreeable. You certainly had enough to endure in being under obligations to amuse an irritable invalid. The rude manner in which you were dismissed excited my deepest sympathy."

"For which I am very grateful," kindly returned the young girl.

"If ever, as a friend, I can serve you in any manner, will you allow me to do so?"

"I will, if I know your address."

"That is not quite decided, but I will leave it with the Postmaster of this place. And now, thanking you for your kind forgiveness, although feeling deeply for my unrequited love, I will bid you farewell."

Robert Glendenning held out his hand as he spoke, and seeing that genuine tears were floating in his eyes Ethel laid hers in it without hesitation.

Stooping over the little white hand he pressed his lips upon it, then hurriedly left the room and she saw his face no more.

That night the whole family left the Hall, and the grand old mansion was closed waiting for the arrival, or orders, of Sir Fitzroy Glendenning.

The residence of this gentleman was unknown, but it was believed that he went to America, therefore every effort was to be made by the proper ones to discover his retreat, in order to make known to him the honors that awaited his acceptance.

Yet, while this resolve and duty was to be immediately put in force, many hearts rebelled against his return, and the present aspect of affairs certainly did not denote esteem or affection.

All united in feeling that, although acquitted by law of any knowledge of his unhappy brother's fate, circumstances still looked very dark where he was concerned.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE MYSTERIOUS WALLET.

Drawing an easy seat close to the center-table for Mrs. Clum to occupy, Dr. Elfenstein seated himself in his own office chair, and laying the wallet before him, said:

"This, Mrs. Clum, is a little bag, containing something very much valued by the poor man who has just left this world. I presume it will acquaint us with the residence and address of his near relatives. In order that they may be notified of his death, I deem it my duty to immediately examine its contents, and as I do so I wish you to be present as a witness to the transaction."

Signifying her willingness to be this witness, Mrs. Clum bade him proceed.

The keys to the wallet Dr. Elfenstein found tied close to the edge of the handle.

Inserting this in the lock, he at once opened it and drew forth its contents.

All that presented itself to his notice was about fifty pounds in money, and a package of closely written papers.

These papers were without address or signature, but seemed a short journal of daily events.

Little did Dr. Elfenstein dream, as he so coolly turned over these leaves, that they contained matters so vitally important to himself and his future life.

Seeing no other mode of ascertaining who the dead man really was, the Doctor commenced at the beginning to read what follows:

"June 18—

"My God, my God! Why hast Thou forsaken me? is now almost daily my cry.

"Alone! horribly, cruelly alone! how can it be that I still exist?

"Nearly eighteen years have I survived this dreadful solitude, and not until to-day have I gained from my unnatural keeper the slight boon of pen, ink and paper. This gained, I will divert myself by noting down some incidents of my life. But to what purpose do I write?

"Who can ever read what, out of an aching heart, I shall commit to these pages?

"I know not!

"Yet, after my death, some person may penetrate this living tomb, and then they shall here see recorded the terrible wrong, the fearful fate that has thus befallen an unhappy peer of the realm!

"Have I been missed from my home? Has any one mourned over my unexplained absence? Has my poor Constance wept over my loss? And has my dear brother Fitzroy forgiven my harshness now that he thinks me dead?

"Dead? Yes; all think me dead!

"I see clearly at this late date the whole of Reginald's fiendish plot.

"He used that dagger on my arm to draw blood, in order to leave the impression that I had been murdered, before he shut me into this living tomb.

"Yet I live. I, Sir Arthur Glendenning, Bart., am alive to-day, incarcerated in this concealed room, built in the ruined part of my own residence."

"Ha!" exclaimed Earle Elfenstein, starting to his feet as he read thus far. "What have I here? If this be true, we have an explanation of Sir Arthur's fate. Mrs. Clum, we must have others present at the reading of this important paper. Let us both seek instantly for the presence of our neighbors. Will you summon Lawyer Huntley, who lives next door, while I go for Rev. Mr. Lee? Not one moment will we waste, for who knows but yonder corpse may be all that is left of poor Sir Arthur Glendenning."

Replacing the papers and keeping the precious wallet in his hand, Earle at once left the house for the manse, while Mrs. Clum ran out to summon Mr. Huntley.

In less than half an hour they both returned to the physician's office, accompanied by the above-named gentlemen.

Then, while eager attention was to be seen on every face, the Doctor again opened the wallet and read as far as we have written above.

"Merciful heaven, can this be true!" exclaimed Mr. Huntley. "Doctor, please read that last clause once more. I am so dazed with surprise that I can scarcely understand it."

"Yet I live. I, Sir Arthur Glendenning, Bart. am alive to-day, incarcerated in this concealed room, built in the ruined part of my own residence," again read Dr. Elfenstein.

"The fact that this room existed was known only to my father, Sir Geoffrey, and he, shortly before his death, confided the secret to my brother Reginald and myself. We three were alone together when he taught us how to open the panels by the aid of a sharp pointed knife, and after leading us inside this strange apartment, he charged us to keep the existence of the place a profound secret, as the time might come when such a hidden retreat might become of immense importance.

"Dear father! how little did he dream that Reginald, for the sake of usurping my lawful title and estates, would drag me hither, in the darkness of night, and, by chaining me like a beast to the floor, by the help of his valet, Antoine Duval, keep me a prisoner for months, years, life!

"Oh, that horrible Antoine! how I always disliked his soft, fawning ways, his smooth tongue and cringing airs.

"Villain that he is! Villains, indeed, both master and man.

"But I will not thus anticipate. I will go back to our father's leading his two young sons to this place, and pointing out its many conveniences for spending a time in hiding.

"'See,' he said, 'here is a bathroom, with all its appointments, opening from this small and neatly furnished bedchamber. Soft mattresses, plenty of bedding, heat from an unseen register, through pipes leading to the kitchen ranges. Oh, everything is complete!'

"It was the only time I ever saw this room, until the night I was thrust within it by my inhuman brother, Reginald, two days and one night after I was forcibly taken from my bed.

"Ah, that night! when they overpowered me in my own room, shall I ever forget it?

"Shall that terrible scene ever be obliterated from my weary brain?

"I had retired rather earlier than usual, and had fallen immediately asleep. About midnight, I should judge, I was awakened by feeling a hand pressing something to my nostrils.

"I instantly had my complete senses, so dashed the hand with the chloroformed sponge from my face, then sprang with a bound upon the floor.

"Two men stood above me, and firm hands seized and pressed me back, while a gag was forced into my mouth.

"A dim light was burning, and I saw that, although masked, one figure was like Fitzroy's, and his dressing-gown was wrapped around his form.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

On how I struggled to free myself! Once I did get a hand loose, and tore the mask from one face, to find it was not Fitzroy but Reginald who was perpetrating this outrage upon me, his elder brother.

"Turning then to the other, I recognized the form and voice of Antoine Duval.

"In the course of the conflict, Reginald drew out a dagger and plunged it into my arm, then threw the dagger, red with blood, on the carpet, saying grimly:

"'Fitzroy's dagger. Lie there and testify that he did this deed!'

"Oh, my brother, my innocent brother! have they dared accuse thee of my death?

"This question harrows me night and day.

"Alas! I tremble for Fitzroy, when such a fiend as Reginald has proved himself to be is let loose upon his track.

"But to go on: Binding my hands—for all my strength could avail little against two hardy men—they passed a rope around my body, after first putting on my clothing, and, dragging me from the window, swung me from the balcony to the ground below.

"Carrying then my helpless form to the lake, they there bound up my wounds, staunching the flow of blood, which until then they had allowed to drip as it would, then turned and noiselessly bore me to a lonely cave, situated in the heart of Demon's Wood—a place never frequented, and, I presume, the existence of which was unknown.

"This place had been prepared for my reception, and after fastening me firmly to a staple with a chain they had in readiness, they left me, gagged and helpless, there alone, for two days and one night.

"Twice they both came with food, and, while one stood with a pistol over my head, to prevent a word, the other fed me.

"On the second night they visited me about midnight, and, merely saying:

"'All is now ready for your reception, rise and go with us,' they placed me in a wagon as before, and took me back to the Hall.

"Leaving the wagon concealed outside the grounds, they between them carried me to the ruined part, and, entering, conveyed me into this, my prison, which they had secretly arranged for my use. I was not brought here at once, it seems, because on the very night of their daring outrage they had discovered that some revolving iron shelves they had fitted to the entrance could not be securely fastened, as the large screws to be inserted were too short. Not wishing to postpone the horrible business, they had hastily prepared the cave, and held me there until other screws could be procured.

"Now all was ready, and here, just eighteen years ago, I was thrust and kept a prisoner by means of a long chain fastened from my ankle to an iron bolt in the wall.

"Not one word was spoken until I was securely fastened, then the gag was taken from my mouth and the ropes from my limbs.

"At first my tongue and mouth we so stiff I could make no sound, but seeing that both were leaving me, closing the entrance securely inside by standing up the shelves and tightly screwing in place the long screws, I found voice, and calling to them to pause I begged an explanation of the cruelty to which I had been subjected, and asked why I was to be imprisoned there and how long I was to be detained.

"At first Reginal would not answer, but finally he did astonish me by these words:

"'You are to be kept concealed in this place as long as you live, so the sooner you die the better for all! I shall not, however, take you life! I never will be a murderer! Food will come to you every night, about half past nine or ten, on these shelves. You will empty the plate on dishes you have here, and setting it back the empty plate will at once return to me. By this returning plate I shall know you still live. When you fail to return it no more will come, as you will then be supposed to have died. I alone shall attend to sending this food.'

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

THIS AND THAT.

IT would be improper to speak of the degree of D. D. as pair o' D's (parodies) on religion.

"WHAT'S wrong, Hank? Is it that you can't Get out of debt that you deplore?"
"Oh, not at all! 'Tis only that I can't get into debt some more."

Ye are wondrous strong,
Yet lovely in your strength,

THE man who argues with a woman can sympathize with the gentleman who went to the bottom of the say.

Hope constancy in wind, or corn in chaff;
Believe a woman or an epitaph,
Or any other thing that's false, before
You trust in critics.

THE pencil of genius does more with a dozen words than the mere drudge could do with a volume. Byron's description of a river illustrates this truth—

"By the blue rushing of the arrowy Rhone."

HUMOR.

Takes the Edge Off.

Elder Goodman—In order, Mrs. Greyneck, to secure the greatest good from the hearing of the sermon, you should, as a preparation, enjoy to the utmost the sweet, holy calm of the Sabbath morning.

Mrs. Greyneck—I feel just as you do about that, Elder Goodman, but when a woman has to get up four times to wake the hired girl, and then wash three children that don't want to be washed, and then find her husband's clothes which he always puts in a different place, the sweet, holy calm of the Sabbath morning has had considerable of its edge taken off.

Too Many Lugs.

Wagley—Well, porter, I suppose, now that you have carried my six trunks up stairs, you expect a tip.

Porter—It is just as you please, sir.

Wagley—Well, I shall not give you any; you feel too important.

Porter—I don't know what you mean, sir.

Wagley—Well, I never saw a man of so many lugs.

A Happy Reply.

Miss Wryface (who is cross-eyed, stub-nosed and has large red freckles)—I met you two years ago, Mr. Readywit, but of course you have forgotten me.

Mr. Readywit—On the contrary, Miss Wryface, though I am forced to admit that your name had escaped me, I remembered your face most distinctly.

"What Would I Be Then, Mamma?"

A little boy who was playing around a grocery store a short time ago listened intently to a conversation in which several men were engaged concerning a lady whom they described as a "grass widow."

On reaching home the child went to his mother and asked:

"Mamma, what is a grass widow?"

The mother explained by saying: "If your papa should go away and not live with me again I should be a grass widow."

"What would I be then, mamma?" asked the youngster; "a grasshopper?" —Boston Globe.

The Way to Make Ice.

"That must be a curious process, the manufacture of ice," said a Chicago man to a resident of New York, who was talking about the manufacture of artificial ice.

"Do you understand the philosophy of it?"

"No. I never saw one of the machines, and never had the thing explained to me."

"Well, you see," observed the philosopher, "they have a kind of a tank."

"Yes."

"And they fill that tank about two-thirds full of water."

"Yes. What then?"

"Why, then they freeze it."

"Oh!" exclaimed the disgusted Chicagoan. "That's it, is it? I had an idea that they boiled it."—Texas Siftings.

He Had to Get Off the Earth.

"Give me a room," said the tired-looking citizen as he walked into the hotel corridor a few centuries after the present date.

"Front!" shouted the clerk, "take this gentleman out, put him in the balloon and give him nice apartments on Saturn."

"I'd like to stay on earth, if it's just the same to you."

"I'm very sorry, but everything on the earth is occupied.—Washington Post.

George Washington's High-Priced Shad.

Washington's steward was a man named Fraunces, who liked good living, and with whom Washington continually quarreled about the marketing. One time he bought a shad in February, and as Washington saw it coming into the dining-room he was charmed and asked what fish it was.

"It was a shad," replied the steward. "A very fine shad. It was the only one in the market, and I bought it for you."

"But what did you pay for it?" said Washington sternly.

"It is a very fine shad," continued the steward "and it is cooked to a turn."

"But I want to know the price. The price!"

"It cost $3," stammered out Fraunces."

"Take it away," said Washington, as he raised his hand; "take it away. It shall never be said that I set such an example of luxury and extravagance?"

And with that he drove the steward out of the room, and the shad was eaten in the servants' kitchen.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

CURES CHRONIC DISEASES.

Read the Evidence and judge for Youreslf.

HUNTINGTON, Ind., June 30, 1890.

DR. MAN-O-TEE:

Two months ago I began to use your medicine; at that time I had had headaches, poor appetite, was weak and unable to do any work, felt tired and nervous and was troubled with severe neuralgic pains in different parts of the body; am now entirely free from pain, can eat well, sleep well and work without tiring. I can gladly recommend you to any who may be sick.

Yours truly,
GEO. HELSER.

NEBO, Ind., July 4, 1890.

DR. MAN-O-TEE:

I have been troubled with Dispepsia for years. My symptoms were severe pains in the stomach after eating, bloating, poor appetite, constipation, palpitation of the heart, dull headache, dizz spells, tired feeling, no strength, restless dreamy sleep, and being extremely nervous. This was my condition when I put my case in your care four months ago. I am a well and hearty man to day, and this result has been brought about by the use of your treatment during that time, for which I am truly thankful.

Respectfully,
F. M. JONES.

EPILEPSY CAN BE CURED.

PINE, Ind., Aug. 13, 1890.

DR. MAN-O-TEE:

My son, Cyrus, has had Epilepsy for many years; would have as many as ten distinct fits in twelve hours, and they were growing worse on him day by day. I tried several doctors with no permanent benefit. Placed him under your treatment, and he is now well and hearty, and has had no attack for over one year. The fits are entirely cured. I consider that your treatment is positively reliable in these cases, and that you have saved my boy years of suffering from this most terrible of maladies.

Yours truly,
JAMES E. KINZIE.

WABASH, Ind., July 5, 1890.

DR. MAN-O-TEE:

If I could induce all ladies who are suffering from disease peculiar to their sex to visit you, I would be glad to do so, for the benefit I have obtained from your treatment is a great comfort to me, and I gladly add my testimony to that of many others who have been cured.

WARSAW, Ind., Nov. 21st, 1890.

DR. MAN-O-TEE:

Your treatment cured me of Rheumatism of over 20 years' standing. During the last five years was scarcely able to walk. Am now a well and hearty man.

Yours truly,
E. B. LEEDY.

WARSAW, Ind., Oct. 1st, 1890.

DR. MAN-O-TEE:

Your treatment has cured me of the worst case of Catarrh I ever saw or heard of. Many say that catarrh can not be cured, but you have demonstrated that such is not the case, for you have cured me and many others here.

MRS. LOU BECKWITH.

VANDALIA, Mich., Aug. 6, 1890.

DR. MAN-O-TEE:

I have been afflicted with Bleeding Piles for ten years; was so bad with them could not work half of the time; suffered severe pain day day and night, and was rapidly losing flesh and strength. Used your treatment four months, and am perfectly cured. Can work hard, have no pain and am in as good health as I ever was in my life. I recommend you to any who may be suffering.

Respectfully,
JNO. N BONINE

ROANOKE, Ind., June 30, 1890.

To Whom it may Concern:

I have been treated during the last four months by Dr. Man-O-Tee, the Indian Doctor, for Catarrh, Headache and Nervous Debility. When I went to him, was scarcely able to be up and around. He helped me from the start, and I am now in better health than I have been for years. I consider Dr. Man-O-Tee a skillful physician and recommend him to all who may require medical treatment.

Respectfully,
MRS. ANNA WARNER.

HAS SUFFERED FOR YEARS.

GOSHEN, Ind., June 19, 1890.

DR. MAN-O-TEE:

During the past three months I have used your medicine for headache, cough, bronchitis and general debility, and can not speak too highly of you. No person ever suffered more from neuralgia and headache than I have, and I cannot thank you enough for the relief you have given me.

Yours respectfully,
MRS. ELIZABETH MCDOWELL.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Many of you who are sick can be cured if given proper remedies. The above facts prove this. Twelve years extensive Hospital and private practice — 3 years INDIAN MEDICINE MAN. I use Roots, Barks and Herbs — Nature's remedies. Next visit to

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

C. M. Phillips went to Auburn Monday.

Charley Speer went to Michigan last Tuesday.

Mr. I. E. Braun is recovering from recent illness.

Mr Repard, of Boston, was in our town last week, Thursday.

Rev. S. Klotz received 10 persons into the church in Smithfield last Sunday night.

John Maxson's youngest son was obliged to keep his bed last week with the grip.

Mrs. Henning and daughter, who have been visiting a brother and other relatives in Kansas, have returned.

Ex Sheriff J. C. St Clair has been having trouble with rheumatism that has kept him at home for some time.

George Morrell and family will remove to Elkhart early in this month. He has a position in the same house as when there before.

Mr. Patterson and his daughters, Misses Jennie and Emma, returned the middle of last week from their visit in the West with relatives.

Your correspondent is indebted to Congressman C. A. O. McClellan for a number of packages of garden seeds received several weeks ago. Thanks for the same.

The query now is, will Rev. Wm Dillon, after giving a challenge to Elder Stewart to debate the subject of Baptism, which was accepted by Mr. Stewart, now come to time and discuss it?

The memorial services in honor of Gen. Sherman, held in the M. E. church last Sunday morning, were interesting. Rev. Mr Marshall of Albion, preached the sermon and Gen. Blair gave a historical sketch of the life of the departed hero.

The Farmers' institute held in this place Feb. 25th and 26th was a success in every respect except the weather. The opera house was crowded at nearly every meeting. The exercises of the Fremont band led by Mr. Heath, were exceptionally fine. The address of Mrs Holbrook was good. Every thing was excellent.

BUTLER.

Alex Watson has the grip.

Jacob Showalter made a business trip to Garrett Monday.

Uncle John Moore has been confined to the house the past week with rheumatism.

George and Fred Blaker have traded their town property to Dr. Madden for a farm northeast of town.

Frank Gregor is preparing to build a fine residence on his farm northeast of town. Frank is a hustler.

Old Mr. Revette, an aged veteran of this place is at present very low and it is thought cannot live but a few days.

Sam Hall who is working at Garrett visited his parents over last Sabbath Rumor says Sam crossed the road Sunday night. Is it so Sam?

And it came to pass, in the second month, on the twenty seventh day of the month, that the sun sank low in the horizon and the house of Fred Wrensel was wrapped in solitude and that peace and happiness reigned supreme. Fred wended his way to the city to investigate the state of affairs down town. The heart of Frederick was light and "all went merry as a marriage bell" with Fred and his good wife. But as "the course of true love never did run smooth" Mrs. H., determined to have some fun the night in question. So, with the help of the girl in her employ she took Fred's "best suit of clothes" and prepared a dummy and placed the supposed man outside the door in an upright position, placing in his hands a broom held in a striking attitude, with cords attached to it to be used at the proper time. Home came the loving husband, entering by another door, little thinking of the terrible ordeal in store for him. After a chat with the family they retired, Mr. Wrensel dropping into a peaceful sleep, from which he was suddenly aroused by his wife saying "Fred! Fred, get up! there's some one at the door." He hustled out and to the door; but, as he opened it, the cord, held by his wife, was gently pulled, and Fred received a blow on the head with the broom held by Mr. Dummy. This so enraged poor Fred that "forbearance ceased to be a virtue," and Fred's brawny fist was raised and his antagonist received a blow that leveled him to the floor. Seeing him lying apparently dead, he bent over the lifeless object, only to behold, to his horror and mortification that it was only his best suit of clothes he'd been fighting instead of a burglar. Fred thinks he came off victor in the fight anyhow, and saved his Sunday suit. He says he will have revenge in the near future. And thus endeth the first chapter of the Chronicles.

GARRETT.

Skating is about over.

R. T. Bretz is in town again.

J. L. Gengler went to Fort Wayne Monday.

Mr. Kingsbury, the jeweler, was in Chicago over Sunday.

Most every person you meet in Garrett is sick, either the grip or a bad cold.

Geo P. Chew has gone to Shelby, O, to spend a few days with his parents.

Fred Davis is in Garrett this week looking after the interests of the bank.

The social held at Mrs. H. M. Bicknell's was largely attended by old and young.

A delegation of Masons from Garrett attended lodge at Hicksville Ohio, last Friday evening.

Mr. Myers and wife of Webb City, Mo, were guests of H. M. Bicknell and wife over Sunday.

Mr. Kimball, B. & O, division operator, of Newark, Ohio, was in town a couple of days last week.

E. C. Ryher, had a very severe attack of bilious colic on Monday, but at this writing he is some better.

The new steam laundry on Cowan St., is now in running order and they are turning out some very fine work.

All persons troubled with la grippe should call on Camp, the druggist for a sample bottle of the new remedy.

Miss Strauss, Miss Adair, Mrs. Cox and Mr. Tuttle, of Hicksville, attended the G. A. R. dance last Tuesday evening.

Owing to the change in the weather Monday Mr. Hatter had his hair cut and his whiskers trimmed. Mr. Buchanan had the job.

Miss May Clark is staying in town a few days. She has been taking care of her sister-in law, Mrs. Elmer Clark, who has been quite sick.

The 8th annual ball given by the G. A. R last Tuesday evening, was largely attended considering the weather. Prof. Moore furnished the music.

Mrs. J. L. Evans, of Columbus, Ohio, who has been here the past few weeks visiting her parents, Mr and Mrs. C. Ryher, has returned home.

Charles Fisher, who had his limb reamputated a week ago last Friday, is out on the streets again. He says it is nearly healed up, which goes to show that Dr. Thompson understands his profession.

FAIRVIEW.

Wm. Johnson is on the sick list.

Joe Koch is around again after a brief illness.

Miss Della Koch is now having a siege of the grip.

Payer meeting every Tuesday evening, at Fairview church.

Quite a number of our young people attended the lecture at St. Joe, Thursday evening.

Some of our young people have been attending the meetings at St. Joe, which are being conducted by Rev. Stanton, at the M. P. church.

Romeo is ecstatic over the event that a young lady has been able to unveil the mysterious possibilities of his future by means of the Oraculum. He is inclined to think Juli-Ette is a chicken in that line.

UNION CHAPEL.

Protracted meeting is in progress at Norris Chapel.

I. N. Wingard has made big preparations for making maple sugar as soon as spring opens.

The snow, which Samuel Morr has been longing for to try his new sleigh upon has come at last

Frank Wingard has quit farming and is going into the butter and egg business. We hope Frank will succeed.

The literary at Pyles' school house last Friday evening is reputed to have been a success, and had it not been for the paper which was read, everything would have been enjoyed. It would have been a great deal better had the paper been left out, as it always causes hard feelings.

Again does the correspondent from Moore's Station to the Auburn Dispatch refer to the Mudsock literary. Now we do not like to bring this subject before the people again, but in the cause of justice, we are obliged to do so. Last week the correspondent aforesaid stated that there was about as much difference between the Union Chapel boys and the Moore's Station boys, as there is between the literal meaning of "tweedledee" and "tweedledum". Now if we can make that kind of a comparison to the disturbance of the boys, we certainly can draw conclusions from the same basis. While the Union Chapel boys had no "booze" to carry on their disturbance with, the Moore's Station boys had quite a cargo aboard besides a number of bottles, in case a replenishment was needed. No we do not censure the correspondent for upholding bad conduct, but we do censure him for erring.

JACKSON CENTER.

Wheat looks favorable owing to the open winter.

About forty young people assembled at Mr John Smith's last Friday evening and enjoyed themselves quite well.

We understand that John Morr is intending to farm his father's place, so will not build a house as was stated last week.

La grippe has been a guest of Sam Squires and family for some time. From experience we suppose it has not been a welcome guest.

Two of the Jackson boys tried the county examination last Saturday. We have not heard how they succeeded but wish them success.

John Moudy has been absent from school for several days on account of his being sick. He has been attending the Auburn high school and rooming in town.

The people of Grove Bethel were glad to meet Rev. J. J. Fred last Sunday, as he had been engaged for some time in a protracted meeting at Spencerville, where fifty persons joined the church.

SPENCERVILLE.

Rev. J. J. Fred is holding protracted meeting at Norris Chapel.

Mrs. Houghland, son and daughter, of Toledo, are visiting the family of C. A. Rhoades.

The protracted meeting at the Lutheran church will continue during the present week.

It is rumored that Mrs. McCartney, of this place, was married at Churubusco a few days ago.

Mr and Mrs. B. Koontz and daughter Hattie, of Columbia City are visiting friends in this vicinity.

The Ladies Aid Society will meet at the residence of Mrs. Miller next Thursday afternoon.

The Y. P. S. C. E. will have a basket social Saturday evening, March 7th, at Cline's hotel. Each basket will contain supper for two. All are invited to come and spend a pleasant evening.

Mrs. Chas Willits started Wednesday morning for Angola to attend the district missionary convention of the Disciple church From Angola she will go to Andrews, Ind., to visit her children and will remain there two weeks.

The entertainment given by the Y. P. S. C. E. at the hall Sunday evening was listened to by a large and attentive audience. The pieces were well rendered, the singing good, Miss Husselman presiding at the organ. Their next public meeting will be given Sunday evening, March 2d.

Obituary.

Amanda Sain Cochran was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, Jan. 18, 1826, died Feb. 26, 1891, aged 65 yrs, 1 mo. and 8 days. The funeral was at the home Sunday at 10 a. m., the sermon being by her pastor Rev. T. C. Smith, of the Baptist church, and she was laid to rest in Woodlawn cemetery, south of town. She was married to Thomas Cochran, March 17, 1844, and lived in Perry county, Ohio, until the fall of 1858, when they moved to the farm two miles west of Auburn, where they have since resided. She became a member of the U. B. church when but sixteen years of age, to which she belonged for more than thirty years. About eighteen years ago, she united with the Baptist church, at Auburn, since which time, she has been an active and consistent member, until called "To pass within the silent tent whose curtain never outward swings." She was the mother of thirteen children; eight sons and five daughters, eleven of whom have grown to manhood and womanhood, a son and daughter having died in childhood. She has fourteen grandchildren and one great-grand child. The order of her motherhood is as follows: "Hannah C., Edward T (died in childhood), Mary A., Emily M., William H., Joseph P., David S., Dorothy A., Eli T., Ida A., (died in childhood), Ralph B., and Chas K. All her living children, except two, have families. She was one of a family of seven sisters and four brothers, her parents being from the state of Maryland. She did not live quite the allotted three score and ten years, but she lived to do and accomplish much. She plied "The steady oar" to a purpose, and with her assistance and council, a sufficient fortune was gathered together to insure her plenty in her declining years. Her constant and watchful care in rearing so large a family and the christian example set before them have made them honored members of the communities in which they live. And well may they call her blessed. Would that all the mothers of the children of earth would emulate her example. We think the following words of the poet can be appropriately applied to her:

> "Blessings on the hands of woman,
> Angels guard and give them grace,
> In the palace, cottage, hovel,
> No matter where the place.
>
> O'er her may no storm clouds lower,
> Rainbows be ever gently curled,
> For the hand that rocks the cradle,
> Is the hand that rocks the world."

The Greatest Strike.

Among the great strikes that of Dr. Miles in discovering his New Heart Cure has proven itself to be one of the most important. The demand for it has become astonishing. Already the treatment of heart disease is being revolutionized, and many unexpected cures effected. It soon relieves short breath, fluttering, pains in side, arm, shoulder, weak and hungry spells, oppression, swelling of ankles, smothering and dropsy. Dr Miles' book on Heart and Nervous Diseases free. The unequaled New Heart Cure is sold and guaranteed by F. E. Davenport, also his Restorative Nervine for headache, fits, sprees, hot flashes, nervous chills, opium habit, etc 1

A stone at Woodsville, N. H., is said to mark the boundary line of two states, three counties and four towns.

Very Peculiar.

Many cases of so called consumption have been cured by Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. This medicine is peculiarly adapted to this class of diseases and we know of several lives that have been saved by its use. These cases are hard to overcome, but by the persistent use of this medicine you will notice a change for the better. Don't delay, but begin at once, and continue to use it as directed and we are positive it will help you. Sold by F. E. Davenport. 13

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein James O. Blake is plaintiff and William Sprankle, Mary Sprankle, his wife, John J. Baxter, Anna Sprankle, Sarah Myers, August C Treutman, Henry J. Ash, Robert H. Lane, Charles W. Bell and James F. Cummings are defendants requiring me to make the sum of seventeen hundred nineteen dollars, sixty-five cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at Public Sale, to the highest bidder, on

Saturday, March 28, 1891

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the Court House in Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to-wit:

The west half (½) of the northeast quarter (¼) of section two (2) in township thirtyfive (35) north, of range thirteen (13) east, and also twenty-one and fifteen one hundredths acres off the east end of the north half (½) of the northwest quarter (¼) of said section, described as follows, to-wit:

Making the northwest corner fifty-eight rods west of the northeast corner of said lot, thence east to said northeast corner of said lot, thence south to the southeast corner of said lot, thence west forty-five rods, thence north twenty-eight rods in a straight line to the place of beginning. Situated in DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws

PHIL. PLUM,
Sheriff of DeKalb county, Indiana.

Girls who use SAPOLIO are QUICKLY MARRIED

SAPOLIO is one of the best known city luxuries and each time a cake is used an hour is saved. On floors, tables and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans and metals it has no equal. If your store-keeper does not keep it you should insist upon his doing so, as it always gives satisfaction and its immense sale all over the United States makes it an almost necessary article to any well supplied store. Everything shines after its use, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1845.

[Since 'Squire Ralston gave the facts upon which our history of Auburn is 1845 is founded, he has after a brief illness departed this life. He was the most prominent pioneer of the town at the time of his death and had taken much interest in these items. His last words to the writer were "I can't help you any more on pioneer sketches." And what follows will have increased interest to his many warm friends.]

In 1844 Mr. Ralston built a two-story frame house, 44X22 feet in dimension on the site of the Swineford House and completed an addition later, and the same year the site of the Kiblinger block was cleared of trees. The purchasers of lots had for their first work to cut off the timber and burn it and residents obtained their fuel by felling trees as near their houses as possible.

Judge Mott in the fall of 43 had only to climb over the fence that enclosed his cabin to chop his fire wood in the forest and John Johnston had stated that on his arrival in Auburn, he lived in L. Ingman's house and for the two winters of 1844 and 1845 cut his fuel from trees that stood in the close vicinity.

Improvements if there could be said to have been any, were made very slowly and only a few families became residents of Auburn. There were more or less of bilious complaints and physicians were in demand. The pioneer doctor was reputed to have been named Ross and only the name survives his advent. Dr. Haynes united theology with medicine and the union is not so incongruous as might appear, the latter failing, it was consoling to the patient to receive the ministration of religion and it was not infrequent in those days when christian offices were with difficulty obtained. Doctors Cosper, Oliver, Ros, Hendricks, Ford and Dancer were successive physicians in Auburn and of them all, Dr. J. Ford is the only one now known to the people of our town. Dr. Dancer died in 1853 and his widow lived till Feb. 1876. Doctors Ford and Hendricks located in Auburn in 1844. Joel E Hendricks won high rank as a physician, taught school in Auburn in 1848 using by permission of board of county commissioners, the northeast room of the second story of the old court house for his school room, was elected county treasurer and served from 1853 to 1855 when he removed to a farm near Newville and was noted as "a most scientific and enthusiastic farmer," then associated with James Colgrove conducted the Newville Academy and gave theory and practice of mathematics to an extent and thoroughness never since equaled in the limits of the county.

Dr. Ford had his home temporarily with William Albright who had located in Auburn, the same year, and who was the first saddler and harness maker in the town. Dr. Ford through all subsequent years had been a promient resident and there were few public occasions to which he was not called to take a leading part. A skilful physician, long familiarized with methods of treatment of diseases common to this part of the country, his services till he withdrew from practice were sought with confidence and credulity was confirmed by results. On the organization of the First National Bank of Auburn in 1875, he was chosen its president and long held an interest in its stock. Two years ago, his wife died. She was a lady highly esteemed and held foremost rank in the best society of the town. A few few weeks ago, the doctor went to Ontario, California accompanied by his daughter Mary, wife of Dr. Jared Spooner, to visit with another daughter Lottie, wife of David Cochran residing there.

Incipient steps towards the organization of the now strong church societies of Methodist and Presbyterian denominations were taken about this time. As stated in recent history of the former church, Jesse Sparks had been pastor in 1844 on the Auburn circuit and its second meeting was held in the village on May 14, 1845.

Rev. James T. Bliss was the first Presbyterian minister and all who knew him spoke in his praise. S. Widney wrote: "He is well known as a very amiable and pious man." S. Ralston remembers him as a worker. From a letter written by Rev. Bliss from Macomb, Ill, Jan. 1888 to Mrs. Emily Dills. the following extracts are taken as of a double interest to readers. To one class who knew him, it will recall the man and his labors in Auburn and to the stranger, it will add somewhat to fragmentary history of the times of which we write.

He wrote: "It affords us great pleasure to hear from such dear old friends as we still have in Auburn and vicinity. We have ever felt a deep and abiding interest in your church which the Rev. Mr. Wolff and I organized soon after I moved to Auburn in October 1844.

We also organized the Bear Creek church about the same time. My impression is that it was organized Dec. 12, 1844 yet cannot say positively as to the month. If the church at Auburn was organized March 12, it must have been in 1845.

I was ordained by the Fort Wayne presbytery at Fort Wayne in December 1844, and I believe that the Presbyterian church was organized the same month. I supplied the church twelve years." He expressed surprise that at date of writing the church had the eleventh minister preaching for them. Commenting upon the pleasant features connected with the 80th anniversary of 'Squire Ralston and his then 46th year in Auburn he wrote: "I passed my 77th birthday last July, my general health has been good so that I preached constantly 28 years after leaving Indiana in five different fields, the last of which was central Iowa where in making a round trip of fifty miles to supply two churches every other week, I got so badly chilled that it injured my spine, deranging my whole nervous system."

Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C. March 6, 1891.

The United States Treasury is bankrupt, as far as the reckless and extravagant appropriations voted by the republican congress can make it so, and it would be actually so today if all of the appropriations had to be paid at once. In the dying hours of the Fifty-first congress the republicans threw prudence, conscience, fear of a hereafter and every other restraining influence overboard, and boldly voted for every possible thing that promised to assisting the looting of the treasury, which their leaders had agreed upon for the purpose of confronting the democratic congress with a deficiency. Old mouldy claims that had been refused a hundred times were tacked on the appropriation bills, and railroaded through, extra salaries were voted to employes who are already paid beyond their deserts, and money was scattered around in every direction as though the treasury was overflowing with a surplus, as it was two years ago when turned over to the republicans.

Where the money is to come from to pay all of these wild appropriations is more than any one can see at this time; it is't in the treasury nor can it possibly get there under the present methods of taxation. Two years of democratic economy in the House and a purging of the pension rolls of the frauds thereon may pull the country through without making it necessary to put new taxes upon the already tariff ridden people.

The republican ex-representatives are loath to leave Washington until Mr. Harrison has distributed the plums now at his disposal, which includes nine new U. S. circuit court judges as provided by the new law, which purports to be for the relief of the supreme court, but Mr. Harrison proposes to try their patience, as he is going to Maryland to-morrow for a few days of wild duck shooting, and says he will do nothing in the matter until his return.

Ex-Speaker Reed has a pretty thick skin, but he couldn't hide the chagrin he felt when every democrat in the House voted against the usual resolution of thanks that Mr. McKinley, after vainly trying to persuade a democrat to do it, had offered. Served him right is the verdict among democrats.

Senator Vilas is here looking just as natural as when he so successfully presided over the interior department under Mr. Cleveland. He says that Wisconsin has cut loose from the republican party for good and all, and that her vote may be confidently counted upon for the democratic candidate next year.

It is pleasing to know that the Fifty-first congress did one good thing. It passed the international copyright bill, although it was apparently done under a misunderstanding, and Mr. Harrison signed it with a quill pen, from the wing of an American eagle, which had been provided for the occasion by one of the editors of the Century magazine.

Senator Edmunds is entitled to thanks for having balked Senator Plumb's scheme for transferring the employes of the census bureau to the regular classified departmental service, without the formality of a civil service examination. Mr. Plumb attempted to hitch it on to an appropriation bill, but Mr. Edmunds raised a point of order against it, which was sustained by the chair.

And while giving thanks I must not forget the democrats in the House, who with the aid of a few republicans jumped upon the Pacific cable subsidy "job," after it had been agreed to by a conference committee, and strangled the life from it.

The democratic senators also deserve well for the smartness they displayed in preventing the mail subsidy bill from being sent to a conference committee, which would surely have incorporated the tonnage subsidy bill in it. It is much better to accept the least of two evils than to have to take them both.

Senator Ingalls made a very small use of his last official hour. He dismissed the clerk of the committee of which he was chairman and appointed his son, Paul Ingalls, clerk to the committee. The object lies in the fact that the clerk draws his salary during the recess, but does no work. Senator Wolcott at once employed the dismissed clerk as his private secretary.

There were some disgraceful scenes at the last night session of congress, caused by that old time offender, John Barleycorn. The tipsy statesmen were kept off the floor of House and Senate with some difficulty by their friends, but their antics in the committee rooms and corridors were witnessed by many.

KILLING AN INDUSTRY.

EFFECT OF THE M'KINLEY LAW ON MOLASSES BOILING.

Philadelphia Molasses Boilers in Danger—Chartering a Line of Steamers—A Loss Which Will Be the Country's Gain.

There is one American industry which says that it will be killed by the McKinley law. This is molasses boiling. The boilers are located principally in Philadelphia, where they have a capital of $3,000,000,000 invested. Their method of operation has been to import a low grade of molasses from Cuba, on which the duty was six cents a gallon. From each gallon six pounds of raw sugar is produced, the duty on which, if imported directly, would be sixteen cents and a fraction. This gave a saving of ten cents a gallon in tariff taxes to the boilers and enabled them to do business at a profit. The residue left from boiling was also sold to the manufacturers of rum, thus still further enhancing the profit.

Now, however, sugar goes on the free list, and the Philadelphia boilers will be placed in a very bad position. The cheap raw sugar of Cuba will come into the country free, provided President Harrison will permit it, and the boilers will be put to their trumps to compete with it. Furthermore, it is stated that next year the importers in Cuba, who have been buying largely of American machinery, will do their own work by boiling on the plantations, and thus save not only transportation to the shipboard but stevedoring, and leave the plants in Philadelphia without any work at all to do.

Under these circumstances the boilers say that when the new law goes into effect their profits are gone, and that their $3,000,000 plants are also gone. However, they mean to die game. They have chartered a whole line of steamers and sailing vessels to transport molasses from Cuba to Philadelphia by the tank system, thus laying it down in Philadelphia at a freight cost of two cents a gallon.

But if the McKinley law kills the molasses boiling industry, that fact will not necessarily add anything to the bad record of that bad measure. On the contrary, by showing that we can get along without boiling Cuban molasses, it will prove that we may even gain by losing an industry. If the Philadelphia boilers are compelled to retire from business it will be because of the "flood" of cheap sugar coming into the country; but this cheap sugar is precisely the thing we want. It is not the production of cheap sugar that is necessary for us, it is the cheap sugar itself that we want.

The possession and enjoyment of commodities is the end and aim of all labor. Why, then, should we lament the loss of an industry when the product of that industry is to be put down to us at a lower cost? Lower cost means less labor. But why not get commodities from foreign countries at less labor cost when making these commodities at home involves greater labor? This is the problem presented in every article of the tariff law which is protective. The final cost of any commodity to the country is the cost to the consumer. How much labor must a farmer on the plains perform in order to get a barrel of sugar? That is a greater question than the interests of the Philadelphia boilers or the Louisiana sugar farmers, for there are a thousand consumers of sugar to one producer.

If the McKinley law, therefore, closes out every molasses-boiling establishment in Philadelphia, by giving us free sugar, it will do a good service to the country by showing that it is sometimes cheaper to kill off a home industry in order to get a cheaper and better product in a foreign country. It is a violent remedy, but it is worth trying, in order to show the people conclusively that the tariff is a tax, and that there are some industries which exist by drawing this tariff from the pockets of the consumers. If the McKinley law does this it will perform at least one excellent service.

Woman's Work in Pittsburg.

One of the piteous tales that protected manufacturers often tell before the committees of Congress is that in Europe women are often employed to do the work of men. They are quite sure that free-born American workingmen cannot compete with Europe's pauper women.

But it appears that Europe is not the only part of the world where, in the sharp struggle for existence, the manufacturers put women to doing men's work. Our own Pittsburg, where, perhaps, more protected industries to the square mile are concentrated than anywhere else in America, has a little tale of its own, which can match those which our manufacturers can tell about Europe.

According to a recent report to the Workingmen's Society in New York, about five hundred women are employed in the great iron foundries in Pittsburg in "capping" bolts and nails. For this work the men have been receiving from $14 to $16 a week. The women are paid from $4 to $5 a week, and are glad to get it. This is one of the features of protection to American industry, in driving men out of employment for which their strength fits them and substituting the cheap labor of weak and delicate women.

Pittsburg has more millionaire manufacturers than any other city of its size in the country; but that fact does not prevent the very thing which the protectionists claim as the special achievement of protection. To prevent degradation of American labor, American manhood and womanhood, is the worthy object they say they have in view. Does protection accomplish that object in highly protected Pittsburg?

Canada's Pauper Ice.

Cold weather is much more abundant and cheap in Canada than in the United States. In fact, that country is such a "dumping ground" for the pauper ice product of old winter, that an Ohio ice company has taken it into its head that there must be a protective duty put on Canadian ice. A petition to that effect was recently sent to Maj. McKinley by the Spring Lake Ice Company, of Toledo, Ohio. But McKinley did not act. Perhaps the poor man is confused in his mind as to the actual effects of his famous tariff law, so many of his party organs are trying to prove that his high tariff has reduced the price of manufactures, but has raised the price of agricultural products. Ice being neither a farm product nor a manufactured article, it would doubtless be difficult for McKinley to tell what effect a duty on ice would have. Perhaps, too, he concluded that if he had put a duty on ice, the wicked Canadians would have paid it, and then the Toledo company would have got no good from it. At any rate McKinley did not act, and now Congress has gone home, and McKinley has passed off the stage. There will never be a duty on ice. The time has come for the tariff wall to "melt, thaw and resolve itself into a dew."

Blowing Hot and Cold.

The McKinleyites are at their old trick of trying to persuade the farmers that a duty on manufactured products reduces prices, but that a duty on anything which the farmers have to sell raises prices.

The Indianapolis Journal has recently said: "We challenge free-traders to name a single article or commodity of general use that has advanced in price since the passage of the McKinley bill. In fact, prices of almost everything are lower now than they were four months ago."

Still more recently this organ has contained the following: "Word comes from Iowa that Eastern buyers are in that State paying $15 or $20 more for horses than they did when Canada furnished them—all of which is due to the McKinley law."

Like whisky—in winter it is drank to keep warm, and in summer to keep cool.

THE HAND-TO-HAND CLUB.

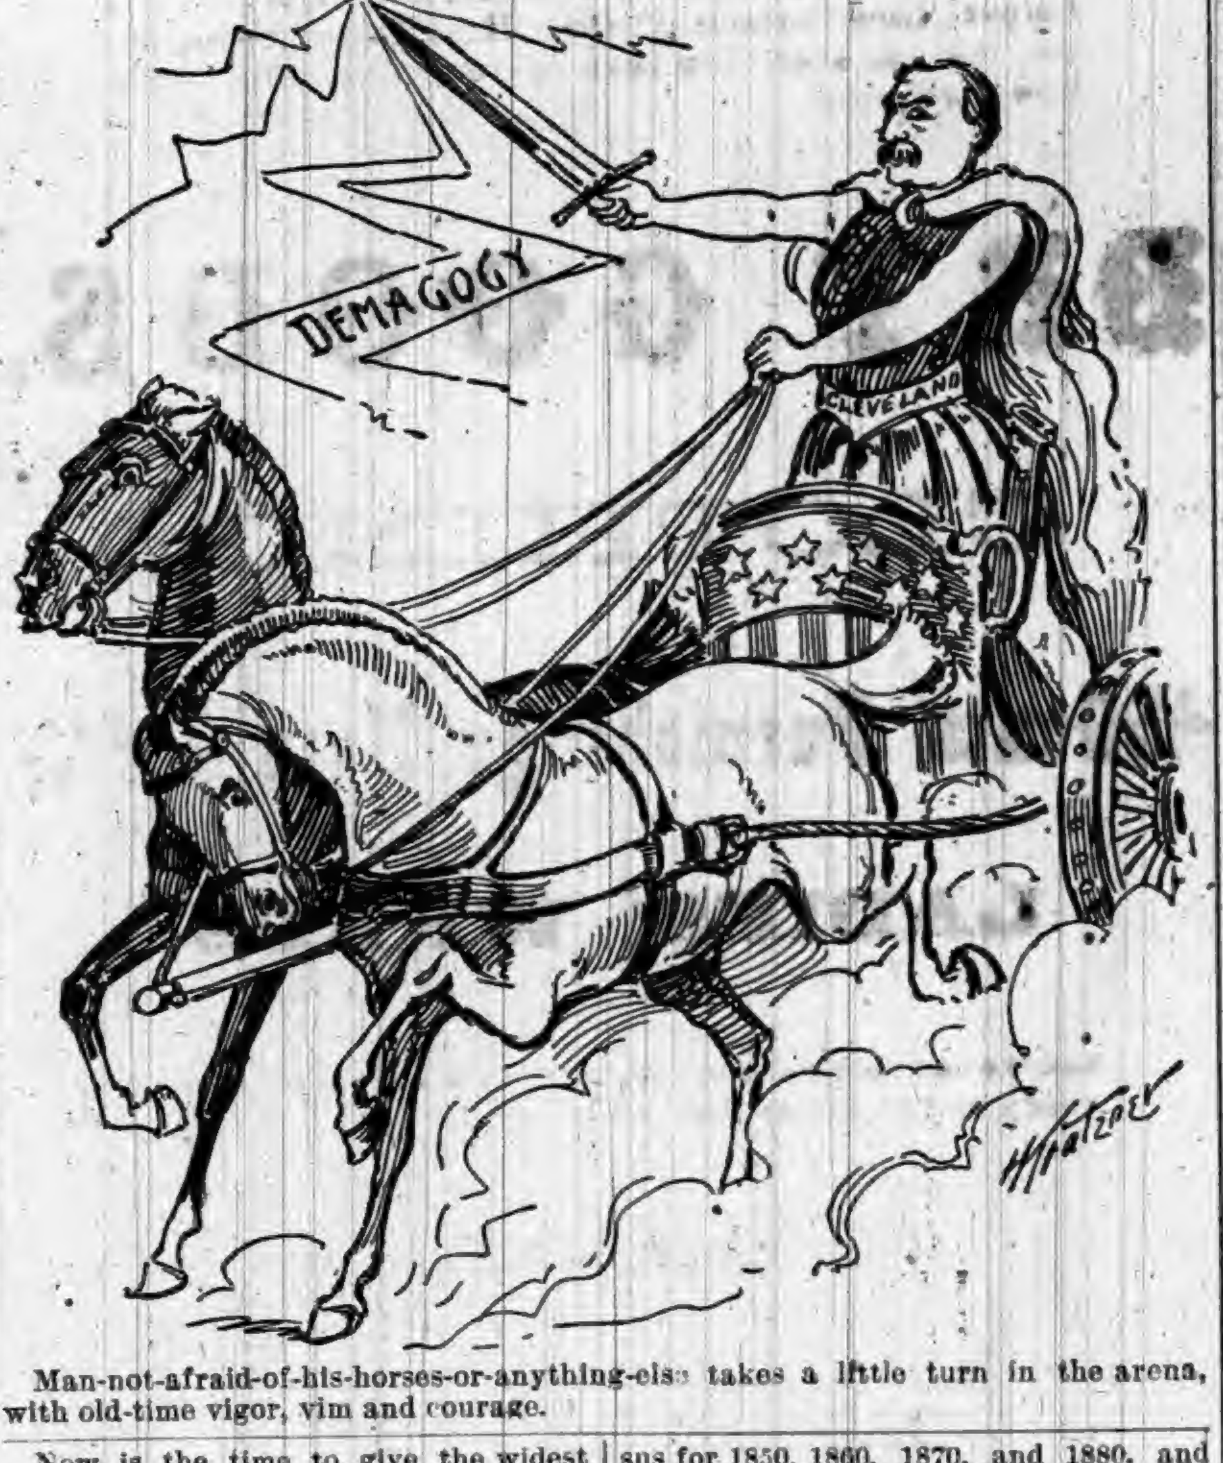
It Will Issue a Half Million Copies of "Protection or Free Trade."

The Hand-to-Hand Club is the name of a unique organization, the President of which is Mr. Logan Carlisle, son of Senator Carlisle, of Kentucky, and the Secretary Mr. W. T. Atkinson, 42 University place, New York.

The object of this club is to get out a cheap edition of "Protection or Free Trade." It is proposed to issue an edition of 500,000 copies, the first 100,000 of which being already in press.

It is proposed to sell the book to advance subscribers at the remarkably low price of 10 cents per copy. As the work covers more than 200 pages, it will be seen that it is a remarkable triumph of the book-maker's art to produce it at this extremely low price.

No work is better calculated to teach sound ideas than "Protection or Free Trade." It is written in a simple style, its arguments are such as the average reading public will readily grasp, and its refutation of the protectionist heresy is so complete as to carry conviction to to all open minds.



SHOWS HIS METAL.

Man-not-afraid-of-his-horses-or-anything-else takes a little turn in the arena, with old-time vigor, vim and courage.

Now is the time to give the widest possible circulation to Henry George's book. As Mr. Logan Carlisle says: "It is certainly the duty of every Democrat who is in accord with his party to assist in this educational work of the Hand-to-hand Club, since it is in a line with what must be done by Democrats to achieve success in 1892. The idea that the people can be educated in ninety days has been demonstrated to be an erroneous one. As a matter of economy, also, the work must be done now. One-half the money that is spent foolishly and feverishly in the heat of a campaign can now be spent for 1891 to better and more lasting effect in educating the people in sound economic principles."

The favor with which the plan of the Hand-to-Hand Club has been received may be seen from the fact that the Democrats and tariff reformers of Michigan have pledged themselves to subscribe for and distribute at least 50,000 copies of "Protection or Free Trade?" Mr. A. B. Farquhar, a great manufacturer of agricultural implements at York, Pa., has subscribed for 2,500 for distribution in his State, and one gentleman in Boston has taken 5,000 copies.

Earnest tariff reformers throughout the country cannot do a better service to the cause of tariff reduction and abolition than to get up clubs of subscribers for "Protection or Free Trade?" The book will be sent to advance subscribers at ten cents a copy, postage paid. Let everybody lend a hand.

An English Opinion of McKinleyism.

W. S. Lilly, the eminent English essayist, has an article in the March Forum, in which he expresses his opinion of the McKinley law in very forcible terms. Mr. Lilly is evidently no believer in the Cobden type of free trade, to which he refers contemptuously as "Cobden's free-trade nostrum and calico millennium." Indeed the writer goes to the length of saying: "That weighty political considerations may be urged on behalf of a protectionist policy in America, and, indeed, in most other countries, I am far from denying."

This sounds very much like an indorsement of one of the familiar positions of the protectionists. Mr. Lilly, however, does not believe that any such "weighty political considerations" had any part in the passing of the McKinley bill.

This is his opinion of the McKinley law:

"Here is a measure which impoverishes the largest industry in the Republic, which sensibly increases the cost of living, which confers upon the President the power of imposing or remitting taxes to the amount of fifty or sixty million dollars annually; a power certainly exercised by no European monarch. And what is the explanation of this singular measure? As I am informed, the explanation is simply this: that it has been devised in order to put money into the already overflowing purses of a gang of monopolists, and driven through the two houses by the most nefarious means. * * * * * There seems to be irrefragable evidence that the American people is in hopeless bondage to corrupt wire-pullers, and is sold by them, with hardly the pretense of concealment, to wealthy robbers—the financiers of speculative trusts and rings, which are really nothing else but organized and state-protected swindling."

A Tariff Dictionary.

Messrs. R. F. Downing & Co. of New York, have issued a handbook of the tariff, which gives in alphabetical order almost every possible article falling under the tariff law. Even articles not enumerated in the tariff law, and falling under such general provisions as manufactures of iron and steel, of cotton, wool, etc., are here given at their proper places, and with the McKinley duty on them. Opposite on the margin of the page is given the number of the section in the law under which each article falls. The volume includes also the complete text of the McKinley tariff law and the customs administrative law. There is nothing like this little work to give one a quick and accurate answer to questions as to the duties in the new tariff law. The book bears the title "Downing's United States Customs Tariff," and is sent to part of the country by mail for $1.50.

Increase of Farming.

The preposterous claim is made by the protectionists that our farmers get greater advantages out of our high protective tariff than anbody else.

Let us see. If they get a greater advantage than the manufacturers agriculture ought certainly to show a more rapid growth than manufacturing industries. If farming has the chief advantage from the tariff, and if protection be the most excellent thing that the McKinleyites claim that it is, then it must follow as a natural consequence that many people will be attracted to agriculture. The farmers' sons will stick to the farm, other people's sons will take up farming; and thus the more favored industry must inevitably show the greater relative growth. A real advantage is bound to attract people who want to make money; and a greater growth is necessarily the result. If this result does not follow, the advantage claimed is thereby proved to be purely imaginary.

Two years ago Michael G. Mulhall, the famous statistician, prepared a paper showing the relative growth of American industries. The paper contained a computation as to the relative increase in population, commerce, manufactures, agriculture, railroads, shipping, banking, and steam power in the United States from 1850 to 1888. Mr. Mulhall adopted the returns of the Federal census for 1850, 1860, 1870, and 1880, and supplemented them by figures collected from official and other sources down to the close of 1888, and which were doubtless quite as accurate as the census returns. The showing made by these computations gave the following percentages of increase in thirty-eight years in the different lines:

	Percentage of Increase.
Railroads	1,600
Banking	900
Steam power	685
Manufactures	408
Commerce	315
Agriculture	252
Shipping	74
Population	170

While manufactures increased 408 per cent. agriculture increased only 252 per cent. And yet, say the protectionists, "the farmer gets the chief benefit from the protective tariff."

McKinley Protecting Englishmen.

The protectionists are rejoicing that the McKinley duty of four cents a pound on pig iron, which does not go into effect till July 1, 1893, is already bearing fruit. This is the tin mine at Temescal, Cal., of which they give glowing descriptions. They quote Congressman W. W. Bowers, of their State, as saying: "There is no doubt that there are millions of tons of the richest tin ore in the world at Temescal."

The organs give the result of the analysis of the ore which has been made in England. The ore, we are told, averages 20 per cent. of tin, some as high as 70, and none lower than 10 per cent; and that the average in Cornwall is only 1¼ per cent.—to which assertion the organ puts an exclamation point of pity.

But the last piece of information they give us is significant—these Temescal mines have been gobbled up by a $27,000,000 English syndicate. What a rare sight! McKinley "protecting" the English owners of "millions of tons of the richest tin ore in the world" against heir own pauper tin in Cornwall!

Protection's Promise to Labor.

The brilliant promises which protection is always holding out to labor are being strangely fulfilled in these days. Twenty-eight thousand men are now idle in Western Pennsylvania, all of whom, except one thousand, are in conflict with their employers. Most of these men were employed in the protected iron, coal, and coke industries, and the loss already in these industries by the present strikes and lockouts is estimated at $4,600,000. Nevertheless protection is said to insure to the laboring man steady employment at good wages! As we have now waited thirty years to see protection fulfill its promise to labor, must it not be that this promise rests on a false notion? By the sure test of experience, protection is proving over and over again that it does not raise wages and does not secure steady employment. With more than thirty cases in the first two months of this year where wages have been reduced, or where laborers have struck because of low wages, it is seen that our high-tariff McKinleyism succeeds no better in satisfying labor than any other protective tariff.

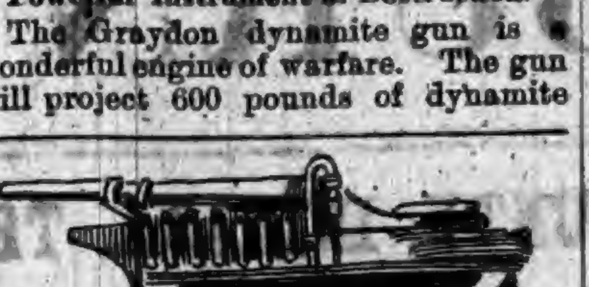
WHEN Dr. Koch's lymph was first brought into this country it was admitted without the payment of duty. Recently, however, the New York custom house officers have seized a package containing less than a tablespoonful of the lymph. The customs appraisers put their heads together, set a value of $6 on it, and made the doctor turn over $1.50 duty. Which means that a tariff is a device to prevent us from getting the things we need.

HERE is a case showing how tightly the tariff wall is built. A German steamer recently broke its steel shaft and put into Baltimore for repairs. A new shaft was cabled for from Bremen, and when it came, although intended for a foreign vessel, Uncle Sam took the usual amount of duty. Not only must we protect our own sacred home market, but we must give the foreigner a slap in the face when we can.

NEW DYNAMITE GUN.

Lieutenant Graydon's Invention a Most Powerful Instrument of Destruction.

The Graydon dynamite gun is a wonderful engine of warfare. The gun will project 600 pounds of dynamite three miles in thirty seconds. The explosive contents are made up for greater safety in tiny waxen pellets and lodged in a shell, the true flight of which is secured by a tapering telescopic tail, and the gun is to be discharged by the expansion of condensed air at a pressure of 5,000 pounds per square inch, the impulse of which is a safer propelling energy than the ignition of powder, because it does not operate so suddenly as to cause a danger of the premature explosion of the missile. "The use of such a terrible weapon as a heavy dynamit sehell has been the subject of much fearsome speculation," says Mr. Graydon, who is a lieutenant in the United States navy. "The noise of the discharge being small, the projectile might be dropped into a fort or on to a ship without giving the besieged any intimation of the quarter from which the attack came. The concussion when the dynamite exploded would in all probability be violent enough to put a large garrison hors de combat, even if they were not wounded by debris; and, truly aimed, a single shell would destroy an ironclad. The barrel, or pneumatic tube, of the gun is of Whitworth forged steel, and weighs about eleven tons. It is supported at the breech end on fixed trunnions fifteen inches in diameter, which are hollowed for the passage of compressed air. Toward the muzzle it is carried on movable trunnions engaged with two forged-steel arms or levers. These levers have sliding fulcrums and are actuated by a hydraulic plunger, for the purpose of elevating or depressing the gun. The breech is closed by means of a steel screw-block with interrupted screw threads, as in heavy service ordnance."



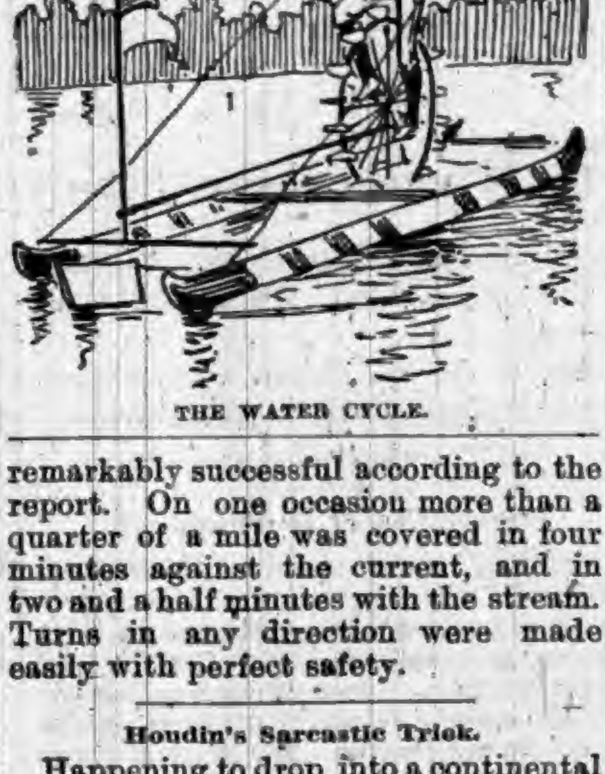
THE GRAYDON DYNAMITE GUN.

The peculiar feature of this particular Graydon gun is that it can be loaded at any degree of elevation within its working range.

A WATER CYCLE.

An Ingenious Contrivance Invented by an Austrian.

One of the latest inventions is a water cycle. It is an ingenious contrivance, and was invented by an Austrian named Korner. The construction and working of the machine are so fully shown by the illustration that little description is necessary. The cycle is built of wood, iron, steel, and brass, and weighs complete about 156 pounds. It will not only carry its inventor, who weighs 136 pounds, but will take another passenger in addition. A sail can be attached to the flagstaff, and the speed thus increased four or five fold, and the rider can pole the machine off sand banks by using the paddles without dismounting from his perch. Trials of the machine, which have been made in the vicinity of Olmutz, have been remarkably successful according to the report. On one occasion more than a quarter of a mile was covered in four minutes against the current, and in two and a half minutes with the stream. Turns in any direction were made easily with perfect safety.



THE WATER CYCLE.

Houdin's Sarcastic Trick.

Happening to drop into a continental casino one day, Robert Houdin observed a Greek reaping a rich harvest at ecarte, and as soon as a seat became vacant he took it. The Greek, dealing dexterously, turned a king from the bottom of the pack.

"When I turn kings from the bottom of the pack, I always do it with one hand instead of two; it is quite as effective and much more elegant. See! here comes his majesty of diamonds," and up came the card.

The cheat stared at the conjurer for a moment, and then rushed from the place without waiting to possess himself of his hat, coat, or winnings.

Another of the light-fingered fraternity, after winning ten games at ecarte in succession, tried his fortune against a new opponent, and continued to win. He had made four points, and dealing turned up a king and won.

"My luck is something wonderful," he remarked.

"Yes," said his adversary, "and all the more wonderful since I have the four kings of the pack in my pocket;" and the professor of legerdemain laid them on the table.

Ostriches in America.

There are certain old traditions about the ostrich which, I have been told by the owner of a California ranch, are fallacious. He says the ostrich does not bury his head in the sand and imagine he is unobserved by his enemies. On the contrary, he is a very pugnacious bird, and always ready for a fight. Nor does the female ostrich lay her eggs in the sand for the sun to hatch them. To do them justice, they are quite domestic, and deserve a better reputation. Nor is the ostrich ever used for riding, as he has an exceptionally weak back; any person might break it with a blow from an ordinary cane.

His strength lies in his great breast and his feet. He has one great claw and a very small one, and with a terrible precision he can bring down the large claw with a cruel force that will tear open anything not made of sheet iron. Savage birds at best, they are dangerously so during breeding time. The twenty-two birds brought to our California ranch trusted to their instinct, and laid their eggs during the California winter, which corresponded to their summer south of the equator. It being the rainy season, their nests were filled with water and the eggs were chilled; so the first season of their American sojourn was a failure.

The ostrich makes its nest by rolling in the sand and scooping out a hole some six feet in diameter, and, except ing an incubator-house, the California ranch requires no building for the use of the birds, though the land is divided off into pens fenced in, each about an acre in extent, for the use of the breeding birds, every pair occupying one such inclosure.

The ostriches live upon alfalfa and corn. Alfalfa is a grass cultivated all over the ranch; it resembles our clover, and grows to a crop some six times a year.

Itinerant Quackery in England.

Quackery of this kind, on quite the largest scale yet attempted, is just now proceeding successfully in England. "Sequah" is a limited liability company, regularly registered at Somerset House, with $50,000 capital, a board of directors and a list of stockholders. The function of Sequah is to sell for 50 cents per bottle a liquid called the Prairie Flower, which, according to the company's prospectus, costs 5 cents per bottle; and to this end the company has established twenty-three gorgeously gilded chariots with four big white horses. Each chariot is occupied with a Sequah with a slouch hat, long hair and a corps of assistants. These twenty-three chariots are in twenty-three parts of England to-day doing, in most instances, a tremendous business. Indeed, Sequah has been the sensation of the season at Richmond, where each evening the lame, the halt, and the blind are treated in the chariot by torch-light. The original Sequah, who is supposed to be a half-breed medicine man with a strong cockney accent and a recipe obtained from the seventh sequah of a seventh sequah, offers to pull teeth, cure consumption, hydrophobia, corns, or any of the ills that flesh is heir to; set broken legs, restore vigor to paralytics and sight to the blind, with all the ambition and scope of a Christian scientist, all by means of the Prairie Flower, and all for the price of a bottle thereof.

Smoked Himself to Death.

The most fantastic story told is that of the strange and slow suicide of the Baron Bela Olnyi, at Pesth, in the year 1875. The Baron was supposed to be very wealthy. He had a wife and six children. He lost his money in speculation, but this was not known. He went to Paris and insured his life for 100,000 guelden each in five companies. He returned to Pesth and his habits began to change. He absented himself from home for long periods every day. The picture of health, he began to droop and pine away. In ten months he died of what the doctors called galloping consumption. The insurance companies were suspicious, and their detectives unearthed a most wonderful plot. The nobleman was discovered to have hired a small room in a remote and mean portion of the city. It was broken into, and found to be furnished with a comfortable sofa, a table, two chairs and two chests. In one of these was found a comfortable dressing gown, a pair of loose Turkish trousers, a fez, and a dozen long pipes. In the other was found about 200 strong Havana cigars and a half pound of common smoking tobacco. From the wrappers found in the bottom of the chest it would appear that in less than eight months the nobleman had smoked about 3,500 cigars and about 100 pounds of smoking tobacco, having deliberately poisoned himself with nicotine.

A Frenchman's Life Menu.

Statistics are not always dull, remarks the London Pall Mall Gazette very justly, and then as the reason of this assertion it quotes the following entertaining and curious statistics recently collected by an industrious Parisian:

According to this Frenchman the average Parisian consumes during his lifetime 1,800 pounds of bread and 1,000 pounds of meat, and these he washes down with 57 barrels of wine, 400 liters of alcohol (!), about 100 liters of beer, and an equal quantity of cider. He also absorbs 11,160 eggs, 1,600 pounds of fish, 1,800 pounds of oil (!), 1,800 pounds of salt, and 20,000 pounds of vegetables.

Seeing that the civilization of a nation is measured by its consumption of salt and soap, the 1,800 pounds of salt speaks well for the Parisian, but what about the oil and the alcohol?

The next item in the statistician's account would furnish a vegetarian with a text for a sermon. It states that every inhabitant of the French capital, on an average, is the grave, in the course of his lifetime, of 3 kids, 6 quails, 6 thrushes, 6 hares, 9 turkeys, 18 partridges, 18 geese, 24 ducks, 33 swallows, 78 pigeons, 93 rabbits, and 210 pullets.

It is a pity the number of frogs and snails has not been added to this menu.

Making Home Pleasant.

Every member of the household ought to feel it his or her duty to try to make home a pleasant place. The father should be kind and cheerful; the mother tender and affectionate; the children obedient and mannerly to their parents and kindly and affectionate to each other. These pleasant days at home will end, by and by, when the children grow up and leave the family circle to enter one of their own. Sometimes, too, the family circle is broken by death. Then how bitter will we remember and regret every unkind word and act we may have said or done to wound the feelings of our dead brother or sister.

Let us all try to live so that our home life will be associated only with pleasant memories. When father and mother are gone to "that mysterious bourne from whence no traveler e'er returns," how pleasant it will be to feel that we never knowingly gave them cause for sorrow. Honor your parents as you hope to be honored by your children.—Household Magazine.

THE mace, the ensign of authority, at present in the House of Representatives, has been in use for seventy-five years. It is the third since the formation of the Government. The first was stolen by the British when they burned the Capitol, in 1814; the second was an inexpensive and temporary mace. Every day, at noon, when the House meets, the mace is borne to the hall by the Sergeant-at-arms, and placed upon its pedestal.

GOOD breeding is the art of showing men, by external signs, the internal regard we have for them. It arises from good sense, improved by conversing with good company.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach and Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.:

DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.

J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.

My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

WHAT LAWS IT MADE.

BILLS THAT RECEIVED THE APPROVAL OF BOTH HOUSES.

How the Work Compares in Volume with That Accomplished by the Preceding Session—An Interesting Study.

The working or business feature of the Congress just closed, says a Washington dispatch, may be studied with interest. Three measures, any of which in intrinsic importance and popular interest would be sufficient for a national issue, stand forth pre-eminent among all others. First, the McKinley tariff bill, which became a law; second, the silver bill, on which, during the first session, a compromise was effected, based on a monthly purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver, and which, in turn, was followed by a more radical measure that failed of passage; third, the Federal elections bill, which, after a protracted, bitter, and hotly fought and intensely exciting preliminary struggle, failed in the Senate to reach a decisive vote on its merits.

Even in its mortuary record the Congress was remarkable, the call of death having summoned no fewer than twelve of its Representatives and three of its Senators. The list contains the names of Senators Beck of Kentucky, Wilson of Maryland, and Hearst of California; and Representatives W. D. Kelley, Samuel J. Randall and Lewis F. Watson of Pennsylvania; S. S. Cox, David Wilber and Newton J. Nutting of New York; Richard Townshend of Illinois, J. M. Burnes and James P. Walker of Missouri, James Laird of Nebraska, Edward J. Gay of Louisiana, and James Phelan of Tennessee.

The total appropriations for this Congress will probably reach $1,000,000,000.

During the Fiftieth Congress 1,611 bills were vetoed, and during the Fifty-first Congress fourteen.

In the Fifty-first Congress 14,033 bills were introduced in the House and 5,129 in the Senate. In the Fiftieth Congress 12,654 bills were introduced in the House and 4,000 in the Senate. In the Fifty-first Congress 297 joint resolutions, or twenty-eight more than the number introduced in the Fiftieth, were introduced in the House. In the Senate 169 joint resolutions, twenty-four more than in the Fiftieth, were introduced. The bills that became laws during the Congress just ended numbered 2,186. In the Fiftieth Congress 1,894 bills were enacted. The number of bills, etc., introduced in the Fifty-first Congress exceeded by 20 per cent. the number introduced in the Fiftieth.

Among the bills which have become laws are these:

The copyright bill, the private land-court bill, the Indian depredations claim bill, the timber and pre-emption law repeal bill, the customs administrative bill, a general land forfeiture bill, the bill to relieve the Supreme Court by the establishment of intermediate courts of appeal, the United States judicial salary bill, the World's Fair bill, the Wyoming and Idaho admission bills, the anti-lottery and anti-trust bills, the reapportionment bill, the immigration bill, the bill to ratify agreements with various Indian tribes and to pay the friendly Sioux $100,000, to reduce the fees of pension agents, to pay the French spoliation claims, the meat inspection bill, the postal subsidy bill, the bill to prevent the importation of adulterated food and drink, the live cattle and hog inspection bill, the bill appropriating $1,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River, to permit sorghum sugar manufacturers to use alcohol without payment of tax, to limit to 60 per cent. of the rates charged private parties the rates the land-grant railroads shall charge for transportation of government troops and supplies, to authorize the construction of a tunnel under the waters of the Bay of New York, for the construction of a deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas, for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands, to permit the export of fermented liquors to a foreign country without the payment of a tax, to apply the proceeds of the sales of public lands and the receipts from certain land-grant railroads to the support of agricultural and industrial colleges, joint resolution congratulating Brazil on the adoption of a republican form of government, bills to establish the Chickamauga military park, providing for town-site entries in Oklahoma, authorizing the use of the Louisville and Portland canal basin, to amend the interstate commerce act so as to give the commissioners fuller powers in respect to making inquiries, providing that applications to purchase forfeited railroad lands shall begin to run from the date of the restoration of the lands to settlement and sale, for a military post at San Diego, Cal., for an Alaskan census, to extend the time of payment for public lands in cases of failure of the crops, to issue 1,000 stands of arms to North and South Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, and Nebraska, to set aside the big-tree tract in California as a public park, for the inspection of cattle steamers in order to secure more humane treatment of cattle, providing that the life-saving appliances act shall not apply to the lakes and bays of the United States, to enable the Postmaster General to expend $10,000 to test free-delivery system in small towns, to create the customs district of North and South Dakota and Puget Sound, and for the erection, repair, or enlargement of many public buildings heretofore noted.

Useful Knowledge.

A bit of soda dropped in the cavity of an aching tooth will afford relief.

Hang a small bag of charcoal in the rain water barrel to purify the water.

Carpets will look much brighter after sweeping if wiped off with a damp cloth.

Salt and vinegar brighten brasses as well as any more modern and expensive portions.

Egg shells crushed and shaken in glass bottles half-filled with water will clean them quickly.

To polish nickel-plated goods after becoming black and not worn, use rouge or whiting on a rag with a little oil.

Where a daily bath of water is not well borne or not obtainable, a good sharp rubbing with a dry towel is next best.

A very thin coat of what is known as French picture varnish will restore chromos and oil paintings to their original brightness.

To darken light mahogany and cherry, bichromate of potash dissolved in water is excellent, and gives it the appearance of age.

Tea or coffee stains will come out at once if they are taken immediately and held over a pail while boiling water is poured upon them.

This matter of bathing cannot be made to fit any rigid rules, for it is rare to find two persons who are affected alike by contact with water in a bath.

It sometimes costs less to have a badly soiled room repainted after a moderate use of the mop and brush, than it does to have it scrubbed and scoured.

All advice to the contrary, the best brush to use is the one that suits your teeth; usually too large a brush is chosen and the corners of the mouth are hurt.

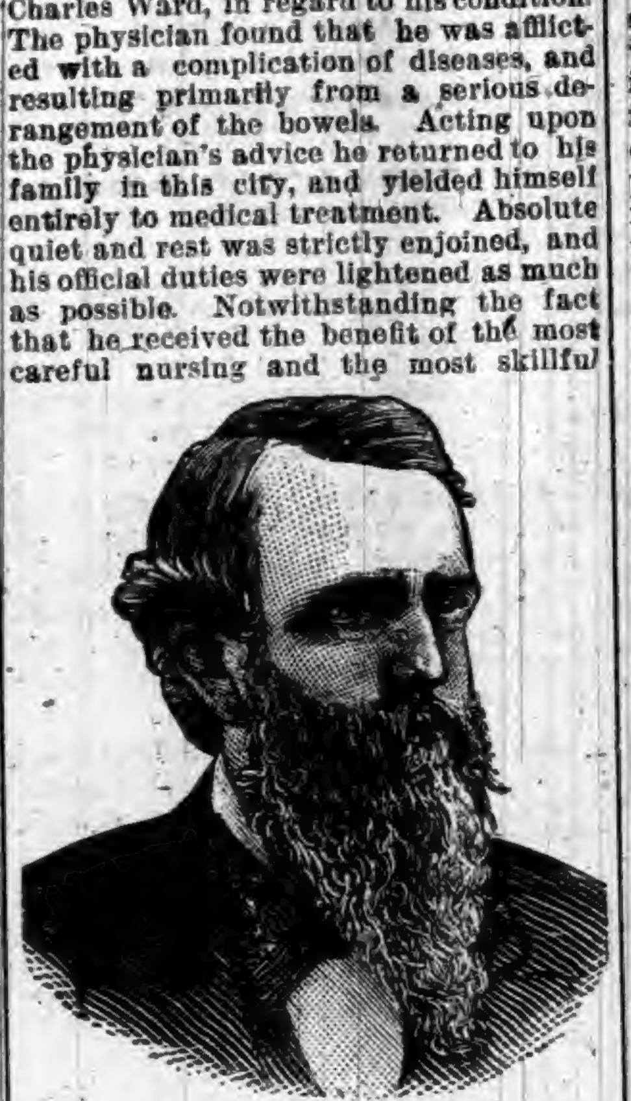
If the gums, as frequently happens after illness, become very sore a gargle of myrrh in a little water is to be commended, and as this has a good, wholesome odor one need not mind using it.

HEARST PASSES AWAY.

THE MILLIONAIRE STATESMAN IS NO MORE.

His Long and Painful Illness—Short Story of His Life—His Mining Adventures, and Rapid Rise from Obscurity.

Senator George Hearst, of California, died at his residence on New Hampshire avenue in this city, says a Washington, D. C., special. He had been ill for a long time, and in December last went to New York City to consult with Dr. Charles Ward, in regard to his condition. The physician found that he was afflicted with a complication of diseases, and resulting primarily from a serious derangement of the bowels. Acting upon the physician's advice he returned to his family in this city, and yielded himself entirely to medical treatment. Absolute quiet and rest was strictly enjoined, and his official duties were lightened as much as possible. Notwithstanding the fact that he received the benefit of the most careful nursing and the most skillful medical attention, a steady and uninterrupted decline was observed, and it was seen several weeks ago that his case was a hopeless one. The remains will be taken to San Francisco for interment.



George Hearst was born in Franklin County, Mo., Sept. 3, 1820. His father had gone to that State from North Carolina in 1819. The son received only such a limited education as the common schools afforded in that day. He worked on his father's farm until 1850, when he caught the gold fever and went to California. For several years he was a miner and prospector, and subsequently by location and purchase, he became the owner of valuable mining interests and a large employer, having at one time as many as 2,000 men at work in his mines alone and operating quartz mills that crushed 4,000 tons of ore per day.

The increase of his wealth was steady and rapid, and for some years past his income has been something like $1,000 per day. He has been for a long time chief partner in the extensive mining firm of Hearst, Haggin, Lewis & Co. He owned above 40,000 acres of land in San Luis Obispo County, California, a ranch of 160,000 acres of grazing land in Old Mexico, stocked with a very large herd of cattle, and a fine stable of thoroughbred horses. He was also interested in a large tract of land near Vera Cruz, and in railroad building in Mexico. His fortune at the time of his death was estimated at $20,000,000.

Senator Hearst leaves a widow and but one child, William R. Hearst, proprietor of the San Francisco Examiner.

Mr. Hearst was in person tall and slender, with blue eyes and long, gray beard. He was a type of the old California pioneer. He was warm-hearted, impulsive, and generous, popular with his associates in the Senate, and had many devoted friends.

The following tribute to the late Senator is from the pen of a well-known Californian:

"For thirty years or more George Hearst has been one of the vital men of the West, one of the individual forces which have inspired and given direction to that quick and vast development of its resources which is one of the material miracles of the century. But it is not as the mining expert, the organizer of gigantic enterprises, or the possessor of a great fortune that he will be mourned. It is not an obituary commonplace, but the simple truth to say that his death will bring sorrow to thousands of hearts. Change of fortune made no change in the man. As a Senator of the United States he was the same simple, unaffected, clear-headed, warm-hearted George Hearst, who mined on the Feather and Yuba Rivers in the fifties, and took his share of the rough, free life of the claims and cabins. To the thousands of the comrades who knew him he remained always as a comrade. Ostentation was abhorrent to a man formed on his rugged lines, and it will never be known how many successful men owe their beginnings to him or how many broken lives were made easier to live because of his hidden, helping hand. To hundreds upon hundred of the associates and even the acquaintances of pioneer times he was a good providence.

"Because he was so thorough a Californian Mr. Hearst was held in affection by all Californians whose experience reached back to the days when railroads and the sharp competition of commercial life were unknown on the coast. His years of hard work and intimate mingling with men of every social and intellectual grade gave him a knowledge of human nature and a sympathy with its defects and weaknesses which kept him free from the pride of purse and hardness of feeling that sometimes go with the riches of the self-made man, and while he had a singularly keen perception of character, and a shrewdness that baffled all pretenders, his heart was tender, his charity great, and his capacity for forgiveness inexhaustible.

"His death is a serious public loss not only to California but to the entire Pacific coast, and peculiarly to the miners, whose special friend and advocate he was. In the death of George Hearst a strong man, an able man, a good, and very humble man has been taken away. He had a manly, a gentle, and a loving heart. There will be moist eyes in thousands of Western homes, grand and humble, at the news of his death, and the sorrow will not be least in the cabins dotting the canyons and streams of the Sierras."

For Sober Thought.

The mind may be so exclusively exercised in one line of thought that it is not even able to pursue that line intelligently; for everything to be thoroughly known must be seen in its relations to other things. He who studies nothing but law is not the best lawyer; nor is he who understands nothing but business the best business man. Even for the success of a single pursuit, or in the search for one kind of truth, the mental faculties must reach out into other fields of thought and inquiry.

From self-respect a thousand other things are derived—such as the care of the person, of the language, of manners; watchfulness over the body and over the soul; dominion over the instincts and the passions; the effort to be self-sufficient; the pride which will accept no favor; carefulness not to expose one's self to any humiliation or mortification, and to maintain one's self independent of any human caprice; the constant protection of one's honor and of one's own good fame.

Coffee.

First found in the heated forests of Abyssinia, beneath the tropic sun of Africa, coffee was not known to the world beyond till about 400 years ago. Thence a learned mufti brought it forth from its seclusion of centuries, and introduced it to his companion dervishes. It spread to Mecca about 1500, and Constantinople fifty years later, though the followers of Mohommed were forbidden to use it for a long time. A hundred years later it reached London, but twenty years more elapsed before it came into use in France.

Its cultivation was then confined to a small Arabian province, but its high value induced the Dutch to introduce it into Java, in 1690, and as a rare plant into the botanical gardens of Amsterdam. The New World obtained its supply from a single plant, which a French naval officer carried to Martinique, in the West Indies, in 1720, depriving himself of water, when parching with thirst, that the tender shoot might survive. From this one tree, it is said, all the American tropical colony obtained their seed, which has multiplied to such an extent that Brazil, the West Indies and Mexico supply us with as much as Java and Ceylon. These are at present the great coffee countries, the product of Mocha, though most delicious, being small in quantity.

The tree naturally attains a height of about twenty feet, but in the plantations is pruned down to eight or ten, forming with its straight, horizontal branches a beautiful dome-shaped mass of green. The leaves are broad and glossy green, sometimes concealing the "berries," or fruit, which cluster along the slender twigs and branches. The coffee is shaped like a small bean, and two of these beans are found side by side, adhering by their flat surface, inclosed in a pulp covered by an outside skin, forming a berry the size of a cherry. This is at first green, but ripens into a bright red when it is gathered.

A coffee plantation in these upland valleys is one of the most beautiful things out of doors. Wide, straight paths are opened through it, above which are the dark green coffee-trees gleaming with berries, or filling the air with perfumed gales from clouds of snowy blossoms.

Over a Thousand Miles.

The following twenty-four railroad lines cover more than 1,000 miles each: New York Central and Hudson River; Pennsylvania; Denver and Rio Grande; Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe; New York, Lake Erie and Western; Illinois Central; Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia; Louisville and Nashville; Lake Shore and Michigan Southern; Chicago and Northwestern; Union Pacific; Northern Pacific; St. Louis and San Francisco; St. Paul, Minnesota and Manitoba; Michigan Central; Baltimore and Ohio; Chicago, Burlington and Quincy; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul; Chicago and Alton; Boston and Albany; Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago; Southern Pacific; Richmond, West Point and Terminal.

Serious Danger

Threatens every man, woman or child living in a region of country where fever and ague is prevalent, since the germs of malarial disease are inhaled from the air and are swallowed from the water of such a region. Medicinal safeguard is absolutely necessary to nullify this danger. As a means of fortifying and acclimating the system so as to be able to resist the malarial poison, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is incomparably the best and the most popular. Irregularities of the stomach, liver and bowels encourage malaria; but these are speedily rectified by the Bitters. The functions of digestion and secretion are assisted by its use, and a vigorous as well as regular condition of the system promoted by it. Constitution and physique are thus defended against the inroads of malaria by this matchless preventive, which is also a certain and thorough remedy in the worst cases of intermittent and remittent fevers.

His Nibs a Trifle Dense.

An amusing story is told in Italy of the ignorance of the Sultan of Morocco. Two Spaniard officers lately visiting Foy were received in solemn audience by the Sultan. The presentation was gone through with all the rules of court etiquette, the conversation becoming more familiar, the Sultan, Muley Hassan, said to the officers:

"Your Queen loves the Pope?"

"Very much," replied the Spaniards.

"The Pope, does he love your Queen?"

"Equally so."

The Sultan remained for a few moments in silence, then said:

"Why does he not marry her, then?"

To this embarrassing question the officers had no reply.—Philadelphia Record.

The numerous readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Thurlow Weed and His Sweetheart.

"When I was working in Cooperstown," Mr. Weed said, "I and two other young fellows were arrested for insulting some girls while going home from meeting. I was never more innocent of anything in my life, but I had no friends and was threatened with jail. Suddenly a man whom I did not know stepped forward and gave bail for me, and a lawyer whom I had barely seen offered to serve me as counsel. My trial came on and the girls completely exhonorated me from having anything to do with it. A year or two after this I fell in love with Catharine Ostrander, of Cooperstown, and married her, and a better wife no man ever had. It was ten years before I found out how I had been defended. Meeting the lawyer in Albany I asked him. 'Why,' said he, 'it was Cahtarine Ostrander's work.' She had felt rather shy and had not told me in all that time. But the next year that lawyer was surprised by being nominated and elected Attorney General of the State. Not altogether because he had interceded for me; he was just the man for the place. I very rarely had a man elected or appointed to office for reasons personal to myself."—Rochester Democrat.

Important Warning.

Dr. William A. Hammond warns against overheated apartments. He says: "An overheated apartment always enervates its occupants. It is no uncommon thing to find rooms heated in winter by an underground furnace up to 90 degrees. Fights and murders are more numerous in hot than cold weather, and the artificially heated air that rushes into our rooms, deprived as it is of its natural moisture by the baking it has undergone, is even more productive of vicious passions. It is no surprising circumstance, therefore, to find a woman who swelters all day in such a temperature, and adds to it at night by superfluous bed clothing, cross and disagreeable from little everyday troubles that would scarcely ruffle her temper if she kept her room at 65 degrees, and open her windows now and then.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, which appears in another column. This company are the original discoverers and only manufacturers of Vaseline, which is known all over the world as the best emollient, and the most valuable family remedy in use. Their goods are sold by druggists throughout the country, but we wish to caution our readers, when buying, to accept goods only in original packages, and labeled Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, as sometimes unscrupulous dealers try to substitute preparations which are of little value when compared with Vaseline, and some are injurious and unsafe to use.

By sending the company a dollar by mail, the sender will receive free quite an assortment of these beautiful and valuable goods without any charge for delivery. We know whereof we write when we say the "Vaseline" Soap is a revelation.

Chicago Cattle in Switzerland.

Consul Catlin, of Zurich, Switzerland, reports to State Department a successful experiment by the Swiss Butchers' Association importing live beef cattle from Chicago. One hundred and ten live beeves were reported going by train from Chicago to New York, by the steamer De Ruyen to Antwerp, and by fast freight from Antwerp to Basle in good condition, the entire trip being made in twenty days. Though the freight was about $7.50 per head, and the beef sold off at 17 cents per pound, there was a profit and the beef was in great demand. The hotels made it a feature of the bills of fare, with the title, "Viande American de Chicago."

Purify Your Blood

When spring arrives it is very important that the blood should be purified, as at this season impurities which have been accumulating for months or even years, are liable to manifest themselves and seriously affect the health. Hood's Sarsaparilla is undoubtedly the best blood purifier. It expels every taint, drives out scrofulous humors, and gives to the blood the quality and tone essential to good health.

"For five years I was sick every spring, but last year began in February to take

Hood's Sarsaparilla

I used five bottles and have not seen a sick day since." G. W. Sloan, Milton, Mass.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla purified my blood, gave me strength, and overcame the headache and dizziness, so that I am able to work again. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to others whose blood is thin or impure, and who feel worn out or run down." Luther Nason, Lowell, Mass.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla every year as a spring tonic, with most satisfactory results." C. Parmelee, 349 Bridge street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses medicinal merit peculiar to itself. Try it this spring.

It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for "100 Doses One Dollar" is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than a teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Give it a trial this spring.

Purifies the Blood

"My little boy, for whom I procured Hood's Sarsaparilla, was so badly afflicted with scrofula that the whole top of his head was one complete mass of matter. I doctored with him 2 years and found no relief, and then I heard of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I gave him one bottle, and there was a most wonderful improvement. I then got one bottle more, and that cured him completely. I would not be without Hood's Sarsaparilla in the house. I give it to my children for a spring medicine." Mrs. H. D. LeRoy, 1641 Hogan Street, St Louis, Mo.

A Lake on Fire.

The burning of Moscow is described as "an ocean of flame." The scene of a burning lake here related must have been equal in grandeur to that conflagration, and none the less impressive for being a wonder of nature. Imagine a bonfire four or five square miles in extent.

It is said that from one of the chief naphtha wells of Russia the liquid shoots up as from a fountain, and has formed a lake four miles long and one and a quarter wide. Its depth is, however, only two feet. This enormous surface of inflammable liquid recently became ignited, and presented an imposing spectacle, the thick, black clouds of smoke being lighted up by the lurid glare of the central column of flame, which rose to a great height. The smoke and heat were such as to render a nearer approach than 1,000 yards' distance impracticable.

Suitable means for extinguishing the fire were not at hand, and it was feared that the conflagration would spread underground in such a manner as to cause an explosion. This supposition led many inhabitants of the immediate vicinity to remove to a safer distance. The quantity of naphtha on fire was estimated at 4,500,000 cubic feet. The trees and buildings within three miles' distance were covered with thick soot, and this unpleasant deposit appeared on persons' clothes, and even on the food in the adjacent houses.

Not only was the naphtha itself burning, but the earth, which was saturated with it, was also on fire, and ten large establishments, founded at great expense for the development of the trade in the article, were destroyed.

The Stitch in Time.

In newspaper articles on the necessity of early organization and needful improvements in the National Army and Navy the address of Sir Charles Dilke before the Royal Statistical Society of England has been freqently referred to. Among other cogent remarks made by the speaker was one to the effect that the total failure of the French in 1870 to obtain even a momentary success with an army of splendid courage and perfect training drew the moral that, whatever the peace expenditure, war cannot be commenced with a fair chance of winning by a nation which waits until war to make her organization perfect.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

ALAS!

How wretched is the man who has fallen a victim to Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, or diseased Liver, with all the horrible attendants. Look upon the picture. Poor man, being tired of dragging out a miserable existence, he is the picture of despondency; altogether, he is rather a forlorn specimen. Do we pity him? Of course; but at the same time feel assured that in a measure he is to blame for the bad state into which he has fallen. A sure, safe, speedy and easy cure can be found in Simmons Liver Regulator—Nature's own remedy. No mercury or deleterious drugs, not unpleasant to the taste, and always reliable—just such a remedy as you can pin your faith to without a shadow of disappointment. Read the testimonial, don't take our word for it:

"I have been subject to severe spells of Congestion of the Liver, and have been in the habit of taking from 15 to 20 grains of calomel, which generally laid me up for three or four days. Lately I have been taking Simmons Liver Regulator which gave me relief, without any interruption to business." J. HUGG, Middleport, Ohio.

AUBURN - - IND.

BLAIR, late senator from New Hampshire, goes to China as minister. This ends his ninety-million school bill.

GEN. PALMER, democrat, elected U. Senator in Illinois yesterday afternoon, two Alliance men voting for him, making the 103.

GOV. HILL, of New York, is determined to hold on to the governorship, and not take the senatorship till congress meets next fall. Not a very wise plan, however.

JAY GOULD was drawn for a juror in New York City last week. He failed to come, and has to pay a fine of $100 and $10 costs, as the law directs. He has been drawn before, and paid the fine.

THIRTY millions of a deficency now faces the government. Two years ago Cleveland left the republicans a surplus of fifty millions. Nothing was paid on the debt last month, but the debt increased nearly two millions. How do people like the prospect?

CONGRESS adjourned for good last Wednesday at noon. It is customary to compliment the speaker on the last day, by a unanimous vote of thanks for his impartiality, etc., but this was refused, the democrats voting solidly against the man who had refused to let them be heard on vital questions.

WE HOPE every patron of the COURIER will read the article on our inside last week headed "Protection Exposed." Mr Wright, has during several administrations been chief of the bureau of labor statistics, and though a republican, his figures prove what democrats have always asserted, that the theory and practice of "protection" is wrong. His figures show that while the theory is, that a tariff should be high enough to cover the difference in the price of labor in this country and Europe, the "protected" classes have got congress to put it high enough to cover the entire labor cost. So that if protection protects at all, it will pay their men.

Court.

Much work is being done in settling estates, obtaining judgments, etc., much of which would not interest readers. Whetsel, the darkey, who stole the clover seed in Butler township gets 60 days in jail. Ida Moltz was divorced from Charles Moltz. The U. B church cases all come up as one, March 24, and will likely all be decided together. The cases in regard to the Emerick estate are now being tried.

Card of Thanks.

DeLong Post of Auburn, respectfully tender thanks to the choir of the M. E church for their valued assistance at the memorial services of Comrade D. C. Headley.

JOHN OTTO
E. L MASON

MARRIED: At the residence of the bride's father in Garrett, Ind., and by Rev. J. W. Stringfellow, Chas. E. Fish and Katie Wildison, March 8, 1891. Both are worthy young people and the COURIER extends congratulations.

Sad Suicide.

Our people were shocked Monday morning to learn of the death, at her hands, of Mrs. A. G. Guiff the evening before. We give the sad story in full. It appears that Mrs Ellen Guiff was the second wife of Mr. Guiff, and he was her third husband. Her maiden name was Smith, her parents being well-to-do people near Churubusco. Her first husband, was a man named Fogel by whom she had two children. She parted from him and married a minister of the Church of God named McCrory but parted from him, and about six months ago, married Guiff, though she knew he was a man of dissipated habits. This last step was bitterly opposed by her people, and, the parting from the first and second husbands, had caused her much trouble and persecution from those parties. This may in part account for the state of mind that let up to the final tragedy. Guiff, also had two children, but perhaps all these might have been endured, but Mr. Guiff had not reformed, as she had evidently hoped. She had been having trouble with him on that score, at times. Since moving here he had been employed at the band saw mill. Saturday evening he had been up town, but returned rather earlier than usual. It appears that she had a small sum of money, and he wanted her to give him some. She told him she had just paid the rent and bought a lounge, and now had but $2.17. She at last gave him $2, and he started off, going out the back way. She believed he did this to deceive her, and that he was going up town to the saloon, which he probably did. Becoming excited at this, she went up town also, going to Fell's saloon and then to Kruger's, but not finding him, she went to the Physician's Drug store, and bought 15 cents worth of morphine. Ed. Casebeer, the clerk, says it was ten grains and that he wrapped it up in the usual envelope labeling it properly. This was about nine in the evening. It seems she went home and took a part of it, probably six grains, as the remaining part, now in the hands of Dr. Buchtel, weighs four grains. Mr. Guiff came home about 10:30 and found her lying on the lounge apparently asleep. He tried to wake her, but after finding he could not, there were beads of cold sweat on her forehead and he became alarmed, and called her daughter but all efforts to wake her were vain. Then the neighbors were called, but nothing could be done for her. Dr. Buchtel was then sent for, about midnight but as they told him the woman had fainted, he was not fully prepared to fight a case of morphine poisoning. But he went vigorously to work with such means as could be had while a man was sent up town to his office for the needed antidotes. All this caused delay and the fatal drug had time to be absorbed into the entire system, and no emetics would relieve her of it, though the most powerful known, apomorphia, was freely given in hypodermic injections. In fact every known method was tried, but failed. All through the night and all day Sunday, this was kept up. At one time she was able to articulate a few detached words, such as "Gus" (her husband's name), "no use" etc., but this was brief. Sunday evening, Dr. Swarts, was also called, but was unable to contribute to the unfortunate woman's relief. In the mean time, her people had been sent for and came on the evening train. It was a great blow to them of course, but a reconciliation was fully effected, with the daughter from whom they had been estranged, but who now lay before them in her last sleep. She breathed her last at 10:10 Sunday evening. The body was taken the next day on the noon train to Churubusco, where it was interred near her old home. She was about 37 years old. A letter was found on her person, where she had evidently placed it with care, over her heart, between the outer and inner clothing. The writing on the sheet is in two places; the first written evidently, while the drug was beginning to take effect, was to her daughter. It read: "Cora dear, you go to your grandma Fogel's. Keep what things you need, and sell the rest. Never stay with Gust. Good bye to you and Artie." The other half was to the husband, the lines showing the hand that penned it, growing weaker and less able to control the moving pencil. The words were: "Well Gus, I am sorry I caused you so much trouble, but I will leave you now, so good by. Gus, I have loved you, but you have broke my heart."

Neither of the notes was signed. It is said the husband, now that it is too late, feels keenly the calamity that has overtaken him, largely by his own fault. But will this be a warning to last long? Will it appeal to a score or more, who are treating their wives and children the same way? Possibly not, for a man will go home to his wife drunk, or will spend his time and money in this way, while his wife makes the living for the family, probably has lost all the better feelings that are supposed to be an attribute of a man before he has fallen to the estate of a brute. And to our shame be it said, there are yet several such in Auburn.

Thirtieth Reunion.

The old Thirtieth Indiana has its eighth reunion this year. It is at Goshen, April 7th, and the program for songs, speeches, toasts, etc., is full and excellent. Some friend has sent us a program, as well as the "Reunion Souvenir," a beautiful pamphlet full of songs, anecdotes and illustrations, descriptive of the regiment's experience. It was compiled by J. N Ohlwine, of Cromwell, who is secretary of the society. Any of the boys desiring information should address him.

Unclaimed Letters.

Unclaimed letters remaining in the postoffice at Auburn, Ind., for the week ending March 6, 1891 Mrs. W. T. Lazenby Martin H. Crowl, F. Hisper, John M. Judge, J T Rice.

Claimants will please call, for letters in advertised list.

GEO. W. GORDON, P. M.

Commissioners' Court.

Friday it was a court in dead earnest for they moved up into the circuit court room, had deputy clerk J. B. Baxter for clerk, pro tem, and H. J. Shafer, acting as county attorney. All these complicated arrangements were for a trial about issuing a license to sell liquor. David Dove in Spencerville had applied for a license, but Jacob F. Baltz, John Baltz, Emilius Case and others, remonstrated claiming he was not a fit man for the business, having sold liquor contrary to law, as on Sundays, election days, to minors etc. J. F. Baltz testified that he had bought liquor on Sunday and on election day, or had seen others do this. Dove denied this on the stand, though witnesses on each side contradicted one another as to this. Dove admitted he had sold bottles of beer to Baltz and others, deposited them in the barn, and next day, Sunday, all went over to the barn, took the bottles out of an old valise, and a number of persons drank it. They paid for it on Monday. Mr. Dove, was however granted a license. Jacob Walborn was appointed justice in place of S. W. Ralston, deceased, and much other business done. It has been a busy session. As they did not adjourn till Wednesday afternoon, we could not give allowances. They will appear next week. Below we give ditch work, etc.

Lines on the Death of Addie McCord.

"Friend after friend departs;
Who has not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
That has no breaking or no end."

In the silent grave they've laid her,
Her life's work on earth is done,
Our heavenly Father has called her,
As He calls us one by one.

Many friends will miss,
Her merry, sparkling eyes;
And why loved are taken from the world like this,
Is known to Him omnipotent and wise.

Parents, brother, do not weep so;
Would you wish her back again,
Through this world of sorrow and sin to go,
Just to suffer a life of ceaseless pain?

No, oh no, that would be cruel,
For she's happier by far than we.
May we think her now a jewel,
And know that from suffering Addie's free.

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
He can heal the wound He gave,
He came to die and redeem us,
That we might live beyond the grave."

She has only crossed the river,
Into the land that's free from dross,
Her spirit's free—rests with its giver,
While friends on earth, are bowed 'neath sorrow's cross.

Her memory loving hearts will cherish,
And oft 'mid summer's sunny hours,
When we view the things that perish,
Strew her lonely grave with flowers.

Mustered Out.

Another of the veterans has lain down to sleep the last sleep. Isaac S. Brubaker was born May 21, 1842 in Ashland, O., and died in Sabetha, Ks., Feb. 6, 1891. Mr. Brubaker was in the civil war enlisting in the 44th Indiana in 1861 and serving till the close of the struggle. At Corunna, Ind., Jan. 21, 1868, he married Achsa Eddy who now survives him. In 1886 they came to Kansas settling in Oneida where they remained until the fall of 1889 when they removed to Sabetha. Four children, three sons and one daughter are left fatherless. The deceased had never been well since his discharge and his disease was directly traceable to his army service. For several years he has been suffering from paralysis and softening of the brain, his later years shadowed by a clouded reason. While in health he was a kind father and husband and a good man, and as sickness came and a loss of mental power he was gentle as a child and patient to his devoted wife and family who cared for him.

Funeral services were held in Grand Army hall, Saturday afternoon, conducted by Rev. A. C Hogbin. The members of the Sabetha post marched to the cemetery following the remains which were laid to rest in the lot belonging to the Woman's Relief Corps adjoining the soldiers monument lot. The ladies of the G. A. R. according to the custom of their order presented a beautiful silk flag which was folded across the breast of the deceased comrade. The beautiful flowers upon the coffin were a token from the Sabetha Corps 44.

McElree's Wine of Cardui and THEDFORD'S BLACK-DRAUGHT are for sale by the following merchants in Auburn by Robbins & McCord.

Salary Bill.

This passed last week both houses, and takes effect when the present terms expire. In DeKalb this will be, sheriff and treasurer a year from this fall, auditor two years later, and clerk and recorder two years still later. The governor vetoed the bill Monday but it was passed over his veto. There are many opinions as to its merits, some believing it should go into effect at once, others that it should begin when other laws do, and others that it should go into effect June 1, of next year. Most of the people would prefer an earlier date than the one selected. But perhaps when all the conditions are known, we will all be better suited as it is. Let us wait and see.

Asked to Investigate.

A petition signed by 366 citizens of the county was presented to the Board of Commissioners this week, asking that a committee be appointed with power to send for persons, books and papers, to employ an expert, and counsel if need be, in order to examine the books and accounts of the county officers. All the expenses to be paid by the county. After considering the matter, the board decided they had no power to make this order, or to assume the expense, unless it was on a distinct charge that there was something wrong, showing the need of investigation. They however, made a record, stating that this investigation could be freely made, and every facility given, if the parties asking it would pay the necessary expense, and that any and all citizens of the county were at liberty at any time to come in and examine any books, for all are public property.

For Town Marshal.

Joseph Pfeffrl, our efficient city marshal, announces that he will be a candidate for this office, at the May election. We feel like saying a good word for him. He was chosen by the board to fill Mr. Headley's term after the latter resigned. As Mr. Headley had been sick for some time, work had accumulated and Mr. Pfeffrl took hold with energy and cleared it up. He did more. He arranged with the council to do the work in a way to save the people a good round sum of money, and is to-day saving them $30 a month over the usual expense of the office. This is a big item. He does his work well, keeps the crossings clean, keeps order on the streets, runs in those who are drunk, or disorderly. We know of no other candidate, and we believe our people can unite on him without the contentions we have sometimes had over this office.

AND now the Butler Record admits that the McKinley bill did not make the hens lay better, but says it was improved feed and shelter superinduced by the McKinley bill. But he fails to show how better food and shelter are secured by a bill which he insists has lowered the tariff rate considerably. And then, in another place, he insists that we are now making our first ton of tin and that "this is the first fruits of the McKinley bill." In other words, a bill that reduces tariff rates adds to the "protection" and makes hens have warmer shelter, better feed, produces more chickens to lay eggs, produces metals, like tin, in the bowels of the earth. In vain we have asked for explanations upon these knotty points. We want republican editors to tell "how" the tariff makes the hens lay, or more chickens hatch, or increases the profits of the business, if it reduces the price, as they seem to have been told by their bosses that it does. The great trouble is republican editors, as a general thing are very ignorant and will gulp down anything the the bosses order for them. And as the bosses don't know much more about it, these simple minded editors frequently swallow pills of an opposite nature. Hence we often see as in the Record, one assertion, that something is protected, because the tariff is higher, and in the next column we are told, that the consumer is benefited because the tariff is lower. And in the same paper we will find that the higher a tariff rate is the more the article is protected and then the cheaper it becomes. All this looks remarkable that an editor of ordinary understanding could be thus easily trapped. But it is not the amount a republican editor knows, but the amount he can be made to believe, that makes him a shining mark for the ridicule of democrats and other intelligent people.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BUTLER.

Eugene Mock is very poorly and gradually losing vitality.

J. A. Campbell was called to St. Joe last week on a small loss.

Mrs. Emma Thomas returned to her home at Van Wert, Ohio, last week.

Emlin Campbell Sundayed at home. He returned to Angola College this week.

Mrs. Anna Glenning is very low with consumption with little hopes of recovery.

Mike Long is gathering material for a commodious new dwelling on the South Side.

Oviatt Campbell has resumed work with the bridge gang on the Lake Shore near Elkhart.

[This letter contained a well written obituary of the late George Firestone, but we had one already in type.]

McLewis is about to follow the fortune of George Casebeer to Blakesly, Ohio, where the latter opens a general store.

James Revett and wife are very low, and the death of either or both is daily expected. He is the oldest soldier of the late war in this county.

Mrs Sullivan, daughter of John Champion, whose home has been in eastern Mich., is spending a few day with her parents and other relatives.

Ben. Stiefel is about to dismantle the old opera house and convert the upper story into a quiet billiard hall, (?) and pool room. We fear the moral condition of the corner will not be materially improved.

Notice of Dissolution.

The partnership here of re existing between Joseph Rainier and D. C. Headley under the firm name of Rainier & Headley has been dissolved by the death of Mr. D. C. Headley. All parties having accounts with the firm will please call on me at the City Meat Market, and adjust the same at an early date. The business will be carried on by me in the same place.

AGENTS WANTED [illegible]

Catarrh

IS a blood disease. Until the poison is expelled from the system, there can be no cure for this loathsome and dangerous malady. Therefore, the only effective treatment is a thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of all blood purifiers. The sooner you begin the better; delay is dangerous.

"I was troubled with catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me of this troublesome complaint and completely restored my health."—Jesse M. Boggs, Holman's Mills, N. C.

"When Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me for catarrh, I was inclined to doubt its efficacy. Having tried so many remedies, with little benefit, I had no faith that anything would cure me. I became emaciated from loss of appetite and impaired digestion. I had nearly lost the sense of smell, and my system was badly deranged. I was about discouraged, when a friend urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and referred me to persons whom it had cured of catarrh. After taking half a dozen bottles of this medicine, I am convinced that the only sure way of treating this obstinate disease is through the blood."—Charles H. Maloney, 113 River st., Lowell, Mass.

REMEMBER
KLINCK
IS THE NAME OF THAT
Wonderful Remedy
That Cures Catarrh, Hay-Fever, Cold in the Head, Sore Throat, Canker, and Bronchitis.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

From the Hon. Harvey D. Colvin, Ex-Mayor of Chicago:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

For Sale by leading Druggists.

Public reading again at the reading room Friday evening of this week. Those who heard Mr. McDougall read last Friday will all be there of course, for it was fine. Bring your friends. This public reading is to be kept up.

It is said, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." It is also true, that neat fitting, well-made suit of clothes is a pleasure to its possessor. This thought is exemplified by Peter Young, who puts nothing but first-class goods on the market. 9tf

W. E. Rose, a former Auburn boy, was back a few days last week visiting his father-in-law, ex-Auditor Tomlinson, and other friends. Will is now located at New Carlisle, St. Joe county, and he and his wife have both been in good health since they have been away.

Miss Bessie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., had a disease of the scalp which caused her hair to become very harsh and dry and to fall so freely she scarcely dared to comb it. Ayer's Hair Vigor gave her a healthy scalp, and made the hair beautifully thick and glossy.

Judge McClellan and wife reached home last Friday morning on the early train. They are looking in splendid health and our people were glad to have them back once more. And in fact, they seem pleased to be at home in Auburn after the long months spent in the bustle and excitement of the capital.

In our obituary of Mrs Cochran last week, there was an omission, by mistake, of one of the children, Benjamin F. Cochran These things will happen now and then, and are perhaps more annoying to the printer than to the parties themselves.

Elder Ward climbed the long icy stairway to the COURIER office last Friday to do an act of kindly remembrance to a departed friend. He is one of the few, of the earlier pioneers we are able to meet now, but we hope he may be spared many years yet.

Uncle Samuel Lawhead was in town last Friday. He has been a resident of the south or southeast part of the county since 1839, and has many recollections of those earlier days To some of these, we shall allude in our "Pioneer Sketches" now running in the COURIER.

B. & O Shops have been taken from Garrett, (on paper) so many times, that one wonders where they will land. The New Era has it, they will go to Milford. Of course there is nothing in it. The shops cost several hundred thousand, and the company is not likely to throw that away, and as much more for new shops.

We note by the reports of the Eastern Bureau of the company owning the great hotel at Coronado Beach, Cal., the arrival at that resort, of Dr. J. H. Ford of this city. We suppose this great Pacific coast resort is one of the most enjoyable in the world, and no doubt, Dr. Ford will get all its benefits.

Mr. Healy has now located here, as pastor of the Presbyterian church, having rooms with Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Culbertson in their new residence on North Main street. He enters on his field of labors here with the brightest prospects for usefulness. He has under all circumstances impressed our people most favorably, and we believe they will make him feel that he has come among warm hearted friends who will make him welcome to his new field.

G. W. Weamer's new brand of cigars, the "Black Diamond" has a new and very catching device. On the inside cover is a picture, a "real for surely" photo, of Black Diamond, Mr. Weamer's horse, held by John Gillan, the young darkey who who works for F J. Yesbera. The likeness of the dark horse, and dark boy, are very good, John looking his very proudest, and dressed in his best, and the vista, looking down West Seventh street, makes a fine background to the picture.

Samuel W. Ralston, one of the best known of Auburn's citizens died last Thursday night a little after midnight As stated in the last COURIER he had been ailing a few days He first had the grip, and then as we stated, on Saturday morning, shoveled the snow off the walks much against the advice of his family. As he finished this, he was taken suddenly ill, and it took active nursing to bring him right again. But he got up town the same day. Later, he was taken down again, it appearing as if he had taken cold, or had over done, or both. Then came trouble in his throat and head, and finally in the brain, his head, toward the last, being drawn backward, as in cases of brain fever and similar diseases. There was hope for him, as Dr Swarts, the attending physician said, till Thursday when towards evening he became unconscious and gradually sank away, dying as stated soon after midnight. No man, we know of would be missed more. Though not in active business for some time, he has been a justice of the peace for many years, and his last trip up town was caused by his anxiety to see that the work of the office was in shape. We give his obituary elsewhere.

The "Independent" published at Hicksville, has stopped, the material being in the hands of the sheriff. The employes "pied" the mailing list, so the owners can't use the names, and there will, the News thinks, be a big suit over it.

We are sorry to hear of the financial troubles of Duncan Brothers at Waterloo. They have been in business for several years and have always stood high in the community. We still hope some way may be found to put them on a sound basis.

Our old Stafford friend Robert Arford was in town Wednesday of last week, and as usual he brought over Dr. Milligan's subscription. These two gentlemen, though of opposite politics, are good neighbors and both are highly esteemed by the COURIER.

Many of our readers in counties west here will be pained to hear of the death of Dwight Russ, the wholesale grocer of South Bend. He had gone to New Mexico for his health, but became worse and died there. He was formerly in the retail grocery business in Laporte, and was a brother of S. A. Russ, the man who introduced his laundry starch and bluing here a few years ago.

Young man, did you ever entertain the idea you might some day be recognized among the great, self made men of our country? If you have not, awake at once from your lethargy, and if possible, induce your parents to buy $15 worth of goods of John Harris and get you a history of those men, who, by the muscles of their brawny arms and the genius of constructive brains, have made for themselves a glorious record in the world's history. 11tf

A very pleasant evening was spent March 3, at the home of Miss Cora Spitler, by a large number of her young friends. Numerous games comprised the amusement of the evening. Refreshments were served, to which, all did ample justice. At the proper hour good nights were said and the happy company retired from the delightful scenes of the evening, bearing deep in their hearts a pleasant remembrance of the young hostess and the welcome reception received at her hands.

The postoffice at Auburn Junction has lately been moved from the grocery store of George Morr, to the Ashley block. The office is now nicely and conveniently situated and the patrons need not feel the embarassment of going into a business establishment of someone else to get their mail. This, of course, is a small office and cuts but a small figure in the great postal system of the United States, but it serves as an indispensable attribute to the comfort of the good people in the vicinity of that little "burg". The business of this office has increased about one-third in the past year, and it is hoped, that being a mail transfer point, it will some day rank as a self sustaining institution.

As the itinerant was ushered into the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works, a few days since, a scene of wonderful activity met his gaze. Everybody seemed to have an air of business about them. Proprietors, foremen, machinists journeymen and apprentices, all appeared earnestly and energetically performing the duties assigned them, and a harmony of interest evidently prevailed throughout. This enterprise is one of the many manufacturing industries that our city has reason to feel proud of. A large number men and boys are given remunerative employment, and the continual hum of its operated machinery, the frequent roar of the massive cupola and the vast quantities of iron that is reduced to a molten consistency and carried around the molding room where it takes the form of patterned work, are among the many evidences that this institution is a success. Oh, Auburn is not such a nasty, inconsistent town as some may imagine. Give it time and a chance, and a record will be made, of which larger towns might take pride in.

W. S. Sewell was up in Franklin township last week to attend the funeral of the late George Firestone, Mrs. S's grandfather. Mr. Firestone was one of the old pioneers, having come into the county in '36.

John Jackman, youngest son of I. M. Jackman, of Grant township, made the COURIER a business call Saturday. Friend Jackman's "boys" grow bigger as they stand in order of the family list, John being over six feet.

A large stone wall has been found near Cleveland, Tennessee, it is said, built most likely by the 'Mound Builders" If this rumor should prove true, we should expect our friend Wm. Lessig, to break off a chunk and send up to us, to add to our curiosity shop.

Martin L. Goetschius, who went to Montana eleven years ago, was back this week for a few days. He is looking well and evidently prospering in business. He expressed surprise at the great changes that have taken place in Auburn and vicinity during his long absence. He returned to his western home this week.

A merry crowd of young people took time by the forelock on Wednesday evening, of last week, by taking a sleigh ride over to Garrett. A gay company they were! Fair damsels and brave men filled the balmy evening breeze with the harmony of laughter and pleasant conversation, until they found themselves at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Curt. Johnston. An enjoyable time was had and the host and hostess entered into the amusements as zealously as though age played no particular part with them.

The world moves on with rapid strides, and the telegraph, telephone, railways, cables and hundreds of other useful inventions have been brought into constant use, which, perhaps a little over a century ago would have been utterly impossible for contemplation. But now, these impossibilities of the past are common attributes to human comfort, convenience and happiness. The same is in a measure applicable to a mercantile life. Ideas that were unpopular in bringing patronage to business men, several years ago, are now all the rage, and receive the hearty approval of the general public. In fact, people in this age expect a merchant to give his patrons a present of some kind after he has been patronized considerably by them, as an evidence of his appreciation. This custom has become quite common, and is more or less systemized. While it is in our mind we would direct your attention to John Harris, of Auburn Junction, who is now acting on that principle. He has on hand a good stock of dictionaries, cook books and histories, which he offers as presents to his many substantial customers. There are but few persons who are not more or less familiar with the character of Webster's Unabridged. It is almost a general literary authority with our people. Such a book affords the means of intellectual culture. The Compendium of Cookery meets the many wants to be found in the culinary department of domestic economy. The ladies are ever zealously endeavoring to improve the quality of their coooking, therefore these books are indispensable. Last, but not least, the Triumphs and Achievements of Self-made Men, is a work that affords incentives to energy and perseverance for the young, and delightful entertainment for the old. One of these books is certainly a valuable acquisition to the best of libraries. Every parent should give the children an opportunity to study the brilliant careers of men who started at the bottom round on the ladder of fame and gradually climbed to the top, where wealth and genius had arrayed themselves and voiced their favor of small beginnings. See locals of conditions under which these valuable presents are to be secured.

HONAH, SAH!

Col. H. Clay King Shoots D. H. Poston at Memphis.

Mr. David H. Poston, a prominent lawyer of Memphis, was shot and mortally wounded by Col. H. Clay King, a well known citizen and also a member of the Memphis bar. As Col. King was standing in front of Lee's cigar store on May street, Mr. Poston came along. When he reached King the latter, without a word of warning, placed a pistol against Mr. Poston's abdomen and fired. The attending physicians say he cannot recover. The causes which led to the shooting have their origin in the lawsuit, which has become a case celebrated in both Tennessee and Arkansas judicial annals, and to which H. Clay King and Mrs. Gideon J. Pillow, of Fort Pillow fame, were the principals. The litigation has been pending for a number of years, and grew out of certain transactions between the parties with regard to Arkansas lands, Mrs. Pillow claiming the title through certain deeds signed by King and which he claimed were never executed as far as delivery was concerned, alleging that she obtained surreptitious possession of them. The firm of Poston & Poston was the counsel for Mrs. Pillow, the complainant, and have prosecuted her title vigorously.

A Strange Case.

Shelbyville (Ind.) special: A strange case has been filed in court here. Fifteen years ago old Mr. Glass, a colored man living near this city, went to the orphans' home at Indianapolis and selected a little girl two years of age, believing her to be of colored parentage, and adopted her as his lawful heir. She is now seventeen years of age, is of a very fair complexion, has long, straight black hair and blue eyes. She is a beautiful girl and intellectually bright. Glass has filed an affidavit charging the girl with being incorrigible and asks that she be sent to the female reformatory. She claims that she is of white parentage; that her name is McAllister, and that she is unwilling to remain a member of the colored man's family. She refuses to obey him under any circumstances.

A Strange Sight.

The coast survey tidal observer at St. Paul, Kodiac Island, Alaska, has reported to Prof. Davidson, under date of February 24, that the tidal house had been swept away in a heavy northwest gale on February 11, but was recovered from the shore of the opposite island. Five men who went after it could not return on account of the severe weather, and three of them were badly frozen. He also reports that he sees at an estimated distance of twenty miles indications of a volcano not known before. He does not wish to report the fact until he obtains permission to visit it in the spring. It is visible at intervals with emissions sometimes like smoke and at others like steam.

Sad Fate of a Fireman.

Herman Lawson, a fireman on the fire boat at Seattle, Wash., met a horrible death. During the regular weekly practice Lawson lost his hold on the nozzle and the stream struck him in the side, knocking him down. Before he could be rescued he was rolled by the force of the stream for twenty yards along the wharf over a six inch spike, which caught him, tearing open the stomach and lower part of the body. His sufferings were terrible. Morphine was administered, and the physicians tried hard to save him, but he died in agony.

Ammonia Explosion.

In the Dixon Iron Works, in Glasgow, a condenser used in the manufacture of ammonia exploded with terrific force and fatal effect. The mangled remains of three of the employes have already been recovered, and four other bodies, including that of Mr. Miln, the manager of the concern, are known to be buried beneath the debris. A number of persons were also severely injured. Workmen are making every effort to recover the bodies of Mr. Miln and his unfortunate companions.

Illicit Love.

A shocking murder and suicide occurred at Saginaw, Mich. Edward Rogers had been for some time intimate with Hattie Moses, and she swore out a warrant for breach of promise. Rogers heard of it and went to her house partly intoxicated and a quarrel ensued. Suddenly Rogers drew a revolver, pressed it against her heart and fired, killing her instantly. He then shot himself in the left breast, falling across the woman. Rogers' wounds are pronounced fatal.

Valuable Newspaper Property.

The Minneapolis Tribune has been sold to a company headed by J. W. Murphy, of Grand Forks, N. D. The purchase price is said to be $400,000. Rumor has it that ex-Senator Gilbert A. Pierce, of North Dakota, will assume editorial control.

Not Objects of Charity.

P. T. Sherman has informed the Sherman statue fund committee that the General left his family well provided for and that they request that the committee abandon its intention of giving any surplus of the fund to the family.

Only Owe $150,000,000.

Brooklyn and New York cities have bonded their indebtedness amounting to nearly $150,000,000, on which they are paying nearly $4,000,000 interest annually.

Crushed by a Cable Car.

Dr. Edward Shaeffer, of 447 Kemper lane, Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, while attempting to leave a cable car while in motion, at the corner of Reading road and Fern street, was thrown under the wheels and terribly crushed. He died from the effects of his injuries.

Gold Discoveries.

The southwestern part of Vernon County, Mo., is in a fever of excitement over the discovery of gold four miles south of Moundville. The lead is fifteen feet thick, and assays four ounces of gold and three of silver to the ton.

Parnell's Followers.

A Dublin letter says that Archbishop Walsh does not approve the extreme course taken by those of his fellow prelates who hold out ex-communication as a penalty for the followers of Mr. Parnell. While holding positive views, both as to the folly and the evil effect upon the nation's political and moral interests of giving countenance to Parnell, the archbishop does not propose to treat either clergyman or layman, among Parnell's supporters, any different, in a religious sense, from what he treats others. This, however, is not the view generally held by the Irish prelates, and the indications are that ere long the Irish people will have to choose between Parnell and the church.

A HORRIBLE DEED.

A Half-Breed Deliberately Disembowels His Best Friend in the Presence of Bystanders.

San Diego special: Joseph Muir, a half breed, living in San Quinten, made a desperate attempt on the life of Filipe Sanchez. The latter was asleep on the sidewalk in front of a saloon, when Muir, who was partly intoxicated, came along and tried to awaken him. Failing, he opened Sanchez's shirt and drawing a knife, made a motion to disembowel him. He felt the edge of his knife, and evidently thinking it was not sharp enough, stepped into the saloon and deliberately sharpened the weapon. When he thought the edge was keen enough he walked to where Sanchez lay, and kneeling down beside him plunged the blade into the sleeping man's abdomen. He then partly withdrew it and ran it over against the hip bone. Here he turned the weapon and forced it upwards as far as the ribs would allow it to go. Muir then pulled the shirt over the horrible gash, straightened up, smilingly nodded to the bystanders, licked the blood from the blade on one side and placed it back in the scabbard by his side. He was at once seized by the bystanders and placed in custody. Sanchez was alive at last accounts. Muir is now in jail in Ensenda. Referring to his act, he says he was a good friend of Sanchez, but he wanted to try his new knife.

A BOLD NEGRO.

He Captures Two Deputy Sheriffs Who Are Sent to Arrest Him.

Anderson Boswell, the black desperado who murdered Mrs. Bass at Winchester the other day, was tracked by the Sheriff and his posse to the house of Anderson Hoggston, three miles west of Marion, Ind. On being invited out he insisted that they go in and take him, saying that he would give himself up readily. On opening the door, however, a deputy was met by the black man with two big revolvers in his hands, and was forced to retire, accompanied by another deputy, who was also at the door. The two deputies were then marched a distance of 200 yards in front of the desperado, who gradually slackened his pace until he saw an opportunity, when he took to his heels and fled to the woods. The officers followed for several miles, but were unable to catch him. He is supposed to be in the neighborhood of Swayzee, ten miles west of Marion. The farmers have joined in the hunt, and no one would be surprised to hear of another tragedy, for the negro is a desperate character, and swears that he will not be taken alive, and that when he dies he proposes to take as many with him as possible. For several days he has been extorting food from farmers at the muzzle of a revolver.

A Sister's Jealousy.

With her face horribly disfigured and burned by vitriol, and suffering great pain, Matilda Cunningham lies at her home, in Rochester, N. Y., the victim of her sister's jealous spite. Matilda, aged 27, and her Sister Lena, about 30, room in the house of their uncle, Michael McFarland. They occupy seperate beds in the same room directly over McFarland's sleeping apartments. All was quiet in the house when McFarland was awakened by a woman's shrieks, and jumping from his bed discovered Matilda standing at the sink bathing her face and groaning terribly. She said something had been thrown in her face and was burning her. Just then the sister, Lena, was seen trying to escape from the house. She was followed, and the policeman on the beat arrested her. She would not talk of the affair. A doctor was sent for, and the unfortunate woman was found to be terribly disfigured. Her forehead, cheeks and nose were in a frightful state, and the eyebrows entirely burned away. It is thought the sight may be saved, as she was sleeping at the time the vitriol was thrown. Matilda is emyloyed in a seed house and Lena was jealous because she was more successful in finding employment than she, and took this revenge.

FRIGHTFUL!

Twenty People Lost on Puget Sound.

Seattle (Wash.) special: The steamer Buckeye, with twenty passengers and her crew, is reported lost in a gale on Puget Sound, between Edmunds and Appletree Cove. The Buckeye left Edmunds for Appletree Cove across the sound, eight miles distant, taking about twenty passengers, mostly women and children, who went for a pleasure trip. At Appletree Cove the Buckeye loaded a cargo of vegetables and started back, but at last accounts had not reached Edmunds, and had not been seen by any passing vessel. A heavy gale prevailed and the unseaworthy craft went down with all on board. A light was seen by some Edmunds long-shoremen at 2 o'clock at night during the storm, which is supposed to have been that of the Buckeye. It suddenly disappeared and was seen no more. Large quantities of vegetables were washed ashore at Edmunds by the tide.

BASE BALL.

Al. Johnson Sells Out to the League.

Cleveland special: A deal has been completed between Albert L. Johnson of the Association League and J. Palmer O'Neill of the National League where by the former sells out for $30,000 all his property in base ball. This includes the company contracts with Cincinnati and Cleveland players, the ground leases in both cities, and all other things connected with the National League game. Judge Sanders and Attorney L. A. Russell, of this city, and Ed. Hanlon and F. H. Brunnell assisted in the transfer. The League at once takes possession of all Association property.

Cincinnati special: It was nearly midnight when the Association League managers now in the city learned that Johnson had sold out. The news created consternation, as all their plans were based on his fidelity; and he was denounced in bitterest terms. He had led them to the last moment to believe he was true, and they were about to complete arrangements for the season. Johnson's treachery has killed the Association's hopes in this city.

A Railroad Sensation.

The Coroner's jury having found the officers and directors of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad responsible for the recent tunnel accident in New York, warrants for the arrest of these officials have been issued. Chauncey M. DePew appeared at the Coroner's office and furnished a bond of $25,000 for his appearance in the future. President Clark, of the New Haven Railroad, and Director Park also surrendered themselves and gave bonds in the same amount. Clark informed the Coroner that all the directors and officers of the road would come to the Coroner's office at any time suggested. The Coroner said this would not do, and that the only exceptions he would make were in the cases of George N. Miller and Wilson G. Hunt, who were both old.

May Be Trouble on the Big Four.

A Springfield, Ohio, special states that the employes of the Sandusky and Whitewater branches of the Big Four Railroad system will not be granted an increase of wages. Representative workmen met the officials of the company, and laid their grievances before President Ingalls, who said that on account of the few trains run on the Sandusky and Whitewater branches the employes thereof ought to be satisfied with 25 per cent. less than "Big Four" wages. It is possible that a strike will follow.

AN UNNATURAL MOTHER.

She Confines Her Son in a Cellar for Six Years.

An account comes from a village of Nuenstadt near Halle, in Austria, of an unheard-of outrage, which has been going on for the last six years. A man 32 years of age, the son of a rich widow named Dorn, who was supposed by his neighbors to have emigrated to America, has been found by the police in the cellar of his mother's homestead, where he has been incarcerated for six years. On being brought into the light of day he was found to be blind and speechless and to have lost the use of both legs. He was naked, his only covering being a coarse dirty horse blanket. The mother, on being interrogated by the judicial authorities, has admitted having kept her son imprisoned during this long period because her husband by his will left him a larger slice of her property than to her favorite son, his youngest brother.

Two Perished.

Monroe (N. C.) special: Fire was discovered in the Monroe High School. An alarm was at once sent in and the students of the school were aroused as soon as possible, but it was too late to save the building, and two unfortunate young men, Thomas Pemberton, of Little Rock, Ark., and Albert Bost, of Bost's Mills, N. C., perished in the flames. At the first alarm the young ladies, who roomed on the ground floor, made their escape. The young men roomed on the third floor and when the alarm reached them the means of escape was partially cut off, and the building filled with smoke and flames. Loss, $15,000.

Nihilist Leader Captured.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says: The Nihilist leader, Degajefa, who in 1884 assassinated the chief of secret police, has been arrested in Kostaom, 200 miles northeast of Moscow, where he was found living under an assumed name, and in the house of a government official. The chief instructor of the Gionza at Kootrom, who was suspected of being implicated with Degajefa, committed suicide at almost the moment the door of his room was opened by the officers who had come to place him under arrest. The police have made other arrests, and it is expected that sensational developments will follow.

Costly Prairie Chickens.

Wm. Slaughter, a wealthy farmer of Clay County, South Dakota, has got himself into a remarkable tangle, from which it will cost him more than $20,000 to extricate himself. He was caught by the Sheriff of his county and taken to Vermillion, together with nineteen barrels of prairie chickens, which he admits having killed. The penalty for violating the law is $10 for each bird, and, as he had 2,060 of the birds barreled up, it is very easy to figure out the amount he is indebted to the State. There are no loop-holes in the law, and Mr. Slaughter has goods and chattles enough to pay for his sport.

Big Fire at Shelbyville.

Fire destroyed the stores of C. W. Russell, stoves and hardware; Laughlin & Tillman, grocers; Wood & Hatton, clothing; C. W. Cunningham, boots; J. D. Gillis, dry goods, at Shelbyville, Tenn. The total loss on buildings and contents is $50,000; nearly covered by insurance. The office of the Bedford County Times was also destroyed.

Fatal Accident.

Wm. McLaughlin and his son were killed and Mrs. McLaughlin fatally injured by a Grand Trunk train near Shaftsbury, Mich. They did not see the train and drove in front of it. The engine struck the rig between the wheels and threw it in the way. Both father and son were dead when the train was stopped and the mother cannot live.

Good News for Deserters.

An order has been issued from the War Department which will relieve many a soldier from severe punishment. In the execution of the present law the sentence for desertion has ranged from five to seven years. Under the order just issued the maximum punishment will be reduced from two to two and a half or three years.

Torn to Pieces by a Lion.

A woman named Ellen Murray described as the American lion tamer was torn to pieces, while going through her performance in the lions' den at Ahlbeck's menagerie in Chemnitz, Germany. Her mangled body was gotten out of the cage after a desperate fight with three lionesses, but the unfortunate girl expired shortly after the rescue.

Will Be Fought Over Again.

It is announced that if the Canadian courts will permit the elections in the frontier country that went against the Government will be protested and the fight be made over again. Sir John expects to win a number of these seats back again.

Fatally Scalded by Steam.

The drum of the steamer, "Buckeye State," exploded opposite Patriot, Ind. Jas. Jones, Ash Wheelock, and Sam Hamilton (colored), fireman, were fatally scalded by escaping steam.

"Gold Bricks" of Solid Brass.

Chief of Police Robinson, at Muncie, found the two alleged gold bricks used in the attempted swindle of Uriah C. Vermillion and his son Jesse, in that city, in the United States Express office, and seized them as gambling devices. The bricks were taken to a jeweler, and found to be of solid brass, covered with gold foil, each weighing thirty-five pounds. Several small auger holes were found in each brick, and the filings that are pronounced fourteen-carat gold are supposed to have been smelted in the holes, that were easily located by the sharpers. The express agent says the "castings," as they were consigned, were shipped there two days since. A man called for them, but three hours later returned them to the office and disappeared. It is now known that the two gold-brick swindlers who came so near capturing the Vermillions are none other than Ed Post and Doc Baggs, the notorious swindlers who made recent victims at Lawrenceburg and Washington C. H., Ohio.

—Charles Leibfried, aged 30 years, proprietor of the Central saloon, at Columbus, was found dead in his room. Henry Schnurr, a former proprietor of the same saloon, fell dead in the doorway, and six months later his brother, John Schnurr, committed suicide by shooting a pistol ball through his heart. Three years later George Phillips, the next proprietor of this saloon, died suddenly. Thus four consecutive proprietors of the same saloon have died violent and mysterious deaths.

—John Wells, a young man, was driven from some charcoal kilns he was attending near Washington, by masked men. They left a bundle of switches on which a piece of paper was tacked bearing a warning to Wells to leave the country. As he feared to return the kilns caught fire and were destroyed, Samuel Brown, the owner, has employed Judge T. C. Crutcher to begin civil proceedings against the night-riders to recover damages. They are said to be prominent farmers.

—Fort Wayne and surrounding villages has been infested with two gangs of burglars, who have done a thieving business, but they have come to grief. Dempsey and O'Neil, two Chicago thieves, were arrested and a quantity of stolen goods were found in their possession. Tom McNally and a son of 'Squire Tancey, both of Fort Wayne, broke into three stores. At the last place, Henry Busching's grocery, they were confronted by three clerks, who opened fire on them with revolvers and shot McNally through the hip.

—A curious instrument of writing exists in Jay County which does not appear of record, but which, if recorded, would create the livliest breeze that has happened around Dunkirk in a long time. It appears that two early lovers failed, for some reason unexplained, to marry, but married others. Lately a written agreement has been signed up, in absolute secrecy, providing for their future marriage to each other, in the event they survive their present companions. This contract further provides a liquidated damage of $5,000 upon failure of contract, as provided. They set forth in their contract that, owing to respect for children, etc., no divorce shall be asked for, but that they shall trust in providence to remove present unwelcome stayers.

—Rather a remarkable case has developed at Terre Haute by the filing of the suit of Anthony Fuller vs. Alevia J. Fuller, for divorce. Fuller lives south of Terre Haute on a farm, and during a visit to the city recently he discovered that he was the husband of two women. The affair came about in this way: In 1865 Fuller brought suit in the Clark County, Illinois, courts, for divorce from his wife, Alevia. For some reason the case was dismissed from court, but Fuller's lawyer told him that the divorce had been granted and collected a fee. Fuller married a few years later and is now the father of several children by his second wife. As soon as he discovered his predicament he at once instituted divorce proceedings against his first wife, who now turns up as a defiant disturber of the peace.

—Gov. Hovey has appointed Col. Ivan N. Walker, of Indianapolis, and Josiah L. Gwinn, of New Albany, Tax Commissioners. Col. Walker, a Republican, is prominent in Grand Army circles, having been for the past six years Assistant Department Adjutant-General for Indiana. He for years held responsible positions in the County Auditor's office, and is well posted in the line of work that will probably be required of him. He was his party's candidate for Auditor of State at the last election. Josiah L. Gwinn, Democrat, is a native of Harrison County, and in his boyhood learned the printers' trade in the office of the New Albany Democrat. In 1853 he was assistant postmaster at that city, and in 1860 was elected Recorder of Floyd County, in which office he served two terms. He is now proprietor of the Truth-Teller, and one of the Trustees for the Hospital for the Insane at Evansville.

—Robert Westerfield fell from a haymow near Danville, and was impaled upon the broken end of a pitch-fork, suffering fatal injury.

—Albert Laws, of Lewis Creek Station, who was found with his brains blown out, left a letter saying that his suicide was due to physical infirmities.

—Sarah, widow of George W. Leitz, of Muncie, suddenly died of heart disease, aged 63. She resided there sixty years, and was the wife of one of the State's well-known politicians.

—James Brown, a Peru second-hand man, brutally assaulted Mrs. Thomas Holman with an ax, on account of the woman's inability to pay 50 cents due on a sewing machine. Mrs. Holman was seriously injured. Brown is in jail.

—Marcus Yegge, an old veteran, passed as a pension agent at Montgomery and forged a note for $200 on William Clark and John Parks. John M. Blue cashed it for $15 and Yegge promised to redeem it. Instead, he went to Vincennes, where he passed as one Wilson, and is now in jail for forging Hon. Daniel Alton's name to a $175 note.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

No business of importance was transacted in either branch of the Legislature, Feb. 28. There was a wrangle in the Senate over the suburban railroad bill, and the House passed a few bills to a third reading.

In the Senate, Mar. 2, the majority report on Indianapolis' charter was defeated and restored to its normal condition; Barnes-Loveland contest decided in favor of Loveland. The following bills were passed: Providing for the turning of the proceeds of the sale of lands belonging to the State into the school fund; appropriating $45,525.92 for the completion and equipment of the Southern Hospital for the Insane; enabling the Chicago Stocksyard Company to acquire property, etc., in Lake County for the operation of its business.

In the House—Appropriation bill considered in committee of the whole; investigating committee on Richmond asylum reported. The following bills were passed: Authorizing Marion County to issue $150,000 bonds to build a new jail; requiring corporations and associations, firms and persons engaged in mining and manufacturing to pay their employes once every two weeks; to prevent and punish fraudulent entries in horse-races; amending the Barrett law; prohibiting agents from placing insurance in companies not authorized by law to do business in this State, and providing that if insurance is so placed, and the companies in question fail to pay losses, the insured may recover from the agents who placed the insurance; amending an act relating to decedents' estates by providing that the husband can either take one-third of his deceased wife's estate or what the will gives him; empowering the trustees of the School for Feeble-minded Youth to fix the salaries of superintendent, principal and matron at not more than $1,500, $750, and $600, respectively, and providing that no child over sixteen years old shall be received as a ward of the institution; creating boards of trustees of firemen's pension funds in all cities having paid fire departments; applying the provisions of the Barrett law to the construction of drains; exempting Union soldiers and sailors from working on the public highways.

In the Senate, March 3, the following was passed: The City Charter bill for Indianapolis, practically as it came from the House; fee and salary legislative apportionment; substitute for Inman liability bill. House—Amendments to charter bill concurred in. Bill to raise State levy from 12 to 18 cents passed. Terre Haute metropolitan police bill passed over Governor's veto. World's Fair appropriation cut down to $45,000.

In the Senate March 4, bills passed appropriating $57,000 for Soldiers' Orphans' Home; amending election law so as to permit use of pasters; providing for the industrial education of the deaf and dumb, blind and feeble-minded by teachers and abolishing present contract system. House—Two-cent railroad fare bill passed. Resolution compelling temperence committee to report, adopted. Constitutional amendments all right. Fee and salary bill in conference.

In the Senate March 5, the law exempting lots of more than five acres from city taxation repealed. Bills passed, appropriating $20,000 to complete the soldiers' monument; also, levy of ½ cent on each $100 worth of taxable property; for additional levy of 6 cents for support of benevolent institutions; legislative and congressional apportionment bills passed over the Governor's veto. House—Congressional apportionment bill passed; also legislative apportionment bill over Governor's veto. Appropriation ready to go through.

Fee and salary bill agreed to by both houses March 6. Senate—The Kelley railroad insurance bill again fails because of lack of constitutional majority, several members dodging the vote; appropriation of $17,500 for Deaf and Dumb Asylum: bills passed, authorizing special levy for establishing industrial school in Indianapolis: making it a penitentiary offense for officers of banks to accept deposits when such banks are known by them to be insolvent; non-concurred in action of the House in reducing world's fair appropriation to $45,000. House—World's fair appropriation bills passed; also congressional apportionment bill over Governor's veto

The Mate to the "Mark Twain."

The first mate of the vessel, he of the fur cap, was a character. It was appropriate to find him in the "Mark Twain." He was bald and looked very old, but declared he was thirty.

"Ef you had been through what I hev, my travelin' stranger," quoth he, "you too would look like an example of the longest kind of long-gevity. My name figures prominently in history. I've been published in four hundred and thirty-nine newspapers and one almanac. I've been blown up by steamboats in twenty-two States and several Territories. On most occasions, everybody on board perished, except myself. Pieces of my skull is layin' round loose all up and down this river, and numerous of its tributaries. Awful? Yes. Once I was on board the 'Obiona.' I knew we were goin' to bust that afternoon, for it was about bustin' time with me, and bust we did. When I come down I couldn't find nothin'. Everything had blowed to dust, or gone so fur that nothin' was within visible distance. But, bless you!—that's nothin'. Minor catasterfies? Oh, yes. Once we smashed a wheel against a snag. Of course, when we progressed we went round and round, and so went round and round all the way down to New Orleans, describin' circles the whole time. We all got orful headaches owin' to the centripital tendency of the periphery.—Mark Twain.

At the carpet store—He—What do you think of this carpet I have selected for you, my dear? She (enthusiastically)—It would be hard to beat, my love.

Abraham's Birthplace.

Not far from Aleppo is situated the little village of Orfah (the ancient Ur of the Chaldees,) which is of great historical interest, it having been the birthplace of the patriarch Abraham. The inhabitants, mostly Arabs and Jews, still point out a small building lying outside the town which they declare to be the place where Abraham first saw the light. It is known among them as "the house of the friend of God."

Exchange of Professional Compliments.

To some pungent remarks of a professional brother a western lawyer began his reply as follows: "May it please this court; resting upon the couch of republican equality as I do, covered with the blanket of constitutional panoply as I am, and protected by the ægis of American liberty as I feel myself to be, I despise the buzzing of the professional insect who has just sat down, and defy his attempts to penetrate with his puny sting the interstices of my impervious covering.—Dry Goods Chronicle.

The brusque and fussy impulse of these days of false impression would rate down all as worthless because one is unworthy.

As if there were no motes in sunbeams!

Or comets among stars!

Or cataracts in peaceful rivers!

Because one remedy professes to do what it never was adapted to do, are all remedies worthless?

Because one doctor lets his patient die, are all humbugs?

It requires a fine eye and a finer brain to discriminate—to draw the differential line.

"They say" that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription have cured thousands.

"They say" for a weak system there's nothing better than the "Discovery," and that the "Favorite Prescription" is the hope of debilitated, feeble women who need a restorative tonic and bracing nervine.

And here's the proof—Try one or both. If they don't help you, tell the World's Dispensary Medical Association so, and you get your money back again.

"German Syrup"

J. C. Davis, Rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, Eufaula, Ala.: "My son has been badly afflicted with a fearful and threatening cough for several months, and after trying several prescriptions from physicians which failed to relieve him, he has been perfectly restored by the use of two bottles of Boschee's German Syrup. I can recommend it without hesitation." An Episcopal Rector. Chronic severe, deep-seated coughs like this are as severe tests as a remedy can be subjected to. It is for these long-standing cases that Boschee's German Syrup is made a specialty. Many others afflicted as this lad was, will do well to make a note of this.

J. F. Arnold, Montevideo, Minn., writes: I always use German Syrup for a Cold on the Lungs. I have never found an equal to it—far less a superior. ®

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

ERIN.

BY KIL COURTLAND.

'Tis in songland, and in dreamland
That I love to think of thee,
Like a radiant emerald flashing
In a zone of purple sea.

And where cotton-fields are whitening,
Down the gold-touched autumn lands,
I will sing thy songs, dear Erin!
Captive held in captive bands.

And I think of rights in shackles,
Flung behind dark prison bars—
Of thy lovely lakes, Killarney,
Silver tears dropped from the stars.

Oh, mavourneen! from thy harp strings
I would wring a happier chord,
For I cannot fight thy battles—
Oh! I cannot wield a sword.

I can only pluck the shamrock,
And its tiny leaves entwine
With the Southern rose and lily—
With the yucca and the pine;

Only tell thy wrongs in story,
Only chant thy anthems sweet,
If I cannot bring thee glory,
I can lay love at thy feet.

So in songland, and in dreamland,
Erin, oft I think of thee,
Like a radiant emerald flashing
In a zone of purple sea.

ANDERSON, S. C.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XXVIII—Continued.

"'Reginald, for Heaven's sake, tell me why you thus deal with me? Have I ever harmed you?'

"'You have by being in my way. Set aside your title, estates; yes, even,' he laughed horribly, when, after a pause, he added, 'your future bride are mine! All mine! To-night I announce to you, all think you dead, and virtually you are so!'

"'Reginald! Reginald!' I shrieked, as he disappeared from view; 'hear me, take all, but leave me liberty and Constance!'

"A mocking laugh was my only reply.

"From that hour I have seen no human face, heard no human voice!

"These walls, I know, are, several feet thick, built so that no sound can issue from them. Not a movement can be heard unless the panels are open, and then but faintly.

"So at once I knew, that to the world, what he had said was true, I was dead!

"Sometimes, even yet, I dream that this is but an idle fancy, and once again I wake to feel my chain, to loathe my prison.

"Then I seem to see my own loved Constance near me. I call upon her, but as I stretch out my hand to find her own the vision fades, and I know that it was an illusion of the brain. Yet the memory of those fearful words ever remains: 'Your future bride is mine, all mine!'

"Can this have become a truth?

"Has my darling forgotten me; does she, too, deem me dead?

"Oh, Constance! Constance!

"So I start from my bed with her name upon my fevered lips; I open my arms to clasp her to my bosom.

"In vain! I am alone! Horribly, truly alone!

"Often have I prayed to die!

"Life has become a weary burden, but my prayers are not heard. For some purpose of his own, God wishes me to live.

"Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight!

"For months, with a pencil which I have found in my pocket, have I, on scraps of paper torn from books, written and placed on the plate a wild prayer for at least pens, ink, and paper to amuse my lonely hours.

"Books were at hand, a wells-tored library being in my room, but I wanted writing materials—something besides this endless reading.

"At last, at last, my prayer is granted, and I have a new way to give vent to my feelings.

"Thank God for the privilege of writing.

"Here, now, have I written the cause and manner of my strange captivity. For no crime committed, no offense given to court or neighbor, I am yet a victim to a brother's jealous envy of my position and my funds; I am a close prisoner.

"One thing I have expected at his hands which as yet has not taken place; I mean starvation.

"I have thought that so selfish a being as he has proved himself to be would some day demur at the confinement consequent upon attending to my wants; I was sure he would wish to travel, or visit, away from Glendenning Hall.

"But I know his movements, I know his peculiar jerk, as he slides open the panels, and now, after eighteen years I am certain that no hand but his has opened them and given me my food.

"Such food!

"All cut up into mouthfuls (as they fear giving me a knife) mixed together upon one wooden plate.

"Sometimes I loathe the sight of this strange jumble, but whether I eat it or not, I always take it, fearing if I do not return the plate, even this nightly visit will cease, this meager food be stopped.

"I know now that he has married Constance.

"As I prayed for pens, ink, and paper, I always concluded, 'tell me, oh, tell me of Constance.'

"So with the paper came at last this cruel note:

"'I grant this one prayer. Never again dare send another line to me. If you do disobey in this, your food will stop, and you be left to starve. Once for all, I say, the world thinks you dead, and thinks Fitzroy your murderer. He was tried, and as your dead body was not found, acquitted, but all think him guilty. Under this suspicion, he left the country and no one knows whither went. I am Sir Reginald Glendenning, and your constant Constance has been my wife just sixteen years. This is the last communication you will ever receive from me. Beware how you send another line upon the shelves.'

"After reading this note I must have fainted, for when I next recollected anything I was lying on the floor in a pool of blood.

"In falling I had hit my head against the iron chain, and gashed open my forehead under my hair.

"Would to God that I had died then and there!

"I did not die; I lived, and crawled to my bed, where I lay until the rays of the sun penetrated through the one window in the ceiling.

"I lived, but my head whirls, my brain is dizzy, I fear I shall go mad!

"Oh, innocent, ruined brother!

"Oh, forgetful Constance!

"When shall I cease to think of these two?

CHAPTER XXIX.

Carle Elfenstein paused when he reached these last words, and large tears of sympathy still rolled over his cheeks, as they had often done during the reading, while every one of his intent listeners was similarly affected.

Conquering his emotion by an effort, he again read on:

"May 24, 18—Nearly seven years since I last wrote on these pages. Not once during that time has there been a change in my lot until to-night.

"To-night a different hand opened the panels.

"I knew instantly that it was not Reginald's.

"Something, certainly, must have happened to him.

"The jerk was wanting.

"A soft, uncertain way of pushing them apart attracted my attention.

"There was a longer pause, a seeming study of the modus operandi of the revolving shelves, and a slighter push made them turn more slowly.

"Yes, I am sure a stranger has been let into the secret of my confinement, and that stranger, I think, must be a timid woman.

"My God! perhaps it is Constance!

"Can it be? Can she have the heart, even under compulsion, to keep me here a prisoner? Can she know that it is I, her former devoted lover, to whom she now offers this revolting food?

"Anything but that, oh, God! Anything but that!

"I cannot eat this stuff, fearing that my once loved darling deals it out to me.

"But she is afraid!

"I know it by her want of strength, by her feeble pushes. Sometimes she can hardly whirl the shelves, so I softly creep to her assistance, and with my own hands help them around. For the world I would not alarm her by the slightest noise.

"My poor Constance!

"I have been thinking so much, lately, that my head constantly aches. Indeed it always aches since I cut myself so badly in falling on my chain, seven years ago.

"But, as I said, I have been thinking.

"I have been studying the manner in which those iron shelves are fastened, and to-day I again examined the screws.

"Only screws keep them in their places, and a knife would surely aid me to unscrew them; then I could push them over, and as I know the workings of the panels, I could soon be free.

"To be sure I am chained!

"But a knife would also unloose this chain, sever these bonds.

"A knife! A knife! God grant me a knife!

"Such is now my daily wish, my cry.

"A knife! A knife!

"June 6, 18——Something terrible has happened to my brain. I am wild! I am undone! I can remember nothing!

"Who am I? Where am I?

"Ah, yes; I have it! I was a peer; I am so no longer.

"I am a poor minister of the gospel, confined here for the sake of religion.

"I am, in short, Rev. Edwin C. Stiles.

"How strange that I am here! I can remember nothing.

"But I have a Bible, and I read and preach long sermons, and pray continually.

"Yes; some day I shall, I think, be released, by God's power, and then I shall devote myself to his cause.

"I shall preach the gospel.

"How strange my head feels! Sometimes I think I am going mad!

"I pray that I may not be mad.

"July 18.—I am preaching and praying constantly. Night and day I plead with God to send me a knife.

"Will my prayers be granted? Shall I ever have a knife? Can I ever cut my way out of this weary prison, out, to liberty, and preaching God's holy word?

"Heavenly Father, set me free, and my whole life shall be given to Thy work, Thy cause.

"July 19.—Glory be to God! Hallelujah! Amen!

"My prayer is heard! A knife came to me with my food; sent me, I presume, by accident. It was forgotten, and now it is mine!

"Accident did I say? No, no; it was sent by God in answer to my prayer.

"I shall write no more. I shall instantly get to work; I shall soon be a free man.

"But these pages, written as it were, with my heart's blood, I shall never once leave out of the reach of my hands.

"I am Rev. Edwin C. Stiles, a minister of the gospel, and these lines are my diplomas, my badge of office.

"Ha, ha; a knife is mine; my own! And now I shall work myself free!"

Elfenstein paused and passed his hand over his forehead in deep thought. A sudden idea had seized him; it was this: Ethel Nevergail and he must have been in the corridor when this poor creature escaped!

Yes; poor creature! These last lines told that he must have been insane, or nearly so, at least, when he escaped.

But he had no time to think; a few more words remained to be read and his audience were eagerly waiting. These were written in pencil and the letters were crooked and feeble, as though done in great weakness.

"August 18, —— I am sick, dying perhaps! O, joy if this should prove to be death!

"I am weary, tired, worn out, but I thank God I am again myself.

"Now I know I am Sir Arthur Glendenning. Lately I have been confused and thought myself a minister.

"My brain, my poor brain, was unstrung. At last I am myself.

"A knife came to me and I took out the screws from the shelves, opened the panels after pushing the shelves aside and escaped from my prison.

"In the corridor I came upon a young girl and a man.

"Strangers; I knew that at once. Both were strangers. Yet I feared recapture.

"I rushed forward, dashed the light from them and then another frenzy seized me and my poor head nearly burst with pain.

"I uttered a cry in my agony. Then another, as I rushed through the well-known ruins.

"My God! had those cries betrayed me?

"Would Reginald pursue and drag me back? I vowed not. I would be wary. I would utter no more cries, even if I died in suppressing them.

"The night air revived me.

"Blessed air. I had not felt its cheering influence, drawn a fresh mouthful of outside air, in twenty-five years.

"I opened my mouth, I expanded my chest, I drank it all in.

"What cared I for the storm, the howling wind, the falling rain.

"It was delight, it was rapture! I was free! I was free!

"I knew not where to go, but sped away, away, and rested not, until I was hidden in the cave in Demon's wood.

"There I slept and rested. There I quieted my overwrought nerves, and thanked God for the blessed knife that He, and He alone, had sent me.

"Morning came, and again I tried to think.

"My brain seemed heavy, and I could scarcely remember my own name.

"But it came to me after a while. Rev. Edwin C. Stiles, a minister of the gospel. But how could I preach in these threadbare clothes? I must get suitable garments. I had money; I always had had money. I had it in my pocketbook when cast into prison. My persecutors did not rob me.

"So I took the cars and went to Liverpool, where I bought a suit of clerical clothes, and books and papers, to sell for Christ.

"I also bought a little wallet, in which to lock up these pages. Something tells me I must never part with these papers.

"Yes; I have them safe. Now, lying here, the wallet is safe in my hands.

"I returned to the village then, and must have wandered around, selling my books, as Rev. Edwin C. Stiles.

"But now I am sane. My senses have returned. I am Sir Arthur Glendenning, and I am dying!

"I know I must have been insane, or partly so, for the last few weeks; but, thank God, my mind is clear, perfectly clear to-night.

"It came back to me in such a strange, unlooked-for way!

"It came back, and I found myself standing at the foot of Reginald's bed, in my own old room, at Glendenning Hall.

"I stood there, I say, gazing into his eyes, and he seemed very ill.

"Horrible! How he glared when he saw me silently looking down at him!

"He half raised himself, as if to push me off, and shrieked out:

"'Great God! Mercy! Mercy!'" then fell back senseless upon his pillow.

"I could endure no more.

"Horrified at finding myself in his presence, and fearing another imprisonment, I turned and fled.

"Fled! Yes, fled! Fled from my own room, my own house, my own brother, back to this cave, where I immediately was taken ill, and could scarcely move for days.

"I had food to last for a week or more, and I crawled out, once in a while, for water.

"But now food has gone. I am too weak to drag myself to the spring. I thirst. I am burning with fever. I think I shall die!

"But if I do, what of it?

"God knows best.

"But supposing I do not die. What then?

"Shall I make myself known, and so expose my brother, and reclaim the title and estate he has wrested from me?

"Never! Never!

"He is my brother, child of the same parents, and—the husband of my lost love!

"Poor Constance! She shall never be made sad by acts of mine. She shall not shed a tear over the loss of wealth, title, or reputation, if I can help it.

"But, blessed be the name of the Lord, I shall never sigh for my lost home, for I am going to a rich inheritance above; 'A house not made with hands eternal in the heavens.'

"I know by my waning breath, my fading sight, that this is death!

"Farewell earth! I shall write no more; but with my latest sigh, I thank God that I die a free man."

How the Dress Coat Came.

Perhaps few men who wear the conventional clawhammer coat are aware of its origin. Mr. W. W. Story, in his delightful Conversations in a Studio, says: The dress coat is the great product of the French revolution.

The old coat out of which it was created was not beautiful in itself, but it had a certain character and effect as a costume. It was long in skirt and buttoned across the chest. The sleeves were loose and turned up, with facings from beneath; while in full dress, lace ruffles depended over the hand.

Also the coat was faced with a different colored lining, which it showed when unbuttoned. In walking, the skirts, faced also, were turned back and buttoned up to two buttons on the back.

Gradually it was lopped and reduced to the thing it now is. The skirts in front were cut away instead of being turned back. But the two foolish buttons behind were still kept after their use had gone.

The front was permanently turned back, and the coat made too narrow to button, the foolish cuts now remaining in the collar representing the old division of the front lappets.

As time went on more and more of the skirts were cut away, until they were reduced to the ridiculous swallow-tail in which Beau Brummel said there was safety. The collar was piled up behind the facings and colors were done away with, and thus little by little grew up the glorious thing called a dress coat.

How History Is Made.

Excited Congressman (addressing the House)—I say it is an infamous falsehood, Mr. Speaker, originating in a heart as black as the innermost dungeon in the lowest pit of perdition, uttered by lips, sir, from whose mildest breathings the demons of pestilence itself would shrink in unutterable horror, and emanating from a personality in whose presence the foul fiends of envy, calamity, treachery and assassination, sir, would bow their hideous heads and acknowledge that they had found a meaner, viler, more leprous and abominable creature than themselves!

Same Congressman (reading same speech a few hours later as revised for the Congressional Record)—Permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that my conception of the dignity that pertains to the position I hold, and my appreciation of the constituency I have the honor of representing on the floor of this House, forbid me from descending to the plane of personal abuse in replying to the insinuations that have been made by the honorable gentleman on the other side. I shall content myself by merely challenging the honorable gentleman to produce the proofs of his innuendoes. Passing on now to the consideration of the main question at issue, etc.—Washington Post.

He's a Highflier.

"Say, Cashem," said honest old Hezekiah Plowshare to the cashier of the Jaytown National Bank, "I want to send $500 to my boy over in Paris."

"Titian?" asked Cashem. "He's getting to be a great painter, isn't he? He's been studying art now a long time."

"Gosh, yes," replied Hezekiah. "He's climbing way up to the top. Wrote me the other day he had painted the hull of Paris an' wanted to begin on Rome. Says he'll make them Romans howl when he shows 'em what he kin do. That's why I'm sendin' him the stuff. I'm mighty proud of that boy of mine, I kin tell you."—Chicago Times.

THE worst nuisance which can afflict any community is not some mischief-making, backbiting, lying, irresponsible, characterless hussy, but it is the male member of society who is necessarily an ignorant, gabbling egotist, whom nobody believes, but whom everybody distrusts and fears as pernicious household pests are feared. When you encounter such a pest, you should shun him as you would the leprosy, for his chief food is the good name of woman and the character of man. He is a moral assassin, and is too contemptible to associate even with the vile. You must give such a cur a wide berth.—Pullman (Ill.) Journal.

CAST forward the eye of the spirit; awake in your souls the imaginative power, which carries forth what is fairest, what is highest life, away beyond the stars.—Goethe.

HUMOR.

Not the Right Sort.

Applicant—"I see you advertise for a college graduate to take a position in your business."

Publisher—"Yes. Are you a graduate?"

"I am."

"What place did you hold in the college eleven?"

"I did not play football. I was afraid of getting crippled."

"You won't do. I want a man for book agent."—New York Weekly.

He Congratulated.

Amateur Actor (who has just concluded a performance of the part of Hamlet, to a friend, who had been one of audience)—Well, old fellow, don't you feel inclined to congratulate some one?

Friend—Indeed I do.

Amateur (with vainglorious mien)—May I so far infringe on modesty as to ask his name?

Friend—Certainly. His name is Shakspeare, and I heartily congratulate him on his unavoidable absence.

She Had Heard of Such.

"I hear that a German Count is paying you marked attention," said Dora to Lou.

"Yes," assented Lou, shyly.

"What is his name?"

"Augustus."

"You call him Gus, don't you?"

"Yes; why?"

"And he's your beau, isn't he?"

"W-w-why, yes, I suppose so. But why are you asking these questions?"

"O, nothing, but I've heard of beau Gus counts before."

The Doctor's Orders.

First Chappie—I say, ole chappie, the doctah says I must-aw-take more exercise or I'll be sick, don't you know.

Second Chappie—Do as the doctah says, me boy.

First Chappie—Ya-as, I'm going to discha'ge me vally and tie me own necktie.—Street & Smith's Good News.

Overloaded.

Boy—Say, mister, shall I carry yer satchel? Do it fer a dime.

Dude—My satchel is not heavy.

Boy—Well let me carry your cane then.—Street & Smith's Good News.

A Hero.

Mr. Sturtevant Knickerbocker, a young married man, expects to go out to Colorado on business, but his mother-in-law has been telling him that it is too dangerous on account of the Indians.

"Nonsense!" replied Knickerbocker; "I'm not afraid of Indians."

"Very well," replied his wife's mother, "when you get out on the plains and one of those wild beasts comes at you whooping and yelling, then you will think of me."

"I don't doubt it," replied Knickerbocker. And now the entente cordiale has been spilled and there is a coolness between them.—Texas Siftings.

Affording a Possible Explanation.

Mr. Mudguard Crippling (eminent foreigner)—You Americans are too sensitive. Why cawn't you take my criticisms good-naturedly?

American Publisher—You want to make us pay too steep for them.—Chicago Tribune.

Which Is Human Nature.

Very few people can be found who will admit that they believe in ghosts or who are willing to walk through a graveyard alone at the witching hour of 1 a. m.—Somerville Journal.

Too Much Iron.

Doctor—Did you get that mixture of wine and iron that I ordered?

Deacon Waters—Yes; it was first-rate. Never enjoyed a bottle of medicine better in my life. Drank it up without takin' breath. But, Doctor, there was too much iron in it.

Doctor—Humph! So I should imagin'.

Deacon Waters—Yes, the iron all went to my feet and made 'em so heavy I could hardly walk.—New York Weekly.

From the City.

Deacon Hardscrabble (to passenger requiring three seats for himself and baggage)—You are from the city, I presume?

Mr. Shoat—Yes; how did you know it?

Deacon Hardscrabble—Oh, we butchered our country hogs three months ago.

Lame in German; Up in English.

Uncle Wanderson—Glad you did, Pen'lope. That mizzerable hired girl o' yourn tried t' hide th' pillers from me; but, ding her! I found 'm under them curtains.—Judge.

Too Young to Be Reverend.

A very amusing story is told about a young clergyman who does not live over a hundred miles from here, who had gone to supply the vacant pulpit of a church in a certain village. He was just out of the theological seminary, and had an extremely boyish appearance. A little before the hour the new minister made his way almost unnoticed into the pulpit, where he was concealed by the reading desk in front of him. But an old lady who sat close on the right of the pulpit in consideration of her deafness, was much concerned to see a boy in the place of the expected clergyman. So she arose very softly, stepped on tip-toe to the pulpit stairs, and beckoning with her forefinger, whispered loudly, in coaxing accents: "Come down, my boy; you mustn't sit there. That's the place for the minister!"—Akron Farm News.

The greatest improvement in Corsets during the past twenty years is the use of Coraline in the place of horn or whalebone. It is used in all of Dr. Warner's Corsets and in no others.

The advantages of Coraline over horn or whalebone are that it does not become set like whalebone, and it is more flexible and more durable.

Dr. Warner's Coraline Corsets are made in twenty-four different styles, fitting every variety of figures—thin, medium, stout, long waists and short waists.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

A GRAND INVESTMENT for the Family, the School, or the Library.

Revision has been in progress for over 10 Years. More than 100 editorial laborers employed. $300,000 expended before first copy was printed. Critical examination invited. Get the Best. Sold by all Booksellers. Illustrated pamphlet free.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

Presently, when we think that we have caught cold or the measles, or something, we shall be exclaiming, "Dear me! I must have taken a microbe."

Consumption Surely Cured.

To The Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Dr. Yeagy was over to Auburn Saturday.

Mr. Ash, of Butler, was in town on Tuesday.

Mrs. S. DeLong, of Auburn, was at Waterloo on Tuesday.

F. N. Beidler was at Auburn the first of the week on business.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Nolton last week Monday.

Dr. Chamberlain, who has been so seriously ill, is better at last accounts.

The schools are having a vacation for a few days. The furnace is being overhauled.

Mrs. McBride, of Elkhart, went to Auburn from here to attend the funeral of Sam'l Ralston.

Mrs. S. J. Hill, of California, Mich., is here visiting her daughter, Mrs. Carpenter and family.

Mrs. Dr. S. B. Johnston and Mrs. J. A. Barns were the guests of F. N. Beidler on Tuesday of this week.

Mr. McNutt, of Fort Wayne, is in Waterloo for the purpose of buying horses for street car service.

The brick building on the corner of Wayne and Railroad streets is occupied at present with a notion store.

George Morrell went to Elkhart Monday hoping to secure a dwelling house. As soon as that is accomplished they will remove there.

Rev. Mr. Wilmonth, of Blissfield, Mich., is assisting Rev. Mr. Loudy with the revival meeting in the U. B. church. They are meeting with some success.

Last week a surprise party was given at Mr. St. Clair's, corner of Maple and Franklin streets. Your correspondent didn't hear by whom or any particulars.

Dr. Chamberlain has been quite sick for a few days. He is better now. Mrs. McBride, of Elkhart, came down last week to see her father while he was quite low.

We learn that Miss Minnie McCray will resign her position as Court stenographer at the close of this term of court, to accept the same position at her home in Fostoria.

Tuesday evening, March 10th, a pound party is to be given at the Evangelical parsonage, to Rev. Mr. Mygrant and family. Conference is only about two weeks in the future and shortly after Mr. Mygrant will take his family to another home, as he has been in Waterloo the longest period allowed at one time.

Glancing over a periodical several weeks since, under the head of "Notes on House Furniture and Decoration," occurred in substance the following: "No one in these days buys any but brass or iron bedsteads." This was recalled a few days later upon reading an item in the Fort Wayne Gazette as copied below: "Chamberlain, S. D., Feb. 27.—Annuity goods, consisting of the wagons, modern iron bedsteads, with patent woven bottoms and fine, hair, mattresses and pillows to match, and an endless variety of household goods are now being issued to the Sioux Indians at Lower Bend Agency." It might be interesting to know how many families in Auburn and Waterloo are provided throughout with brass or iron bedsteads with patent woven bottoms, fine hair mattresses and pillows to match, and an endless variety of household goods to correspond? In the opinion of the writer, this nonsense over the Indian is a big humbug. If their lands have been bought on the condition that houses, elegant furniture, food and clothing shall be supplied them to the end of time, then the sooner any such silly arrangement is overturned the better.

CORUNNA.

Mrs. Grundy reports a wedding in our town in the near future.

George Becker, of Kendallville, was on our streets Friday afternoon.

Dr. Nusbaum, of Auburn, was in town Thursday of last week.

Finch & Dawson shipped a load of stock to Buffalo last Saturday.

I. Metz and son Emery, of Hudson, passed through here Monday.

Dr. Rudolph, of Fairfield Center, was in town Saturday for a short time.

Miss Nellie Britton, of Garrett, spent Sunday with her mother, Mrs. I. Reed.

Miss Della Orr has recovered from the the grip sufficiently to be around again.

The long talked of banquet at the K. P. hall comes off Thursday evening of this week.

Mrs. Swartz, of Garrett is visiting with her parents, J. Shook and wife, west of town.

Mrs. Chas. Knapp, Inez and Karl were on the sick list several days last week, but are all improving.

J. McCollough moved his household goods to Garrett Monday, where he has been working for some time.

A lady friend of Mrs. Chatten's, who has been visiting her several days, returned home Wednesday of last week.

Miss Grace Thomas, who has been visiting with her sister, Mrs. J. DeLong, left Monday for her home at Bloomingdale, Mich.

Mr. J. Becker, wife and children, and Mrs. Jennie Adams and little Harvie, spent Sunday with Mr. Becker's people south of town.

The box social at the Cline Hotel, Saturday night, was quite a success. The proceeds go toward paying for the organ at the Disciple church.

J. E Hammon left here Monday morning for Ann Arbor, to see his cousin, N. Griffith, who has been there several weeks for medical treatment.

Miss Ella Goodwin, of Waterloo, gave a musicale at the home of Miss Rose Hall, on Tuesday evening, in which all of her scholars took a part. Miss Goodwin takes a great interest in her music class.

FAIRVIEW.

Bertie Krise is at home this week.

James W. May is on the sick list.

Chas. Koch was at Auburn, Saturday.

Mrs. Parsons is very ill with heart disease.

Mr. Johnston, who has been very sick, is better.

Romeo Hoffman is now having a siege of lung fever.

Preaching at the church Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

Florence Freece is working for Mr. Parsons at present.

Della Koch, who has been quite sick, is now able to be around again.

Thos. Rickett thinks of making his residence at St. Joe, in the near future.

James Smith moved to Huntertown, last week, where has secured a position as teamster.

Mr. and Mrs. John Moor, of Jackson Center, are visiting Mrs. M's parents, Joseph Koch and wife.

Grandma Krise is very seriously afflicted with heart disease, and little hope is entertained for her recovery.

Romeo Hoffman entertained quite a number of his young friends Monday evening, it being his twenty-first birthday.

Miss Ettie Fretz, one of Auburn's popular young ladies, who has been the guest in the family of J. W. May, the past few days, returned to her home on Thursday.

There seems to be but few families in this neighborhood that have no sickness. If we were to try to mention those whom the grip and catarrhal fever have been the source of suffering, we would be lost mid the impossibilities of the undertaking.

HOPEWELL.

Miss Amy Bailey is on the sick list.

Little Freddie Peters is slowly recovering.

J. Houston visited the family of A. Keesler Sunday.

Miss Nora Romine spent a day last week at Ft. Wayne.

The literary at No. 9, was largely attended Friday evening.

Mrs. Geo. Reinhold is suffering from a severe attack of the grip.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Snyder are happy over the advent of a little girl.

Rev. S. L. Valentine delivered a very interesting sermon Sunday evening.

Miss Rickie Bartlee is the guest of her sister, Mrs. J. H. Harkey, of Butler township, this week.

H. D. Lochner and wife, of Wayne, spent a few day last week visiting relatives in the vicinity.

Mrs. L. Reed and daughter Maggie entertained a number of lady friends at their home last Thursday.

Misses Alda and Etta Lige, of Freeman's Corners, spent Sunday with their grandma, Mrs. Margret Bailey.

Miss Jennie Bruce, of Garrett, was the guest of Lottie Houston and Sarah Lochner Saturday and Sunday.

Henry Bartles who has been spending a part of the winter at Chicago and South Bend returned to his home last week.

Mrs. Louisa Bowen and daughter Dora, of Auburn, and Mrs. Mason Bowen, of Hicksville, Ohio, are the guests of Mrs. Dora Depew.

CONCORD.

Wm. Shutt remains about the same.

I. B. Goldsmith died Sunday evening.

It is Jacob Baker that now sings "baby mine."

The social at Mrs. Mansfield's was a success financially.

Mrs. Clyde Woodcox, of Auburn Junct., visited relatives here this week.

Mrs. Frank Stafford returned to her home near Auburn last Sabbath.

Smith & Deetz delivered several loads of hay for R. B. Clear, Saturday.

Mrs. Shilling, of Auburn, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Eli Showalter.

Mrs. Clara Clark, of St. Joe, visited her parents, G. Howey and wife last week.

S. S. Shutt attended the funeral of his sister near Akron, Ohio, last Tuesday.

Rev, S. S. Stanton delivered his farewell sermon in the old Concord church.

Samuel Woodburn Ralstons

The subject of this notice was born in Washington county, Pa., Dec. 12, 1807, and died at his home in Auburn, Ind., March 6, 1891, at the advanced age of 83 years, 2 months and 24 days. He was the fourth of the ten children of Robert and Jane (Woodburn) Ralston. The family removed to Richland county, Ohio, in 1841, and settled in that part that has since been separated and called Ashland county. Here he was reared to manhood, receiving such education as was obtainable in those days, though perhaps on a more liberal scale than many of his less fortunate neighbors. When sixteen he began to learn the carpenter's trade, which he followed for twenty-five years. Jan. 30, 1834, he was married to Eliza J. Brink, of Plymouth, Ohio, who survives him, they having been married, at the date of his death, over 57 years. To them four children were born, Helen M., who died in 1855; Emily A., Andrew J., and George C. In 1837 he made a trip to this county, with a view to locating a home. He entered the land now owned by Jesse Brumbeck, and bought of Wesley Park a tract of land now known as the Benner farm, near the Junction. The deed, made April 30, 1837, was the sixth put on record in the county. The next year he bought of Thomas Freeman, the lots on Main street, one now occupied by the Swineford House, and the other one on which he built the present Ralston homestead, just south. He also owned the lots to the west, and across Jackson street, and gave the site, and helped to build the old Presbyterian church, which still stands by the Brant residence. He moved his family here in the fall of 1842, coming the long journey with a wagon, reaching Auburn on his 35th birthday, Dec. 12, 1842. After his arrival he worked at his trade about a year and a half, and then went into mercantile business with Nelson Payne, in which he continued till elected sheriff of the county, at the election of Aug. 7, 1846, receiving 340 votes to 234 for Lyman Chidsey. He was re-elected Aug. 7, 1848, having a majority of 225 over Daniel Altenberg. At the end of this term, in 1850, he was elected treasurer of the county, Aug. 5, beating Bushrod Catlin by a vote of 774 to 267. He declined a renomination in 1852. In 1856 he was elected, Oct. 14, county sheriff over Isaac Brant, and Oct. 12, 1858, was again elected sheriff, this time running against O. C. Clark, serving till 1860. In 1862 he went again into mercantile business, retiring from that in 1880. At the April election in 1884 he was elected justice of the peace, in this township, beginning his four years term May 2, 1885. In 1888 he was re-elected, and while serving this second term he was elected a third time in April, 1890, as the election law had been changed so the next one would be four years ahead, or in April 1894. This last term he never reached. It would have begun May 2, 1893, and ended the same date in 1897.

The funeral services were at the home where he had lived so long, Monday, March 9, at 10, a. m. The sermon was by Rev. George Ward Healy, of the Presbyterian church, who spoke very appropriately and feelingly, and the great audience—many of them life-long neighbors, were deeply moved. His remains were laid to rest in a most beautiful and commanding location in the South Circle in Woodlawn cemetery. His aged wife, who has been confined to her room by sickness for some weeks, as well as all the members of the bereaved family, have the sympathy of all our people.

Mr. Ralston had always been a man of strong will, but of a kind heart. In all his dealings with his fellow men, he was honest in all the word implies, and conscientious even against his own interests. He was exact and careful in all his business, and always thoughtful, first of the interests of those for whom he was doing business. This was often noticed, even in the smallest matters that of late years came through his hands as a justice. If even small collections were made, he never rested till he had delivered them to the owner, often walking quite a distance to do this. He would not sue a man till he had notified him and given him a chance to settle without.

And so, full of years and honors, having lived to a greater length of days than is usually given to the life of man, having seen the wilderness changed to blooming fields and dotted with happy homes, and the little settlement where he first cast his lot with us, become a prosperous and beautiful town, with his family about him, with the consciousness that his long life work had left them the rich inheritance of an honored name, he passed peacefully from the scenes of busy life, where for nearly half a century he had been one of the busiest, and always a central figure.

D. C. Headley.

Mr. Headley was born in Concord township, on the farm now owned and occupied by Byron A. Hadsell, Oct. 25, 1839, and died at Chicago, Ill., March 2, 1891, aged 51 years, 4 months and 7 days. His parents were Samuel and Rebecca (Woodcox) Headley. At the age of fifteen he learned the plasterer's trade, and from that time earned his own livlihood, though at times assisting his father in his store. In 1859 he went to California and teamed across the mountains from Virginia City to Sacramento till 1863, when in December, he returned to this county and worked on a farm near Newville till the next March, when he enlisted in Co. H. Eighty-eight Indiana, and served till August 1865, when he was discharged at Indianapolis. He had joined his regiment at Graysville, Georgia, and participated in all the engagements of Sherman's army till the close of the war. After his return to Newville, he went to Marshalltown, Iowa, but returned in 1868 to DeKalb county. He was again in Iowa during the summer of 1869 but on his return here became a partner with Joseph Rainier in the livery business till the fall of 1871. In 1872 he went into the boot and shoe business with John Greenamver, in Butler, but next year they moved their stock to Hudson in Steuben county. In June, 1874, having bought out his partner he moved back to Auburn, and in September sold out his stock. He was variously engaged till 1881. He was then appointed by Joseph Rainier as assistant postmaster holding this position till Jan. 16, 1882. Since then he has been associated with Mr. Rainier in the City meat market the firm name being Rainier & Headley and has been connected with that firm ever since. In the spring of 1890 Mr. Headley was elected marshal of the town of Auburn and filled the place acceptably, till failing health compelled him to resign in December of the same year. He then went to Chicago for treatment for kidney disease, and again went there February 16, at which time he had a severe operation performed. All seemed favorable for a while but he then grew worse, blood poison having set in. Mr. Rainier was summoned and reached his bedside a few hours after his death. Mr. Headley was married to Corlanthia R. Parks, of Marshall county, Ind. April 10, 1873, who survives him. He was a faithful and consistent member of the M. E. church, and his funeral took place from the new church, on Thursday, March 5, the sermon being by Rev. H M. Lamport. The G. A. R. and W. R. C. were out in full force and added greatly to the solemn ceremonies of the occasion. The pall bearers were members of his own regiment and company. He was laid to rest in the Evergreen cemetery. There were quite a number of his old comrades from Waterloo, Butler, and other places, and the outpouring of citizens showed the respect in which he was held by those who had known him so long. He leaves his wife in comfortable circumstances, his will giving her all his property. He was connected in a business way with Mr. Rainier for about twenty-six years, and by his honest and upright dealing, he won the esteem of all who had business relations with him. Memorial services were held in G. A. R. hall Sunday afternoon.

Obituary.

Elizabeth Littler Canon, was born in Hardy Co., Virginia, Nov. 30, 1813, and died of consumption, Jan. 7, 1891, at the age of 77 years, 1 month, and 7 days, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. A. Barberet, 51 Swift Place, Chicago, Ill.

Mother Canon moved with her parents to Crawford Co. Ohio, at the age of 19, where she was married to Alexander M. Canon, Aug. 6, 1835. She was converted at the age of fifteen and joined the M. E. church, of which she was a faithful member until she was called to the church Triumphant. She was the mother of eleven children, six of whom are living and have families. Sister Canon was a great sufferer. She had been confined to her bed for five years and longed for release. The church has had few brighter examples of firm christian faith than that displayed by her. The writer was frequently by her bed-side during the last days of her illness, and amid all her suffering, she showed the same implicit trust in God that had marked her former years. When we last saw her, she was sinking rapidly and was suffering acutely, often gasping for breath; but, between her paroxisms of pain, she proclaimed her faith in Him who had conquered death for her.

J. J. MAILEY.

She was brought to Auburn and laid to rest beside her husband and some other members of the family who had gone before. The funeral was at the M. E. church, the services being conducted by the pastor Rev. H. M Lamport. She had many warm friends here who gathered that day to pay their last respects to a most worthy woman, their former neighbor.

A Pioneer Gone.

Died, at his home in Franklin township, March 4, 1891, George Firestone, at the age of 79 years, 8 months and 4 days. Mr. Firestone was born in Stark county, Ohio, June 30, 1811, a son of George Firestone, a native of Hagerstown, Va., and an early settler in Stark county. Oct. 9, 1832, he was united in Marriage to Catherine Krum, and to them were born thirteen children, three of whom, with their mother, preceded him to the better world. Oct. 1836, he, with his then small family came to DeKalb county and settled on the farm, which he occupied at his death. His first wife died April 1, 1870, and the next fall he was married to Mrs. Mary McIntyre, who died some years after. In 1879, March 2, he married Mrs. Mercy Cook, who survives him. He was a man, who through all his long life secured the respect of those around him. Thus passes away, another of that brave band of pioneers who risked all, for a home in the new county of DeKalb. Mr. Cather, under whose leadership he had joined the M. E. church in 1855, was present at the funeral, assisting Rev. Mr. Wilcox. The burial was at Hamilton.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

Noblesville ministers all denounced the demoralizing show paper posted up over their town by a burlesque company, soon to appear there, in their sermons.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1845.

(Mr. Bliss' letter Continued.)

"In reviewing the past we see many things for which we are truly thankful to our Heavenly Father. We have a comfortable home, little besides. We have two single daughters, one married, the younger of the two is teaching in St. Paul, Minn., one only son, a little boy when we left Auburn lives there. We should be glad to hear from any of the Auburn people."

Could Rev. Bliss and his worthy wife be permitted to visit Auburn, the metamorphosis which time and the railroads have brought about would prove a revelation to them. Few indeed of the ancient landmarks exist and yet fewer are the numbers of those with him in those early years, each in his calling, labored for the growth of moral, educational and religious sentiments, in the warfare with evil influences which here as elsewhere early became deeply rooted in the business part of town.

The history of Auburn has its dark side and the shadows have deepened with the years bringing wealth to the coffers of a few, but want, misery, heartaches and sorrowful and untimely deaths to many homes.

From pleasing retrospection of church growth and Sabbath observance turn to the pioneer days of the liquor vender and note the unvarying and baneful results which in all this half century have followed in its train.

Respect for the feelings of those living, sympathy for the dead forbid the publication of details of the ruinous effects of the liquor traffic, but we may note that the tavern had a bar and that licenses for the sale of spirits were exacted even in those days when the practice of drinking was more general, when public sentiment was not as pronounced against it, when the doggery was not euphonized a "saloon" and when the teetotalers with cold water pledge were forerunners of the modern political prohibitionists.

Pioneer sketches said: "Old Mr. Hart kept a doggery near where J. L. Davis has his hardware store." In list of allowances made by the board of commissioners in 1845, we find William Hart allowed 75cts. for one bottle of pepper sauce for a pauper. If this was the same party S. Widney alluded to it would seem that he had the material to make his drinks hot as well as stimulating to customers.

T. J. Freeman was Auburn's first licensed whisky seller and in 1845, his success incited O. A. Parsons to engage in the business, as the record shows that he paid $5.00 for license to keep tavern and to sell spiritous liquors in Auburn.

In 1847, Alonzo Plum was charged $10.00 for a license to keep a grocery and retail spirituous liquors; later the fee was $15, and it has constantly tended higher till the town and county license amounts to $150.

A single instance of the merciless spirit shown to the victim of thirst for stimulant will close this article.

S. W. Russel was a pioneer of Auburn, a carpenter and joiner by trade and he erected several of its old-time buildings but his craving for drink was beyond his control. Urged by desperation to try to reclaim her husband and to preserve a semblance of a home, Mrs. Russel did as other women in like extremity have done since. She went one morning to the keeper of a groggery and with all the eloquence of her need, implored his help to save her husband by refusing to let him have liquor, but it was all in vain and Russel died a drunkard as many another has done since, and as many in Auburn, in the closing year of the century will.

Of Interest to Writers.

A labor saving invention indispensable to all who write. Of the many valuable improvements which have been made in self-feeding pens a great part are due to the skill and persistence of Mr. L. E. Dunlap, of Boston, who, as a pioneer in this business, has spent the last decade in perfecting the fountain pen that bears his name. The latest perfected invention is the Dunlap Double-feed Pen, and in this very double-feed lies the secret of success. It carries a sixteen-karat diamond pointed gold pen and is a perfect pocket-companion that will not only prove indispensable, but a joy and blessing as long as life lasts. It is guaranteed to write instantly, always and under all circumstances. To introduce it among the readers of this paper the manufacturers offer for a short time only, to send it by return mail at one half the regular price. By posting a letter, enclosing a two-cent stamp, to the Dunlap Pen Company, 280 Washington street, Boston, Mass., you will receive beautiful engraved ticket worth $2, and also an illustrated price-list and circular telling you how to make $5 per day.

Confederate Prisoners on their Travel.

(From "Plain Living at Johnson's Island," in the March Century.)

We were to be sent to Johnson's Island, Lake Erie.

Our route lay over the Erie railroad, and we made the trip on parole. The guards placed at each door of our coach were for our comfort only, as we were objects of marked curiosity during the trip and would have been overrun with visitors had not admittance been refused. At the different stations we mingled freely with the people on the platform and found them, with few exceptions, courteous but inquisitive. We were no doubt, a disappointing lot. There was nothing in our apparel to mark the Rebel soldier, and as we mingled with the crowd surprise was freely expressed that we were not as their fancy painted us, though just what shape that fancy took I never learned. The ladies, it was the case both North and South, were intensely patriotic, and read us severe and no doubt salutary lectures on the evil of our ways, which were submissively and courteously received and duly pondered. There was one question that you could safely wager would be asked by five out of ten, and that was, "Do you honestly think you are right?" This conundrum was offered to me so often that where time allowed, being in President Lincoln's country, I answered in President Lincoln's style by stating that it "reminded me," and told them of the couple who took their bridal trip on an ocean steamer with the usual result. As the husband would return from sundry trips to the rail of the vessel his young wife would inquire, "Reginald, darling, are you sick?" To which he at last replied, "Good Heavens! Rebecca, do you think I am doing this for fun?"

An unknown woman, 70 years old, was found on the street in Jeffersonville Friday night, in an unconscious condition. She was tenderly cared for, but will die from exposure.

Spring Prospects.

Who says the prospects for a good spring business being done in this town, are not encouraging? No one dare say it. The encouragement offered in this direction is very gratifying, to say the least. Our business men have, most all of them, secured large and carefully selected stocks of seasonable goods, which are being disposed of at a reasonably rapid rate. In fact, many of them have, and are still enlarging their business rooms and storage capacities, in order to meet the demands of an increased trade. In walking along Fifth street, in the vicinity of the L. S. & M. S., depot, a few days since, our attention was attracted by some very noticeable changes that are being made at the lumber yard of A. Lewis. We were so forcibly impressed with the appearance of things about this particular premises, that an interview immediately followed, in which it was learned that Mr. Lewis is putting up a substantial building 50 ft. wide, 60 ft. long and 16 ft. high This building, when completed, will afford a dry place for about 300,000 feet of lumber, and it will be used excusively for the storage of fine lumber used in finishing houses. It might be remarked right here, that keeping lumber perfectly dry, is decidedly a new feature in the business, and will add greatly to the quality of the lumber usually bought for finishing purposes. Mr. L., originated the idea somewhat, and is sparing no pains or expense in trying to make this one of the best equipped lumber yards in northeastern Indiana. Most lumber buildings are put up in a careless, indifferent manner and purchasers suffer no little inconvenience by having to take material that has been frequently soaked with water, because it was not properly cared for and protected from the weather, thus causing the best and highest-priced lumber to warp, check, split and disjoint after being fitted into the best of buidings, thereby making it impossible to do a first-class building with material so indifferently kept. Farmers, builders and contractors will appreciate the getting of what they pay for—dry lumber. Besides putting up essential buildings, and making many other necessary impovements, he is putting in an immense stock of building material, of a grade and quality that will satisfy the public patronage, both in prices and the manner in which business relations are made pleasant. Thirty carloads of choice white pine are being added to what remains of the old stock, which is intended to meet the wants of the building public. In the line of shingles he has something that will please. He has just received a car load of red cedar shingles from Tacoma, Wash. These are said to be the best now made. A roof made from them will last about three times as long as one made from the ordinary white pine, and the cost of a cedar roof is but little more than that of the pine. It will be readily seen that Mr. Lewis' 800 feet of shedding room, in which his great stock is kept nice and dry, together with his seventeen years experience enables him to step out of the old rut, and offer to his patrons many favorable inducements heretofore unknown. He sends greeting and an invitation to call and see what he has in his line. While our thoughts are still running in this channel, we would say for the benefit of contractors and builders, who are in doubt as to what is commonly understood by the lien law, that it is a law which provides for those who should be compensated for their labor. The Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, of Indianapolis, sends out a notice to its members, of which, the following is a brief extract: "During the recent General Assembly of the State of Indiana, sec. 5, of the Lien law of 1889, that was found inoperative from having been maliciously altered, was repealed, and the old law which requires no SPECIAL NOTICE to be given to property owner or his agent, when performing work or delivering material, is once more in force." It will perhaps eliminate a great deal of inconvenience and misunderstanding in regard to this matter if our people take the pains to investigate the law in question.

THE FOREIGN MARKET.

WHAT THE FARMER SELLS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Statistics of Foreign Trade in Farm Products—Where the Bushel of Wheat and Barrel of Pork Go To—England Is the Farmer's Best Foreign Market—Great Importance of the Foreign Market to Our Farmers.

When a man undertakes to defend a false system he is constantly compelled to make untrue arguments. Our protection organs labor early and late to show the farmer that the foreign market is of very little value to him. While Blaine is trying to get the farmer "a market for another bushel of wheat and another barrel of pork," and the organs applaud his efforts, they even forget themselves still and go back to their old job of showing that the foreign market is no good.

But the facts about the farmer's foreign market are clearly set forth in the figures published by the Treasury Department. Those figures for the year ending Dec. 31, 1890, have recently been published; and they are well worth the attention of any farmer who wants to know the size of his foreign market and where his greatest foreign market is.

The figures of the department show that the total exports of agricultural products in 1890 amounted to $628,772,000, which was 74.33 per cent. of all our exports. On the other hand, exports of manufactures were $156,983,000, or only 18.56 per cent. of the total. These figures show that where the manufacturer exported $1 worth of goods the farmer exported $4 worth. The foreign market is therefore four times more valuable to the farmer than to the manufacturer.

The heaviest single item of agricultural exports was raw cotton, reaching $254,275,000, or about 40 per cent. of all agricultural exports, and about 30 per cent. of all exports of every kind. Exports of cotton in 1889 were still larger, being $266,649,000.

The next largest item in the total was provisions, $142,842,000. These were divided as follows: Beef products—Canned beef, $8,610,000; fresh, $13,837,000; salted or pickled, $6,039,000; tallow, $5,738,000. Hog products—Bacon, $37,855,000; hams, $8,425,000; pork, fresh and pickled, $4,704,000. Dairy products—Butter, $3,228,000; cheese, $8,130,000.

The exports of provisions for the past three years make an interesting comparison, showing, as they do, a gratifying increase. These are the figures:

1888	$ 91,249,000
1889	123,307,000
1890	142,842,000

The next heaviest exports are breadstuffs, $141,602,000. Here are the principal items: Corn, $37,603,000; wheat, $42,348,000; wheat flour, $52,709,000; oats, $4,141,000; rye, $1,025,000; cornmeal, $917,000; oatmeal, $579,000; barley, $463,000.

Besides the exports of provisions as above given, there was a considerable export of live animals, principally cattle. Total exports of animals were $35,665,000, of which the exports of cattle reached $33,297,000, against $25,673,000 in 1889. Exports of hogs were $970,000; horses, $808,000; mules, $358,000; sheep, $199,000.

There were also some exports of miscellaneous agricultural products. These were as follows: Bones, hoofs, horns, etc., $400,000; fruits, $2,845,000; hay, $577,000; hides and skins, $1,488,000; hops, $2,172,000; seeds, $2,945,000; leaf tobacco, $21,155,000; vegetables, $1,370,000.

Besides these exports of raw farm produce, there were some $40,000,000 of manufactured goods exported, of which our farmers furnished the raw materials. These were as follows: Cotton goods, $11,113,000; leather and manufactures of leather, $12,575,000; lard oil, $646,000; cottonseed oil, $5,400,000; oilcake, $7,762,000; manufactured tobacco, $4,018,000.

The above figures afford some idea of the vast importance of the farmer's foreign market. In the face of such figures the protectionists have the effrontery to try to persuade the farmer that he cannot compete in the markets of the world with the pauper labor of countries less prosperous than ours, and they even go to the length of saying that if it were not for McKinley's humbug duties on farm produce our markets would be flooded with the cheap products of other countries!

These figures prove the ability of our farmers to hold their own in the world's market. Yet McKinley made it a reproach to the Democratic minority on the Ways and Means Committee a year ago that they stood forth in defense of that market for our farmers. "The 'world's market,' to which the advocates of tariff for revenue only invite the farmers of this country," he said, "is to-day crowded with the products of the cheapest human labor the earth affords. All over the old world there is a rush of their surplus to that market, and it is to such a contest as this that free trade would allure American agriculture."

And still our farmers go into that market and beat "the cheapest human labor" on its own ground; and they are in no mood to withdraw from that market, as McKinley seems to advocate, if his words mean anything. The farmers know too well that if they should cease to sell in the foreign market they should fail to find sale for all their products at home, and thus depress prices to an absolutely ruinous figure. But the farmers are not fools; they know that the more of our farm products is taken by Europe and the more of manufactured goods that is sent to us in exchange, the better off they are. The freedom of that exchange, so beneficial to our farmers, is obstructed in the interests of the manufacturers solely under the false cry of "protection to American labor."

Another important fact shown by the Treasury figures is that England is far and away the farmers' greatest foreign market.

Against all the silly protectionist talk about England, "the grasping Briton," and the like, let the farmer consider the following figures: Total exports of cattle, $33,297,000, of which England took $31,364,000; canned beef, $8,610,000, to England, $6,356,000; fresh beef, $13,837,000, to England, $13,654,000; salted beef, $6,125,000, to England, $3,952,000; tallow, $5,738,000, to England, $2,643,000; bacon, $37,855,000, to England, $30,966,000; hams, $8,495,000, to England, $6,857,000; lard, $36,062,000, to England, $11,139,000; butter, $3,228,000, to England, $1,355,000; cheese, $8,130,000, to England, $7,080,000. Our exports of breadstuffs were also principally taken by England. The leading items were: Corn, $37,603,000, to England, $19,474,000; wheat, $43,348,000, to England, $28,810,000; flour, $52,709,000, to England, $32,356,000. Exports of raw cotton amounted to $254,000,000, of which England took $148,000,000. Hops to the value of $2,172,000 were exported, of which all except about $65,000 went to England. Of $21,155,000 of leaf tobacco England took $6,191,000.

That is the state of our export trade now. How will it be if our mad McKinleyism has the effect of driving England into opening up new sources of supply? Many facts point to such an outcome of our McKinleyism. What will the farmer then think of McKinley's "farmers' tariff?"

The New York Commercial Bulletin has recently printed the following item about the carpet trade: "Carpet men say that body Brussels, velvets, and moquettes have been moving out rather sluggishly of late. This is probably due to the tariff-bred advances established a few weeks ago." The protection journals, however, keep on protesting that the McKinley law has not caused an advance in prices of any of the necessaries of life. Let them quit fibbing, or else give up using carpets as needless luxuries.

CASTELAR ON PROTECTION.

The Spanish Patriot Arraigns Protection and Paints the Achievements of America in Eloquent Words.

The most progressive man in Spain to-day is Castelar, who is known throughout the world as a patriot, a statesman, an orator, a writer of ability, and as the leader of the republican movement in that country.

Spain is now agitating the question of "revising" her tariff upward, in imitation of the McKinley method, and provoked thereto by McKinley's Chinese antics. In view of these facts it is of interest to note a recent letter from Castelar, which was printed in the New York Herald. This letter shows Castelar to be a broad-minded citizen of the world, devoted to the good of the human race, and hence looking with pity upon the folly of the nations in waging commercial warfare upon each other in the form of protective tariffs.

Castelar does not lay the blame of originating protective tariffs upon America. He finds, rather, that America is simply following the bad example set by Europe. He does blame America, however, for adopting a system so at war with her traditions of freedom, and so damaging to her mission as the standard-bearer of liberty among the nations of the world. Among the continental nations of Europe her influence for liberty and enlightened statesmanship is largely nullified by protection, and her example is used to strengthen the old hatreds and jealousies which have proven so disastrous to those nations. The old spirit of international distrust and hate which has so often wrought ruin in Europe is still alive in the form of retaliatory tariff laws, and the example of America is unhappily thrown upon the wrong side.

Castelar eloquently says: "Archæological contradictions must disappear, and the cause of human progress imperatively requires nations to urge on universal exchange, free trade, just as cosmic heat compels sidereal motion. Having in every sense of the word outgrown the age when competition could be fatal to it, as well as the period of economic contradictions, the new world fights against its own providential destiny and betrays its office by aggravating, as it is now doing, its protectionist tariff, converted by measures which are simply odious into desolating prohibition."

How pitiable appear the attempts of the protectionists to undermine America's confidence in herself, in the light of Castelar's eloquent portrayal of America's great achievements.

"Nations, like individuals, in proportion as they mount toward the highest summits of illustrious renown, assume an increased responsibility. The nation within whose frontiers reign peace, liberty, democracy, republicanism, progress and labor must not, beyond those frontiers, represent reaction, race enmity and the retrogradation of humanity. The people who have chained the tempest and subjected the lightning, who have fitted our vessels with the steam engines which enable them to override all waves and to brave all winds, who have given to speech the speed of lightning, who have created the power of transmitting the human voice over the whole surface of the earth by means of the miraculous telephone, who by the aid of the magic strands of the telegraphic cable hidden in the depths of the ocean have joined the most distant lands, who have given the human race the benefit of the electric light, are compelled to forward the cause of universal progress by the adoption of free labor and free exchange."

McKinleyism Gone Mad.

The copyright law recently enacted by Congress contains one piece of protectionism much more crazy than anything in the McKinley tariff law. The latter measure allows the importation of English books not more than twenty years old, upon payment of a duty of 25 per cent.; but the copyright act takes away the privilege of importation altogether, except that any person may import one or two copies of a book for his own use. Importation for purposes of sale is absolutely prohibited in the case of all books printed in the English language less than twenty years old, and copyrighted in the United States.

Even so extreme a protectionist as Senator John Sherman opposed this piece of Chinese protectionism. He offered an amendment permitting the importation of books upon the payment of the duty just as is the case with all other articles; and this amendment was passed by the Senate. The McKinleyites of the House, however, refused to accept the Sherman amendment, and the Senate had to back down, Senator Sherman voting against the whole bill by reason of the failure of his very sensible amendment.

And thus it goes forth to a wondering world that the only things which our McKinleyites absolutely shut out from the channels of trade in this country are obscene books and pictures, drugs to produce abortion, and—tell it not in Gath!—all English books not more than twenty years old! Now let the Chinese become civilized and shut out American books. Let the Hottentots catch the inspiration of our example and prohibit the flood of pauper-made Bibles!

Protection Wages Again.

Reductions of the wages of protected Pennsylvania labor still go on. Here are a few of the latest:

Allentown—Crane Iron Company, 10 per cent. reduction.

Pottstown—Glasgow Iron Company, puddlers wages reduced from $3.75 a ton to $3.50; also a reduction of 7 per cent. in the plate mill. Potts Bros. Iron Company made similar reductions.

Pittsburg—It is almost certain that the coke operators will reduce wages 20 per cent. instead of 10 per cent., as previously announced.

Harrisburg—Wages of puddlers in all the mills about the city to be reduced 25 per cent. March 16.

And such is protection to American labor!

Getting Rid of the Sugar Tax.

The McKinley law seems to be doomed to teach the people that the tariff is a tax, even where it removes a duty. Raw sugar becomes free April 1, and already refined sugar (No. 4) has been sold in New York in wholesale lots for April delivery at less than 3¼ cents per pound. The McKinleyites took off the sugar tax in order to prevent the reduction of the tariff on manufactures and in this way to save protection; but free sugar is going to teach the people very clearly that the tariff is a tax, and that it is a good thing to get rid of such a tax.

For American Wear.

The high tariff keeps out of the country much of the wool which our people need to make their clothes, and hence it need cause no surprise to hear a leading Massachusetts woolen manufacturer say that a large part of the clothing worn by our people is made of shoddy and cotton.

While wool is taxed heavily, rags come in free; even woolen rags, however, pay ten cents a pound. A correspondent of the Boston Wool Reporter writes to that journal from London, and gives the exports from that city to various American cities for one week in February. From London to Boston there were 290,000 pounds of wool and 320 tons (716,800 pounds) of rags, and 1,000 bales of rags were in transit. To Philadelphia there were no exports "except 150 bales of cow hair in transit." To Baltimore there were 24 tons (53,760 pounds) of rags. From Liverpool to Philadelphia 134 bales of wool, 121 bales of goat hair and 116 bales of cow hair were exported.

Why not give us free wool and less shoddy?

ACKNOWLEDGING THE CORN.

A Manufacturer and a Rabid Protection Organ Admit that Our Goods Are Sold Cheaper Abroad than at Home.

The protectionists are forever getting themselves into a hole. They denied last year with indignant protestations that any of our manufacturers sell their goods cheaper abroad than in the home market; but now comes one of these very manufacturers and states over his own signature that such is the fact. This particular manufacturer is not a believer in the humbug called protection, and he has nothing to lose in making the statement that American wares are bought by the foreigner at lower prices than by the American buyer.

The manufacturer in question is Mr. A. B. Farquhar of York, Pa., who has a very large establishment for making agricultural implements and machinery. He ought to know whereof he speaks.

In a recent letter, Mr. Farquhar says: "Of the agricultural implements used in South America, Mexico, Australia, and South Africa, we now manufacture a very large proportion in the United States. In some sections American implements and machinery are used almost exclusively: fully three-fourths of the plows used in South America and South Africa are made in this country. Our implements for export must be sold at very low prices—that is, at a small profit to the manufacturer, since we must compete with England and Germany. The prices obtained for our agricultural implements sold abroad average from 5 per cent. to 15 per cent less than what we get in this country. As I have several times had occasion to observe, the manufacturer who is able to export his goods can have no use for protection except to enable him to extort more money from home purchasers than he is able to get from those abroad."

What is still more remarkable, one of the very high tariff papers which were loudest and most brutal in denouncing the charge that manufacturers sell cheaper abroad than at home, has recently confessed that the thing is sometimes done. This is the Chicago Inter Ocean, which said several weeks ago in discussing the cartridge trust (protected by a 45 per cent. duty):

"Just look at it. Four concerns, protected by a stiff tariff against foreign competition, combine and crush out and buy out all competitors in this country, and then compel every American consumer to pay them 25 per cent. more for goods than a Canuck has to pay for the same goods, or a greaser in Mexico! This is protection with a vengeance."

It verily is!

Refusing to See a Trust.

In their zeal to defend the manufacturers the protectionist orators frequently rush forward with statements which are quickly disproved. Senator Hiscock, of New York, said in the Senate, last September, in speaking of agricultural implements:

"In respect to the manufacture and sale of these kind of goods, there is not now and never has been a combination among American manufacturers to hold up the price above that of free and open competition."

An old dodge of the protectionists to get rid of trusts by denying their existence.

But the recent decision of Judge Smith at Elmira, N. Y., shows that there has been a very firm combination of the manufacturers of harrows, and it is said that one of the manufacturers in this Harrow Trust does business in the city in which Senator Hiscock lives.

The harrow makers have their 45 per cent. protective duty; and they formed a combination to get the greatest possible advantage from it. In their determination to get absolute control of the market they compelled one manufacturer to join the trust who wanted to remain independent. After joining it he became dissatisfied with the trust's methods and drew out. The trust brought suit to compel him to live up to the agreement made with it; but Judge Smith threw out the case, refusing to enforce the agreement upon the ground that it was against the public interest.

The case is interesting, showing that there is often "a nigger in the wood-pile" when people, whose fire is burning low, are protesting the contrary in the most vehement language.

The Young Bride Shopping.

In a close-fitting, tailor-made dress and a light colored cape of Persian lamb, she appeared before the stall-keepers at Washington market. She carried a Russia leather note book with a gold pencil and the most artistic little willow basket imaginable.

"Oh, the dear little piggies!" she exclaimed, walking up to where a number of pigs were incarcerated; "how much are they a pair?"

"Eight and a half, mum," said the butcher.

"Isn't that pretty dear?" she asked timidly. "I guess I'll take some oysters instead," she said, walking over to where the men were busy opening the emblems of silence. "I want some oysters sent up, escalloped oysters," she said, "with plenty of raisins in them.

"Oh, those lovely pumpkins!" she continued, walking over to a stand where a lot of Edam cheese was displayed. "I'll take four of these; I know it's plebian, but Reginald does like pumpkin pies. Are all hams yellow like this?" she said, pointing to a counter full.

"No, miss, that's only the cover," said the man in charge.

"Those lovely pink onions will match my china. How do you sell them, a dozen?"

"Seventy-five cents a bushel," said the huckster, smiling.

"Send up two bushels," she said.

It is said that the Louisiana sugar planters are preparing to produce an enormous crop of sugar this year in order to pocket as big a slice of the McKinley sugar bounty as possible. Sugar-raising being looked upon by the McKinleyites as a public necessity, they vote the people's taxes away to the sugar-growers to the tune of some $7,000,000 a year. But is sugar-growing any more a public necessity than corn-growing or wheat-growing?

Massachusetts has, perhaps, more protected industries to the square mile than any other State. Yet a recent report of the Labor Bureau of that State shows that while the manufacturing towns and cities are growing rapidly in population the farming districts are rapidly losing their population. How is this, if the farmer gets the principal benefit from protection?

Efforts are being made to form a trust of all the rubber boot and shoe companies in the country. McKinley raised the duty on these goods from 15 per cent. to 30 per cent., and thus fixed things for the formation of a trust.

Indiana Legislature.

Both houses continued in session throughout the day and evening of March 7, not adjourning until nearly midnight. In the Senate, as committee of the whole, the appropriation bill was considered during the day, and in the evening the House amendment to the loan bill providing for one loan of $700,000, instead of two, was concurred in. It was provided, however, that if necessary money not exceeding $700,000 may be borrowed to pay interest. Both the House and Senate adopted a resolution ordering the $700,000 or more to be obtained from the Federal Government as a return of the direct war tax to be credited to the general fund of the State. The world's fair appropriation was, after a long struggle, passed by both houses, $75,000 being the amount named. The Tax Commissioners were ordered to report to the next Legislature a tax bill. March 9 was the last day of the session. The fee and salary bill was vetoed by the Governor and promptly passed over the Governor's objections. Old constitutional amendments killed and new ones adopted. Both houses adjourned sine die.

Minor State Items.

—Putnam County is upset from center to circumference with religious agitation.

—Vincennes claims more Odd Fellows than any other town of its size in the State.

—Erastus Nelson, an aged citizen of LaGrange, died suddenly of heart disease.

—George Sunderman, Tampico farmer, died from blood poisoning resulting from a felon.

—Benjamin Sprague, one of the pioneers of Bartholomew County, is dead, aged 77.

—The Indiana Wire Fence Company at Crawfordsville has just received a machine from Germany to make wire nails.

—While attempting to pass between two cars, at Shoals, Harrison Trainor's right foot was caught between the bumpers and crushed.

—A Monon train ran over and killed an aged woman, named Anna Duncan, on the trestle just north of Qunicy, Owen County.

—Gold in small quantities has been found on the farm of John Milman, near Coatsville.

—At Darlington, a child of Evangelist Joseph Sayler, of Burlington, was seriously scalded.

—J. W. Mitchell, of Memphis, and James Lee, of Whelemond, will cut ties for the championship of the State and a purse of $200.

—Elwood claims to have more than 3,000 population and proposes to have a city government.

—Greencastle butchers have a protective organization and a black-list of non-paying customers.

—Spencer has a temperance school where is taught the effects of alcohol on the human system.

—E. T. Vandegrift, of Shelbyville, thinks he has a "perpetual motion" motor that will mote.

—Annie Maurey, 11, died near Mishawaka, from the effects of an accidental blow on the head with a ball club.

—Southern Indiana farmers will raise tobacco, flax, broom-corn, castor beans, and the sugar beet this season—wheat and corn don't pay.

—Stephen Mason, while felling trees near Kilmore, was struck with a limb and his skull crushed. He leaves a wife and three children.

—Natural gas turned into a reservoir from opposite directions caused a terrific explosion in Westerman's Marion rolling mill. No one injured.

—Mayor Lytle, of Valparaiso, was surprised by receiving $5 from a man who said he had given him $25 in changing a $20 bill ten years ago.

—Mecajah Hancock, of Pulaski County, is aged 103 years. He is a grandson of John Hancock, who signed the Declaration of Independence, and served in the war of 1812.

—Edna Feary, who sued Samuel Hamilton, the Shelbyville banker, to recover for injuries received in falling into a well on his property, has been given a judgment for $2,500.

—John Werner, of Columbus, was found dead in his room from heart disease. His wife, her brother, and her mother all died the same way, the wife only about three weeks ago.

—John Peters, a farmer in felling a tree near Lebanon, was struck in the eyes by a forked limb, the end of which ran through into his mouth. He will probably recover and save one eye.

—The Montgomery County Commissioners are holding up to their rule that an application for a liquor license shall be accompanied by a check for $100, the fee, or the granting of a license will be refused. Terrence Holmes has just been refused a license upon this cause, and he has appealed.

—Lewis La Force, living near Greensburg, was arrested on the charge of incest with his 16-year-old daughter. His wife says he is of unsound mind.

—A thorough-bred setter at Crawfordsville killed her six pups, buried three of them under coal and the remainder she took to a barn and covered with straw.

—Mrs. Mary Bell died of old age at her home near Groveland. She was the oldest person in Hendricks County, having attained her 108th year. Her youngest son, now living, is aged 65.

—In the Circuit Court, at Columbus, Judge Keyes held constitutional the law which makes it unlawful to be found having a seine in one's possession. This case has been the hottest contested on the legal papers of the State for years. In November last State Fish Commissioner Wm. T. Dennis caused the arrest of John Puffenberger and George Knows for unlawfully seining fish from White River, near Columbus. One count in the indictment charged the unlawful possession of a seine in the hands of defendants, and upon this point the legal fight arose.

—Mrs. Annie Gent, frightened at the sight of a runaway horse at Washington, fell dead in her yard.

—Near Markle, a farmer attempted to drive across the Chicago and Erie track in front of a rapidly approaching train, and he was dangerously injured. His horses were killed and the wagon demolished.

—At Batesville, John Dirschrel, in a rage of jealousy, shot his wife, her grandmother, his 3-year-old child, and then cut his own throat. He and his child are dead. The women may recover.

—The Terre Haute Trotting Association has decided to abandon its spring meeting because the improvements to the track and buildings cannot be finished in time. Twenty thousand dollars is being spent on the grounds.

—Edgar Murphy, of Seymour, a brakeman employed on the Ohio & Mississippi Railway, fell from a freight train, near Storrs, and was crushed to death under the wheels. The body was taken to Seymour for burial.

—Mrs. Frederick Fields, of Brooklyn, Morgan County, wrote her name on some eggs before selling them. Mrs. Fields has received a letter from a young lady in Massachusetts informing her that the young lady was the purchaser.

—John Reed, aged 19, stopped John Cottner, aged 65, in the Air-line yards, New Albany, in broad day light, and, shoving him between two cars, forcibly relieved him of his valuables, consisting of a watch and a sum of money. The robbery was witnessed by at least twenty persons. Reed was arrested two hours later.

—Mrs. Calvin Beck, living near Crawfordsville, when she saw a Constable coming to eject her from the house in which she was living, went to bed, where she remained until the Constable departed. The Constable would not take advantage of a sick woman, but he is sure she was fooling him about being sick.

—In the Circuit Court at New Albany, the jury in the damage suit of George Albert against the New Albany Woolen Mill Company awarded the plaintiff $8,000 damages. Albert, who is but a boy, caught his hand in the machinery at the woolen mills, some months ago, and was badly injured. He sued for $15,000 damages. This is the largest sum awarded as damages by any court in that part of the State for years.

—There has been considerable agitation about a dam in the stream above the pump-house and reservoir of the Crawfordsville water-works. The State Board of Health, the local health boards and the City Council demand its removal on the ground that it contains water unfit for drinking purposes. The water company claim that no water is used from the dam, and this leaves a doubt as to what purpose the dam was built for.

—A constable cannot be found at Crawfordsville courageous enough to go and arrest George Washington Voris and his wife, who live in the country. Last week a constable went out and read an ejectment notice to these two people, and they tore up the summons. The woman scalded the constable and the old man chased him away with an ax. The constable came to town and swore out a warrant for their arrest, but no person can be found who is willing to take the risk there will be in serving the warrant.

—While driving home from Muncie, a distance of three miles, Miss Ida Wilson fell from the seat in her buggy in an unconscious condition, and was not found until the horse arrived at her parents' home. The young lady's head had been in so close contact to one of the wheels that one ear was nearly torn off, and a large piece of the flesh had been ground out. Her clothes were badly deranged, and one side of her body badly bruised. She is still in an unconscious state, with little hopes of recovery. Heart failure is the cause.

—A natural-gas explosion occurred at the water-works pumping station, Kokomo. Engineer Milo Cain was standing in front of one of the batteries of boilers, and was hurled a distance of twenty-two feet against a door of the building, the concussion bursting the hinges and bolts, lifting the roof out of place, and creating havoc generally. The engineer was horribly burned about the head, hands, and arms, but will recover. His wife, who was near by, rushed in and readjusted the machinery under the instruction her inqured husband was able to give, and keep the pumps going.

—Michael Overmyer, for many years a well-to-do farmer of Richland Township, Fulton County, was robbed and murdered in Rochester. Overmyer was married only three weeks ago, and had just completed arrangements to go to Huntington to reside. He went to Rochester accompanied by his bride. The latter went to the home of a friend on the outskirts of the town, where the husband was to join her in the evening. The report of a pistol was heard near the cemetery. Upon investigation the body of Overmyer was found lying in the middle of the road, with a gaping wound in his breast. Near the body was Overmyer's revolver. A pocket-book containing $300, which he had carried, was gone. Evidence elicited at the inquest showed conclusively that the motive for the crime was robbery.

—New York parties have purchased five gas wells in Jay County, and will pipe gas to Decatur. One of the wells produces 10,000,000 feet a day.

—The Madison County Farmers' Alliance has reorganized its printing company. A county and State paper for farmers and laborers will be published.

—Rev. Mr. Kenney, of Moore's Hill, has invented a perpetual calendar. At a glance the day of the week can be found on which must fall any given date from the year one to the end of time.

—E. O. Scott, aged 18 years, was instantly killed on the P., C., C. & St. L. bridge over Silver Creek, one mile east of New Albany. Two tracks cross the bridge, and Scott, in attempting to avoid one "dinkey" train, saw another approaching from an opposite direction. Becoming terror-stricken he laid down between the rails, hoping the train would pass over him. The pilot struck him on the head, killing him and hurling his mangled body into the creek, thirty feet below. He was a resident of Jeffersonville, and was walking home when the accident occurred.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN
NERVINE TONIC
AND
Stomach AND Liver Cure
The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.
It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If every one knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider it the best medicine in the world. I had not a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can sleep and rest as soundly as a healthy child, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced in this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to every one.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.
My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.
The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmitigated disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., says: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down [illegible] improved on its use. I recommend the medicine [illegible]."

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 119 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used but two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds. [illegible] gives great satisfaction."

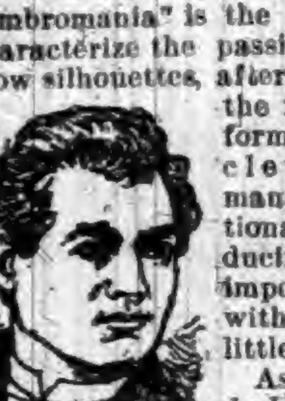
SHADOW SILHOUETTES.

CLEVER AND CURIOUS PICTURES ON THE WALL.

"Umbrano" as Indulged in by M. Trewey—What the Talented Frenchman Can Produce with His Hand and a Light—How to Imitate His Ingenuity.

"Umbromania" is the name invented to characterize the passion for making shadow silhouettes, after the manner of the famous performer Trewey, a clever Frenchman, with the national talent for producing impressive or imposing effects with the infinitely little.

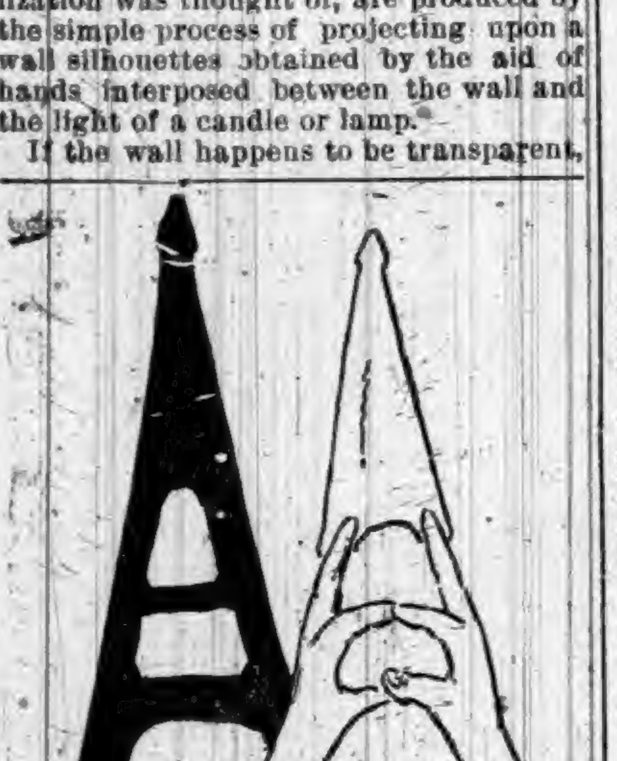


M. TREWEY.

As a Parisian doll's dressmaker can construct you a magnificent young miss of 17, clad in the height of fashion, out of a few shreds and patches, so Trewey, with a candle, a screen and a few bits of paper, produces for his delighted public a whole galaxy of pictures. The result is that he has a great army of imitators in Europe, and it would not be surprising to see followers of Trewey spring up all over America.

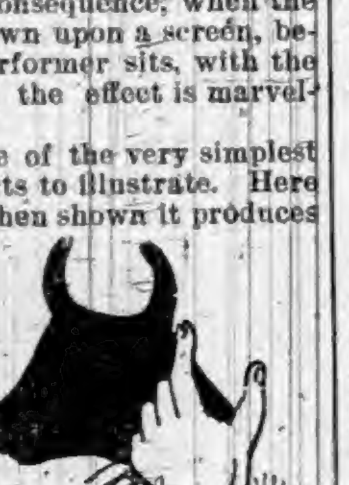
These "shadow pictures," ombres Chinoises, as the French call them, after the Chinese, who invented everything and forgot it again long before our civilization was thought of, are produced by the simple process of projecting upon a wall silhouettes obtained by the aid of hands interposed between the wall and the light of a candle or lamp."

If the wall happens to be transparent, to any one looking at the silhouttes, as they show through, they seem to be really alive. In consequence, when the silhouttes are thrown upon a screen, behind which the performer sits, with the light behind him, the effect is marvellous.



THE EIFFEL TOWER.

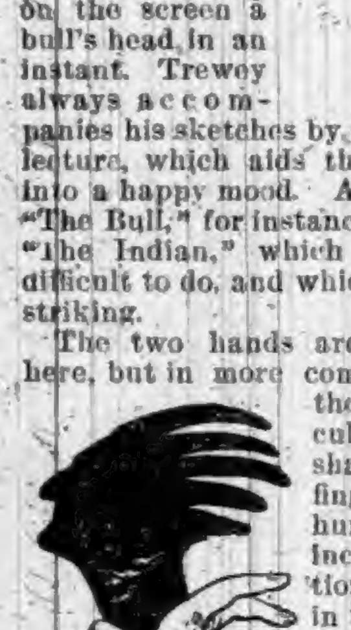
Let us take one of the very simplest of Trewey's subjects to illustrate. Here it is: the bull. When shown it produces a buzz of admiration in the audience, because it is so simple, yet complete.



THE BULL.

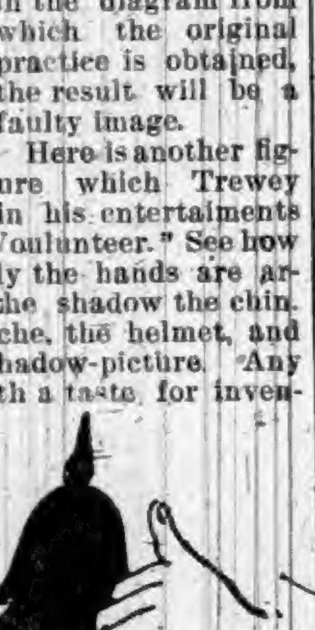
Here you see the two horns are arranged without any accessories, so as to put on the screen a bull's head in an instant. Trewey always accompanies his sketches by a humorous little lecture, which aids the audience to get into a happy mood. After showing you "The Bull," for instance, he will give you "The Indian," which is decidely more difficult to do, and which is likewise very striking.

The two hands are again employed here, but in more complicated and, for the beginner, difficult positions. In shadow pictures, if a finger varies by the hundredth part of an inch from the position laid down for it in the diagram from which the original practice is obtained, the result will be a faulty image.



THE INDIAN.

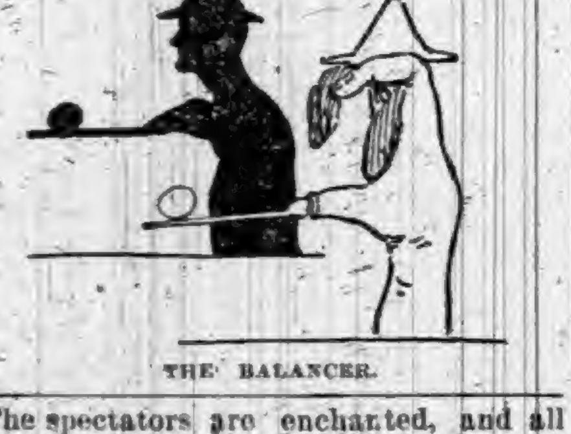
Here is another figure which Trewey in his entertaiments calls, "The English Voulunteer." See how delicately yet simply the hands are arranged to form in the shadow the chin, the nose, the mustache, the helmet, and the peak in the shadow-picture. Any clever American with a taste for invention can probably think out a plan for making an American, or a Russian, or a German, or a Mexican soldier by variations upon Trewey's plan.



THE ENGLISH VOLUNTEER.

After "The Volunteer" let us take a more complicated subject, and one into which accessories enter. For Trewey does not despise accessories; far from it. He makes great use of them. They are all very Liliputian in appearance, but they loom up tremendously on the screen. Let us take the Eiffel Tower.

Here we still have simplicity, but the form and the impression of magnitude of the vast tower are well produced.



THE BALANCER.

The spectators are enchanted, and all this is done by bringing the forefingers and thumbs together, and holding in the other outstretched fingers a conical piece of pasteboard. It is, says Trewey, the simplicity of this that makes it great.

Next in order comes the "The Balancer," a capital subject. In this one Trewey has increased the number of his accessories. Presto! he fits a little paper hat onto one of his knuckles, deftly curves the fingers so as to produce the contour of a face, carries out an arm holding a rod on which a ball is balanced by extending his thumb with a quill, to which is affixed a little ball, lashed to it, and the "balancer" stands forth complete.

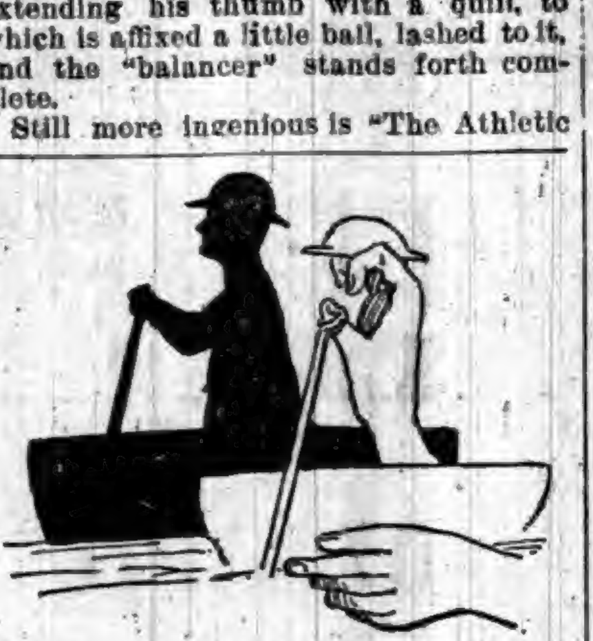
Still more ingenious is "The Athletic



THE BOATMAN.

Clown," which invariably produces a roar of amazement. How, says the audience, can a shadow of that size hold a chair in its mouth?

It is easy enough, as our picture shows, with an accompanying hand equipped with a diminutive chair, tiny dumbells, etc.

THE DRUNKARD.

All these together produce "The Boatman," in the shadow-picture, and a boatman who seems much more real than shadows generally are.

Another change of the flexible fingers; the thumb this time dons a tall paper hat and the wrist has a bit of drapery thrown over it. We have before us the bent and decrepit figure of a drunkard holding his bottle in his hand. It is like magic.

But still better than all these is "The Learned Donkey," a composition in which the whole resources of both hands are brought most deftly into play. One hand is extended, the thumb and two fingers are shot downward to represent three of the donkey's legs, the fourth being deftly managed by the interposition of a slip of paper across the shadow, and the ears are produced by two stiff bits of paper held between the fingers.

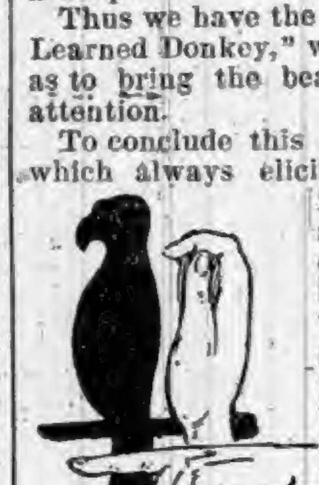
A hat is place on the other hand, the fingers of which are artfully arranged to simulate the face of a man, and the thumb with a tiny whip tied to it appears in shadow as an arm outstretched with a whip.

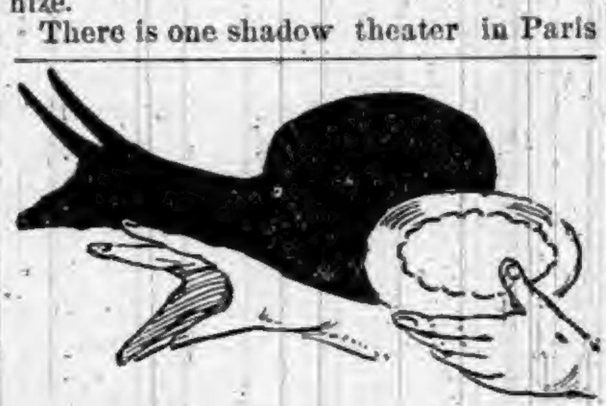
Thus we have the trainer facing "The Learned Donkey," with his whip held so as to bring the beast to the attitude of attention.

To conclude this pretty little series, which always elicits cries of delight from children, we append "The Parroquet" and "The Snail," two of the triumphs of Trewey's genius. They explain themselves; so we need add nothing, except a caution that all the positions of the hands must be preserved with the very greatest precision, or the results will be monsters which no one will recognize.



THE PARROQUET.

There is one shadow theater in Paris which has attained great celebrity. It is held in the upper hall of the famous "Black Cat," a cafe frequented by young literary Bohemians, and fashionable Paris goes to see it once a year.



THE SNAIL.

Remembering His Prisons.

Some people would think it strange that I should still regard that cell—in which I spent nearly a year of solitary confinement—with affection, but it is true. Man is a domestic animal, and to a prisoner with "twenty years" on his door the cell is home. I look back with fond regard to a great many cells and a great many prisons in England and Australia, which are associated to my mind in a way not to be wholly understood by any one but myself. And if ever I should go back to England (which is doubtful, for I escaped from prison in Australia in 1869, and so permanently ended the twenty years) the first place I would visit would be one of the old prisons. Remember, my name and many a passing thought are scratched and written on many a small place within those cells, which I perfectly well recollect, and it would be a great treat to go back some day and read them. And then, during the time I was in prison, I got acquainted with thousands of professional criminals, old and young, who will be the occupants of the English jails for the next twenty years, and I confess it would be of great interest to me to go back and walk the corridor with all the brimming respectability of a visitor, and stop when I saw a face I knew of old, and observe how time and villainy had dealt with it.—From the Unpublished MSS. of John Boyle O'Reilly.

The first solid-head pin was made in 1824, in England, by Lemuel W. Wright, an American. In 1832 Dr. John I. Howe, a Connecticut man, invented a machine for making solid-head pins. It was the first successful machine, and completed the pin by a single process. The old head was soldered on to the shank of the pin.

PALMER IS VICTORIOUS.

ELECTED SENATOR ON THE 154TH BALLOT.

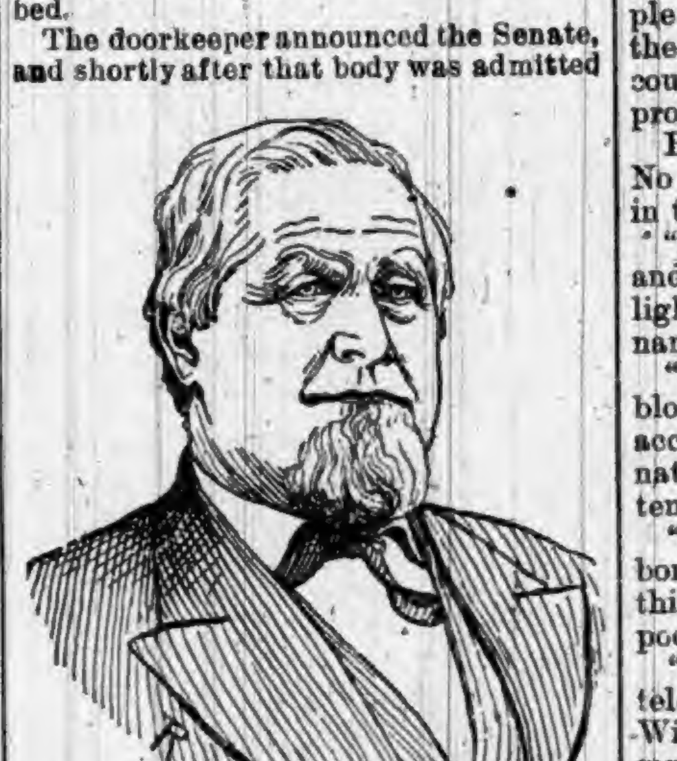
The Farmer Votes Bring About His Election—The Result Ends One of the Longest Senatorial Fights in the History of the Country.

General John M. Palmer is a United States Senator. The contest in the Illinois joint assembly continued through seven weeks to a day, and took 154 ballots.

It was known early in the morning by everybody that Palmer would be elected unless some accident interfered, and all Springfield went to the Capitol to try to secure admittance to the House floor and galleries. Those who could not get inside remained in the rotunda and satisfied their curiosity with echoing the cheers inside. The Republicans knew they were beaten, and accepted their defeat with complacency. No attempt was made in either house to do any business. The members sat about in groups, telling stories, singing songs, and exchanging experiences. There was good feeling everywhere, Republicans and Democrats mingling on both sides.

Two hours before the joint assembly met, the galleries and the floor of the House began to fill. An hour before the battle there was a dense crowd packed in every space set apart for visitors. The Republicans who were in their seats began to sing, "We Are Going Home." They then switched off to "Marching Through Georgia." The Democrats substituted a campaign song to the same tune. The singing continued until almost time for the joint assembly. The Palmer banner was carried into the hall and planted on the Democratic side. It was greeted with cheers from that side. At the same moment the procession came slowly moving down the center aisle like a funeral train. Doorkeeper Brown and several assistants opened the way, while four men carried in a stretcher on which lay Senator Wells, so ill that his friends had protested against his leaving his bed.

The doorkeeper announced the Senate, and shortly after that body was admitted the vote was taken. The Speaker announced the result as follows:



GEN. JOHN M. PALMER.

"On this, the one hundred and fifty-fourth joint ballot, the whole number of votes cast is 204. Necessary to a choice, 103, of which John M. Palmer has received a total of 103, C. J. Lindley, 100, Streeter, 1."

The Speaker then formally declared General John M. Palmer elected Senator to represent the State of Illinois in the United States Senate for six years from March 4, 1891. Senator-elect Palmer was then introduced, and delivered a short speech.

John M. Palmer was born in Scott County, Kentucky, Sept. 13, 1817. He cast his first vote in Illinois for Stephen A. Douglas for Congress, but he was always an anti-slavery man in feeling, and left the Democrats when the Missouri compromise was repealed. Then he became a Republican.

In 1856 he was Chairman of the Republican State Convention at Bloomington. He ran for Congress in 1859, but was defeated. In 1860 he was a Republican Presidential Elector for the State at large. In 1861 he was appointed one of the five delegates (all Republicans) sent by Illinois to the peace congress at Washington. When the civil conflict broke out he offered his services to his country, and was elected Colonel of the Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and participated in the engagements at Island No. 10; at Farmington, where he skilfully extricated his command from a dangerous position; at Stone River, where his division for several hours, Dec. 31, 1862, held an advanced position and stood like a rock, and for his gallantry there he was made Major General; at Chickamauga, where his and Van Clece's divisions for two hours maintained their position when they were cut off by overpowering numbers. Under Gen. Sherman he was assigned to the Fourteenth Army Corps, and participated in the Atlanta campaign up to a date in August, when he asked to be relieved because Gen. Sherman ordered him to report to Gen. Schofield. In February, 1865, Gen. Palmer was assigned to the military administration of Kentucky, which was a delicate post.

General Palmer was nominated for Governor of Illinois by the Republican State Convention which met at Peoria May 6, 1868, and his nomination would probably have been made by acclamation had he not persistently declared that he could not accept a candidature for the office. The result of the ensuing election gave Mr. Palmer a majority of 44,707 over John R. Eden, the Democratic nominee.

Since the expiration of Governor Palmer's term, while he has been somewhat prominent in Illinois politics, he has devoted the most of his time to the practice of his profession. In 1887 and 1888 he was the candidate of his party for the United States Senatorship, but was defeated, the first time by Chas. B. Farwell, and the second time by Shelby M. Cullom. The Democratic State Convention held in 1888 nominated him again for the office of Governor. He carefully canvassed the whole State, and was defeated by Joseph W. Fifer, the present incumbent. He received the indorsement of the Democratic State Convention held in June last for the office of United States Senator, and the instructions which every Democratic Senator and Representative elected in November last received were considered as obligating him to vote for no one for United States Senator but John M. Palmer.

Gen. Palmer has been twice married. In 1842 he was united in marriage to Malinda Neely, who died in 1883. He was married to his present wife in the spring of 1888.

Some instructive data concerning the comparative cost of incandescent lighting have been published. The average cost of maintaining a 16-candle power lamp for twenty-four hours was shown to be 6.82 cents. A careful study of these data should be made by the owner of every office building, as it will unquestionably be to his interest to have an electric light plant installed with a view to giving his patrons the additional inducement of the electric light. The total yearly average cost per lamp in a modern office building should not exceed $4, including every possible expense, aside from electric or combination fixtures.

LIVES OF GREAT MEN.

All Remind Us of Biographical Chestnuts.

The first man who ever wrote another man's life probably was hampered by lack of facts. If he were not, would he have laid so much stress on the fact that his hero was born of such or such parents, of such or such race, and then conjectured that from said parent or parents he inherited such or such traits?

Wonder who was the first historian to introduce this now hackneyed method?

See, here are some samples of the trite phraseology of which his example has caused others to be guilty:

"His parents came from Yorkshire, Eng., and from them he inherited the deep sincerity of the Anglo-Saxon character."

"Coming of good old Pilgrim stock, he early evinced a predisposition for theological controversy, etc."

"Of genuine Puritan ancestry, he was (anything to please readers)."

"His parents were Irish, and from them he inherited (anything to please, but especially wit)."

"Born in Boston, he had all the advantages." (Here are worked in atmosphere, literary, not east wind, institutions of learning, not penal.)

"A Virginian by birth, he was a fine type of the Southern gentleman." (Here are worked in mother of Presidents, Old Dominion, etc.)

"His parents were Scotch, and to such origin must be attributed (good place for intense religion feeling, something about Bobby Burns, etc.)."

"Of humble parents he never forgot the people." (Self-made man is also added.)

"The son of German immigrants, he was noted for his sobriety, love of mercantile pursuits, etc."

But of all the time-worn phrases, "born of poor but honest parents" is the worst. Not only is its age against it, but it suggests either that poor people generally are dishonest, or that if the hero's parents had been rich they could not possibly be honest—two propositions equally absurd.

But think what we are coming to! No doubt the following will be found in the biographies of the future:

"His father was a fine Chinaman, and from him the son inherited his delightful humor, prepossessing countenance and fashionable clothes."

"In his veins flowed only the pure blood of the noble Comanches, which accounts for his imperturbable good nature, strict honesty and civilizing tendencies."

"His father was descended from a bona-fide Oklahoma boomer, and from this source he inherited his love of poetry and fine arts."

"His parents spoke over the first telephone ever put up in Blazerville, Wis., and to their adventurous spirit must be attributed the stupendous enterprise that characterized his career."

Where this style of biography may stop the Lord only knows.—Boston Globe.

How Far a Child Travels.

The limit of man's capacity for speed and endurance in travel, under given conditions, is a matter of record, but who has not witnessed the almost ceaseless activity of a child, and been led to exclaim: "I wonder how far that child has traveled to-day?"

A gentleman recently attempted to answer this query in an ingenious way. He had the floor of his nursery covered with white muslin. He then strapped to the ankle of an 18-month child a "marker," consisting of an inked pad, that made a plain mark on the cloth for every step taken.

The child was allowed to roam about and amuse itself as usual, and at night the marks were counted. There were the almost incredible number of 6,483 marks, which, allowing six inches to each step, made the sum of the day's journeying 3,242 feet, or almost three-fourths of a mile.

The child was probably not above the average in point of activity and endurance, and its feat was only that of many another little one whose mother finds it dropping asleep in her arms at night before the night gown can be coaxed over its head, while the older members of the family wonder "what makes the baby so cross and tired to-night?"

The gentleman next experimented with his boy of 9 years, who was out of school and in a community affording space and attractions for rambling. He purchased a pedometer, an instrument for measuring distances walked—on the principle of the cyclometer used for measuring the distance traveled on a bicycle. This he managed to get into the bottom of the boy's pocket, among the marbles, nails, twine, knives and other bric-a-brac there collected. Its additional weight was not noticed for a few days, and in that time it did its work.

The first day the instrument registered nine and one-eighth miles, and the boy was at the table for every meal. The second day's record was ten and three-sevenths miles; the third, a rainy day, seven and a half miles; the fourth, nine and eight-seventeenths.

The family was astonished at the result, and thereafter, when any one complained of a walk of a mile or so, nobody pooh-poohed louder than Bob. One other noticeable result was that Bob got his monthly pair of shoes without the usual lecture on the sin of wearing them out so fast.

Not Pompous.

The Washington Post credits Secretary Blaine with telling a story illustrative of President Lincoln's somewhat free manner of receiving dignified officials.

At the beginning of a session of Congress Mr. Blaine had been appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives a member of the joint committee to wait upon the President and inform him that Congress had duly assembled. Senator Foot, of Vermont, one of the most dignified of men, was chairman of the committee. On being ushered into the presence of the President, Mr. Foot involuntarily struck an attitude, and proceeded to say, in his stateliest manner:

"Mr. President, we have been appointed a committee on the part of the two houses of Congress to apprise you that they have met and organized, and are ready to receive any communication which it may be your pleasure to make to them."

As he concluded, Mr. Lincoln stepped up to him, and taking him familiarly by one button of his coat, said:

"Now, look here, Foot, if it is a matter of life and death with you, I can send my message in to-day; but if it isn't, I should like to keep it till to-morrow to slick it up a little."

The Confederate army numbered at the time of its final surrender 175,000 men.

The Cynic.

One of the most disagreeable human beings is the cynic who does not believe in good or disinterested motives. He distrusts every one. He is skeptical as to the sincerity of all men, and he believes that self-interest prompts all their actions.

Whenever you see one of these men, you see one who is so filled with selfishness that there is not room enough inside him for it and for all the egotism he tries to carry, and you will see it oozing out of him at every pore. These two attributes crowd his soul into a small compass, press on his heart until there is not room for it to develop a generous impulse, and take possession of his mind until liberal or noble thoughts cease to exist there.

He is liberal enough in one way—liberal in unbeliefs—but a narrow-minded bigot in his beliefs. When he hears of some apparently unselfish act, he begins hunting for a selfish motive, and should he fail to find it, he says: "Well, I cannot understand what he does it for, but he must expect to benefit by it somehow." Certainly, he cannot understand a disinterested act of kindness, because all his own motives are prompted by self-interest. He knows of no higher motives.

The cynic is simply what he believes all other men, who are not fools, to be. His heart is not large enough to conceive a chivalrous act, his brain not of sufficient dimensions to beget or be delivered of a noble or generous thought, and his little soul so shriveled that if it were possible that it could ever get to heaven, and if Peter should smile a welcome as he let it in, it would immediately suspect the saintly gentleman of having some interested motive of being so friendly.

Whenever you meet a man of this kind, who suspects that everybody in the world is trying to take advantage of him, you may be sure that that man would beat everybody in the world if he could. Whenever you see a man attributing mean or sordid motives to others, you have found a man who himself is mean at heart, and you have discovered a man who may have many acquaintances, but very few friends.

Snakes, even the most venomous, are supposed to have been created for some useful purpose, and so the cynic has, doubtless, a place in the economy of nature that is necessary he should fill, but he is a very disagreeable necessity.—Texas Siftings.

Thackeray, in his original and piquant way, very truly says: "Gentleman is a rarer thing than some of us think for. Which of us can point out many such in this circle—men whose aims are generous, whose truth is constant and elevated, who can look the world honestly and truly in the face with equal, manly sympathy for great and small? All know a hundred whose coats are well made, and a score who have excellent manners, but of gentlemen, how many? Let us each take a scrap of paper and make his list."

The Dear Girls of Diplomacy.

Their faces were radiant with the springtime of life, as they strolled down one of the paths past the Capitol.

"I think it's real mean the way England is acting about sealskin sacques," said Maude.

"So do I," replied Minnie.

"Humph; I suppose you know a great deal about it?"

"Well, I know that Mr. Blaine wants England to quit fishing for seals in the Behring Sea; he's threatened to build a fence or something around it so as to make it a closed sea, and England is going to get an injunction from the Supreme Court to stop the fence. It's wonderful how much trouble fences make when they get into court," said Mamie thoughtfully.

And Maude looked at her in wondering admiration, and exclaimed: "Honestly, Mamie, I don't see how you manage to keep so well posted."—Washington Post.

Sixty Years Recluses.

For more than sixty years Mary and Lizzie Harper have lived in a tumble-down log hut near the villags of New Trenton, Franklin County, Ind., four miles from the Ohio line. They are unmarried and have been really dead to the world ever since they were children. Mary, the elder, is 62 years old, and her sister, Lizzie, 60. "The sisters own property, but they take no interest in the care of it. The live stock which they once owned died from exposure and neglect. All the efforts of the neighbors to induce them to take some interest in the care of their property have been unavailing. Mary only tries to pay the interest on the mortgage on their farm, and once every year walks twelve miles to the county seat for that purpose."

THE last days of the late republican congress were marked with more reckless extravagance, than even they have dared before. As a sample, three millions were voted to buy Indian lands that had already been bought and paid for twice.

THE governor last week appointed the judges for the new appellate court: G. L. Reinhard, dem., in the first district; Jephtha D. New, dem., second; James B. Black, rep., third; M. S. Robinson, rep., fourth, and E. D. Crumpacker, rep., for this, the fifth district. Said to be good men.

GEN. PALMER'S contest for U. S. senator was one of the most noted on record. The vote was taken 154 times, 101 democrats voting for Palmer every time. The struggle lasted nine weeks, some days one vote only being taken, and on other days, several. The last vote stood: Palmer, 103; Lindley, rep., 100; Streeter, Alliance, 1. Two Alliance men, Moore and Cockrell, voted for Palmer, and the other Alliance member, Mr. Taubeneck, gave the one vote for Streeter. The election marks a new era, as Palmer made the canvass last year before the people, claiming a senator should be elected that way.

One Price and the Truth.

AUBURN - - IND.

EMIGRANT ship Tuesday, sank in the strait of Gibraltar. 200 Italians drowned.

CONGRESS that just ended passed appropriation bills exceeding a thousand millions and the people will have to pay the bill.

COMPANY is to begin mining tin in the Black Hills. They say they can produce tin much cheaper than in England. Then why does this industry need protection?

THE BUTLER RECORD still claims the tariff is not a tax, but that it makes prices lower. For the 113th time we ask; How does it benefit a manufacturer or producer, if it forces him to sell cheaper? And how does it help the laborer?

PALMER is the first senator elected by the people. The state convention last year nominated him for that place when they did the other candidates and he made the canvass of the state as a regular candidate, carried the state by 31,000, and so was the choice of his state. But as the law now stands, he had to get a majority of the legislature.

ITALIAN brigands who murdered the New Orleans chief of police, were tried last week, and found not guilty. Either the jury was bribed, or were afraid of their lives if they convicted them, and it was difficult to get witnesses to swear to the truth, as all were afraid of the Italian knives. Saturday a mob of citizens took the Italians from jail and hanged or shot eleven of them. Great excitement among Italians all over the country, and Italy demands reparation. This we may yet have to give, as the men were not executed by law, but by mob violence.

The G. A. R Dedication.

The new G. A. R. Hall was formally dedicated Monday evening, in the presence of a vast audience, that even the large room could not fully accommodate. Mr. Green, however, made them "line up" pretty closely, and the ladies at least were seated. At the proper time, Philip Noel, present post commander, called to order, and a brief address of welcome, was made by Chaplain J. N. Wilson. Then came the opening song, by the Waterloo Quartet, who are Mr. Harper, Mr. Butler, Mr. Beidler and C. Reed. Then prayer, by Comrade Stringfellow, followed by another song, and then by a history of DeLong Post, by Hon. E. D. Hartman. He gave names of the charter members, and stated the present membership at 75. Then came recitations by little Olive Elson, L. B. Fretz, Nellie Barns, Lin. Kuhlman and Mabel Hartman. All did themselves credit and pleased the audience, especially Miss Hartman and Mr. Kuhlman. The instrumental music by Frank Davenport and Walter Hartman, was also good. Everybody praised the singing of the Waterloo Quartet, which was indeed fine. Then came the dedication services, led by Commander Noel, and then the closing song, "America" by the whole audience. It was sung with a will, and might almost have reached and cheered the heart of its venerable author in his Chicago home. Truly he has reared a grand monument to American patriotic song, and one that will stand, while the world stands. At the close came congratulations, and brief visits. Then an inspection of the new hall and its workmanship. No G. A. R. post near here, can boast so fine or commodious a room. Hon. Nick. Ensley, who owns the building showed good taste and liberality by fitting the room up at a cost of over $300, while the members themselves have furnished it. The carpets are new and tasty, and everything is good. But the great beauty of all, is the fine joiner work, the handiwork of Wm. Clark, and as he is an active member of the Post, it was to him, of course, a work of love. The work is very beautiful, the wood being of quartered sycamore, of the finest selections of white ash, or of beautiful pine. All is highly finished in oil, so as to bring out the beautiful grain. Mr. Clark may well feel proud of his work, and the three orders, that will use the room surely feel grateful to him. All in all, the meeting was a most agreeable one to all. The people gave the "boys" a liberal patronage, and the "boys" did themselves proud by the efforts they made to give the audience a pleasent evening. Auburn G. A. R. men, will not be ashamed to invite visiting comrades up to see their new home.

The D. S. A. Entertainment.

The best and most entertaining thing of the season will be that given tomorrow evening March 20, at the Opera House, by the D. S. A's of the Presbyterian church. They have selected the finest musical talent of the city, and have for their own part in the sword drill, secured beautiful uniforms, and have completely practiced their part. They will make it a glittering pageant and a success. The spelling class will be grand. They are working for a new organ for the church. Let us all go and help them and be highly entertained at the same time.

City Candidates.

Since announcing Joe Pfeffrl's name last week for marshal, we have been spoken to a number of times on the subject of candidates for that and other offices. There seems to be a strong feeling in favor of Mr. Pfeffrl, for several reasons. One is he has been faithful and untiring in the discharge of his duties, and above all has kept the streets clear of drunks and disorderly characters. We could name several, who have been obliged to keep sober for fear he would run them in. Then too, Mr. Pfeffrl has done the work of marshal and cared for the team for about the same price heretofore paid the marshal, saving the taxpayers about $30 a month. All these things we shall expect of any one who gets the office. The town needs every cent of money that can be saved. We presume other candidates will accept the same terms. Of these, we have talked with but one.

Charles W. Reesch will be a candidate for marshal, subject to the decision of the people, and we have no doubt would be a good officer. We are told also that C. A. Picker, who served faithfully one year will be a candidate, but as we have not seen him for some time, we cannot say to a certainty whether he will be in the field or not.

For clerk, we hear but one name, George Grund, the present incumbent, who has served the people, we believe to their complete satisfaction. No doubt he will get it.

For treasurer, we have heard no name but presume the present efficient officer, Chas. H. G. Jones, will be put into the place again.

As to trustees, Mr. Sheffer in the first, ward, Harter in the third and Matheny in the fourth, hold over. So we will elect for the second and fifth only. In the second, though we have not talked with him, we are told that Mr. Lanning the present trustee, will accept. As far as we know he has given excellent satisfaction, and if he asks it, we presume will have no trouble in getting it. In the fifth, we are told Mr. Heberling will not run again, and a new man will have to be selected. In this connection we hear people say, they will ask the place for ex-county clerk, D. Y. Husselman. We have not talked with Mr. H., but can see he would be a valuable member. His large experience in business, in business forms, drawing up papers, and his knowledge of the law, would make him a most desirable man to have on the board.

All the above named we can support if they get the nomination. Now let us have no nonsense or strife about this. Let every man make up his mind to support the one who gets the nomination, and not kick over the traces as some have done at previous elections. Above all, let us be fair and honest in getting the nomination. That is half the battle. The caucus will be called in a short time. Let us pick good men, and then elect them. We shall notice other candidates as their names come to us.

The council at its last meeting decided as to the voting precincts, of which we will have three. They will get the use of ballot boxes and booths of the township, and the election will be conducted under the same forms as that of last November. Caucus for nominations must be called in time, so, the names of candidates nominated may be certified to the clerk fifteen days before the election. This means for us now, by April 18.

Another DeKalb Boy Promoted.

A general business notice sent the COURIER this week, happens to contain the following item, which we do not suppose the bureau sending it, had any thought that it was coming home to Mr. M's old county. We give it in full:

"Prof. Chas. O. Merica, of Greencastle, Ind., has just been elected to the Professorship of Ancient Languages in the University of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. Several prominent men from different parts of the country were candidates for this position, hence it was quite an honor for an Indiana man,—a De Pauw graduate,—to be elected over all others. Mr. Merica was admitted as a member of the National Teachers' Association, whose headquarters are at 70 Dearborn Street, Chicago, a month ago, and it was on their recommendation that he was elected to this place."

Obituary.

John Kester was born in Ashland Co. Ohio, May 3, 1843. With his parents came to Indiana in 1846, united in marriage with Elizabeth Powell Oct, 6, 1864. To this union there were born six children. His companion and eldest son preceded him, by about seven years, to the spirit land. He has left to mourn his loss, one son and four daughters, three grand children, three brothers and three sisters. He departed this life March 8, 1891, aged 47 years, 10 months, and 5 days. The funeral services conducted by the writer were held in the Hopewell church of Jackson township, on the 10th, and the burial at Spencerville.

S. S. STANTON.

Obituary.

Elizabeth Krise, nee Smith, was born in Center county, Pennsylvania, March 20, 1804. At the age of 16, she was converted and since that time has been striving to live a godly life. For over seventy years she has been a member of some branch of the christian church. For a time, a member of the M. P. church; in later days of the U. B. church.

March 23, 1828, she united in marriage with Phillip Krise. Moved to Ashland county, Ohio, in the year 1836, from which place they came to Concord township, DeKalb county, in the fall of 1855, where she resided until death.

To this union were born seven children, four of which survive her, viz.:

Thomas and William Krise, Mrs. Sarah Inman and Mrs. Catherine McBride. She departed this life March 9, 1891, aged 86 years, 11 months and 14 days. It was the privilege of the writer to visit Sister Krise a few days before her death, and, though too weak to talk much, she assured us of her acceptance with God and her readiness to go when the Master should call. The funeral services, conducted by the writer were held in Mt. Pleasant church March 10, 1891, and the body laid to rest in the cemetery in the rear of said church.

Court.

The Judge has been giving the jury a hot race. They have had to be out about every night more or less, and begin to look like "blue Monday." Uncle Jimmy Latson says all the sleep he gets now, is while walking around yelling for witnesses. We left the court and jury last week working on the Emerick case in which one of the sons claimed some money on account against the estate. But after several days work, the jury decided against him. The next case was Central Life Ins. Co. vs John Huyck, to recover on a note he had given the Company for borrowed money. But he proved they had never delivered the money. So the jury said he needn't pay it but he might pay his own costs if he wanted to. The next jury case was in which A. F. Pinchin sued Sol. Shilling for $50 on account, which Pinchin had paid C. E. Emanuel, who had been Shilling's attorney to collect a claim the latter had against Pinchin. It was a mixed-up thing, but the jury said Shilling needn't pay, and he didn't. Other cases, but of no great interest have been fixed and finished.

Drowning the Bible.

The end of all true Bible teaching, says George W. Cable in The Ladies' Home Journal, is the development of a better likeness of Christ in the pupil's conduct. Not a headlong attempt to show Christ manifestly set forth in every page and paragraph; that would be trying to begin at the top to mount Jacob's ladder. Not the cramming of final crowning truths of Christianity into parts of Scripture that do not really contain them; distorting the Bible to teach Christianity; not contriving allegorical or symbolic meanings and then swamping and sinking them with eager and farfetched moralizings; drowning the Bible to teach Christianity; not expanding, even in apostolic writings, upon the ever-so-valuable non-essentials that accompany Christianity, as if they were parts of its essence. The true use of the Bible is none of these. Its true use in a teacher's hands is for him to maintain that all truth, all beauty, are parts of Christianity, and finding whatever truth and beauty are really contained in the page before him, to relate and adapt them accurately and with all skillful dispatch, to Christianity's only one or two supreme essentials.

Men who advertise and need a new idea now and then, or who have not always the time or inclination to prepare their advertisements, will find a valuable assistant in the novel book of "Ideas for Advertisers" just published by D. T. Mallett, New Haven Conn., and sent on receipt of $1.00, post-paid. He also publishes a tasty pamphlet called "When," (price 25c.) a treasury of good advice to business men. Descriptive circulars of both these new books can be obtained upon request to the publisher.

John Boots, every one knows John, one of the best natured men in the county came to town last week with a load of wood. The roads were bad, and he thought his wagon bumped along, a little more than a well behaved wagon should. But that didn't fret him. On reaching town, his attention was called to a broken wheel. The tire was gone, also most of the felloes, and even the spokes were not on speaking terms with one another. It was found, that the tire went off at the S J. Brandon farm, and he had come a mile and a half with a broken wheel. It must have been one of Shaffer & Berg's wagons, for we don't know of another make that would have stood such a journey.

Hon. Freeman Kelley can say with Falsaff: "Men of all stations take a pleasure in girding at me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause of that wit which is in others." This is illustrated by an anecdote in last week's Lagrange Democrat. The writer after adopting entire a few expressions from the Indianapolis Sun, goes on to tell a "funny" story on Mr. K., claiming the latter was not correct in his historical allusions on a certain occasion. How much better posted is this writer of this fanciful sketch, when he represents Mr. Kelley as making the race for congress 'against Billy Williams." Here is a critic who lived in a county close to the two candidates in a memorable contest happening but a few years ago, and he don't know who the candidates were. Yet he finds amusement in an attempt to be funny over a "supposed" speech that was inaccurate on a matter in a distant state, one or two hundred years ago. We'll back Mr. Kelley as to general information, against the writer of that article, any time, and give the latter five miles the start. We have no feelings of resentment for anyone who tries to be funny at Mr. Kelley's expense. He is simply indulging in a cheap pastime, that may tickle him, and surely does Mr. Kelley no harm.

We call attention to the mammoth new advertisement of Schaab & Brother in the COURIER. They have been for several days unloading boxes and boxes of new goods, and are now asking the people far and wide to come in and see them. They are not afraid to show goods or give prices, with a yone.

Late San Diego papers speak of Miss Mary Long, as superintendent of the Christian Endeavor society of the Presbyterian church there. She is the daughter of Ed. Long, well known in Waterloo and Auburn, and her promotion goes to show the correctness of our theory, for even the DeKalb ladies get prominent positions.

Mr. L. V. Yingling, who had his barber shop over Brown & Culbertson's agricultural store during the winter, has moved to the room over Ed. Eldridge's saloon. All his patrons will find him in a neat, cosy room ready to minister to the wants in his line with a promptness that will satisfy. Give Mr. Y, the patronage he deserves, and in that much, you will be supporting a business becoming to the town.

Chas. Delagrange who has been employed in the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works almost ever since the institution was established, moved his family, to Academie, Ind., last Monday. He will superintend the Academie farm. We are sorry to lose Mr. D. as a citizen of our little city. He is a good man and his presence among us, was a benefit to the town. But what we lose, someone else will gain and we extend our best wishes for his prosperity in the new location and new business. His residence on South Jackson street, will be occupied by Mr. Ziders, who has been in the employ of the Gandy & Nickey Co., as chief hostler.

The Sons of Veterans will give an entertainment at the new G. A. R. Hall, in memory of their 3rd anniversary, Monday evening, March 30, 1891. The three years existence of this Camp has been a successful one, and our people have been favored with some choice literary entertainments at their hands, whose quality and excellence spoke in plain tones of the push, energy and desire to please, that characterises these young men who are fitting themselves to fall into the line of march, as their fathers did before them, should this nation need assistance. Everyone has been well pleased with the boys when they celebrated, and this occasion promises to be up to the standard. Watch for the program which appears next week.

F P. Buck, who was raised on the DeKalb-Steuben line, writes for the COURIER to be sent to Beaver City, Nebraska, as he wants to hear from the old neighbors. He will see among other things, that we are publishing the early marriages from the organization of the county.

Young man, did you ever entertain the idea you might some day be recognized among the great, self-made men of our country? If you have not, awake at once from your lethargy, and if possible, induce your parents to buy $15 worth of goods of John Harris and get you a history of those men, who, by the muscles of their brawny arms and the genius of constructive brains, have made for themselves a glorious record in the world's history. 11tf

An alarm of fire called out the department and people generally last Saturday afternoon about half past five. Smoke was issuing from the windows in J. W. Rickel's law office. It was found the chimney was burning out and that heated the walls causing them to crack. It was caused by Mr. Rickel burning up a stove full of waste paper etc., that had accumulated. Except the walls no great damage was done. The firemen and engine were on hands in a jiffy, but were not needed.

The Pacific coast readers of the COURIER, D. P. Hale, D. S. Cochran, J. P. Ensley, Dr. Ford and the rest, will be interested in reading of our March snowstorm. Friday morning we found about four inches of snow and more falling. It stormed more or less all day and into the next night, and Saturday and Sunday mornings the mercury was nearly down to zero. No sleighing, for the roads were soft, and being covered with snow did not freeze in time. A few tried sleighs, but soon gave up.

A Narrow Escape—Two Hundred Emigrants Lost—One Million Dollar Fire—Buried Alive—A Small Wreck.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

A Family Dragged From a Burning Building Just in Time.

A fire attended with serious consequences, occurred at the Wasser row of tenement houses in Edin alley, Lawrenceville, Pa. David Kupperman, aged 47, was burned about the face and arms, condition critical, Mrs. Rachael Kupperman, aged 37, fatally burned; Simon Kupperman, aged 17, will die; Trice Kupperman, aged 2, condition critical; infant child four weeks old, will die. The residence was almost completely enveloped in flames when the firemen arrived, the occupants, not having awakened, were not aware of their danger. But for the cry of an infant in the burning house overheard by a fireman, all would have been cremated. The firemen made a gallant effort to rescue the family, and after a fierce battle with the flames and imminent danger to themselves, carried the five members of the family from the building. Solomon Goldenburg and Frank Smith, who boarded with the Kupperman family, jumped from a second floor window and were badly bruised. Mr. Kupperman, whose family suffered so severely, is a Polish Jew and a tailor.

Eleventh—Clem Studebaker and B. F. Louthain.

Twelfth—J. B. White and F. J. Hayden, of Fort Wayne.

State at large—J. L. Campbell, of Crawfordsville, and Mrs. May Wright Sewell, of Indianapolis.

Two Hundred Emigrants Drowned.

The British steamship Utopia, from Italian ports, bound to New York with 709 Italian emigrants aboard, collided with the British ironclad Rodney, anchored in Gibralter bay, and sank soon afterward off Ragged Staff. A southwest gale was blowing at the time of the collision. Many women and children were drowned. A large number clinging to the rigging have been rescued by boats from the channel squadron. Intense excitement prevails on the shore. The Utopia sank quickly. Two hundred passengers were drowned and 180 were rescued by ships in the harbor. The Utopia carried emigrants from Trieste, Austria; Catania, Naples, and other points.

He Dried Dynamite.

Halifax special: At the ship railway dock, near here, about seventy-five pounds of dynamite was placed at a fire to thaw out, by a man detailed for the work and who then went to his home a mile away. Just as he reached home the dynamite exploded, wrecking his shanty in which it was placed, and shattering into fragments the railway dredge close by. Considerable damage was done to the machinery about the dock. The shock was felt for miles. The explosion occurred only a few minutes before the time for the 300 men employed in blasting out rocks to begin work.

Prince Napoleon Dead.

Prince Napoleon is dead. His political testament declares that France had forever abandoned the monarchical ideas and requested that the traditions of the house of Bonaparte should never be used in the interest of a mere dynasty. To Prince Louis he is said to have left as a sacred legacy the duty of upholding the Democratic empire. In a codicil, written in the sick chamber, the dying Prince expressed the hope that France and Italy would ever be sister nations.

A Small Wreck.

While the Muskegon, Grand Rapids and Indiana train, seventeen minutes late, was discharging passengers at the Third Street depot, Muskegon, Mich., the Chicago and West Michigan train, two minutes late, rounded a curve and ran into the rear coach, demolishing platforms, cowcatcher, and draw bar. Mrs. C. H. Gaens, of Chicago, had her spine injured and was otherwise hurt. No others sustained serious injury.

One Million Fire.

Fire started in the eight-story building at Green and Bleeker streets, New York, occupied by Alfred Benjamin & Co., wholesale clothiers, and in two hours the great structure was a mass of ruins. The loss on building and stock is estimated at about $1,000,000.

Buried Alive.

Another snow-slide horror is reported from Crested Butte, Col. This time it is the Eureka Mine on Treasury Mountain. Charles Devine, J. C. McQuarries and Joseph McCullough, the entire force on the mine, were killed and their bodies covered by the snow.

Burned to Death.

Wm. Mulhearn and Richard Kraig, were burned to death recently at Girard colliery, Pa., by an explosion of gas which tore down tons of debris from the roof of the mine which the men were working, and also injured Rodney Belfast and Owen Martin.

New York Gets Her Share First.

The Treasury Department has issued a warrant for $2,213,330.86 in favor of Gov. Hill as New York's share of the direct tax fund. New York is thus the first State to get back her money under the bill passed at the last session of Congress.

The Government Cannot Be Held for Indemnity.

Secretary Blaine is in receipt of a number of telegrams from Italians throughout the country in regard to the New Orleans lynching, evidencing the deep feeling and interest the killing has aroused in this country. On all hands in official circles the killing is deeply deplored, but as far as opinions expressed in diplomatic circles indicate the United States cannot in any way be held responsible for the killing. "It is purely a political matter of State jurisdiction, and if any indemnity is demanded it cannot be from the United States. The demand of course will come from the Italian Government through its minister resident, and transmitted to the Secretary of Louisiana. That is the route, but it will not in any way commit the United States to the paying of an indemnity.

IS IT WAR?

An Educated Sioux Says There Is a Probability of Another Indian War.

Chicago special: Dr. C. A. Eastman, an educated Ogallala Sioux Indian, arrived here from Pine Ridge Agency. "I came down here," said he, "as a sort of messenger to combine business with a tour of investigation at Fort Sheridan. I have been in the camps of the Indians at Pine Ridge, and I assure you that from the present indications there is probability of another Indian war. There is a great deal of whispering and discontent among the Indians. Personally, I refuse to believe that the Indians will do anything desperate, but the young braves are holding secret conferences and even the conservative members in camp are taking warning. Since Kicking Bear, Short Bull and the twenty-four others were taken to Fort Sheridan, not one official word as to their treatment or their sentiment has been sent to the families and chiefs of the Sioux. It is generally believed among the Indians that the band of twenty-six is to be put to death.

WRECKS ON THE COAST.

Officers and Crew of the Triana Brought to Bedford.

New Bedford (Mass.) special: The revenue cutters, Dexter, of Newport, and Gallatin, of Boston, have arrived in this harbor. The Dexter had on board the officers and crew of the Triana, wrecked on Cuttyhunk. The Dexter left Newport at about 5 o'clock for Gay Head to render all the assistance possible. She arrived at Cuttyhunk at 8:15 o'clock. She reported a heavy sea and a strong southwest wind. The waves were breaking with terrible force over the Triana, and it was apparent that she was doomed. The bows have settled and the stern is lifted above water. If the wind continues it is expected that she will go to pieces. The Dexter only sighted the Galena. She was in the fury of the waves, which were dashing over her with such force that only the topmasts could be seen through the mist. The Dexter's officers would not speak of her condition or prospects, but say they are much worse than reported. They think all three vessels will be broken up.

BANGED TO A NAIL.

Scandal Involving a Preacher's Wife Causes Her Suicide.

Columbus (O.) special: Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, the wife of Rev. John Jones, a Congregational minister of this city, committed suicide by hanging herself to a nail in the wall at home, No. 410 Charles street. Evidently she had arisen in the night and committed the deed. She retired at her usual hour, but was unattended. It had been the custom of the family to always keep a watch over her, because of the pronounced melancholy into which she had fallen. About four years ago she was happily married, but trouble came and the home was blighted. Nearly a year ago the end predicted by the gossip was verified, when the Rev. Jones filed a petition for divorce. The home was broken up, and Mrs. Jones took up her residence with her sister. The divorce is still pending in the courts, and it was a subject on which the woman talked a great deal.

Exciting Scene.

Rome special: A most exciting and disgraceful incident took place during a debate in the Chamber of Deputies. Signor Imbriani, excited by some remarks, shouted to the Crispi group:

"You are servants of Austria."

To this taunt Signor Crispi replied: "Servants, no. Good friends, yes."

Upon hearing Signor Crispi's reply Signor Imbriani repeated his remark: "You are servants of Austria."

To this Signor Crispi retorted with a gross insult intended for Signor Imbriani. The latter called upon Signor Crispi to withdraw the remark but the ex-premier refused to do so, saying that while he held the position of a minister of the State, he had been forced to endure the annoyances of Signor Imbriani. "But now," angrily cried Signor Crispi, "I am no longer bound to do so, as I am only a deputy. In my pocket I have a revolver, if Signor Imbriani annoys me, let him beware." A scene of considerable excitement and confusion followed the utterance of these threatening words.

Quite a Romance.

Shamokin (Pa.) special: Miss Louisa Martin, who left this city thireeen years ago with Noah Long, whom she supposed was her husband, discovered about a month ago that the marriage was a mock one, and she returned to her home. She tells a pitiful tale of the treatment she was subject to while living with Long at Streeter, Ill. She requested on several occasions to be shown her certificate, but each time was refused on some pretense or other until at last she resolved to run away. Long watched her and prevented her doing so every time she made the attempt. She wrote to her father, who sent his two sons to her assistance. One day, while Long was at work, they called and brought their unfortunate sister home. Long wrote to the Chief of Police of this city to arrest his wife on the charge of having attempted to poison him and his five children. This proved untrue, and the officers are now on the track of Long.

Mrs. Cleveland's Pictures.

The pictures of Mrs. Cleveland are the basis of another suit filed in the United States Court at Cincinnati, by C. M. Bell, a Washington city photographer, against the Krebs Lithographing company. Mr. Bell recently brought suit against the Henderson Achert company, successors of the Krebs' company on the same account. But it turned out that when the Henderson Achert company found the pictures among the property bought, they destroyed them in the presence of witnesses. Bell now sues the Krebs company for $34,000, or one dollar for each picture sold, claiming that he had an exclusive right to sell Mrs. Cleveland's portrait.

Fire and Explosion.

Fire broke out in Weyand's brewery, Buffalo, N. Y., and was soon followed by a terrific explosion in a part of the building where a large quantity of malt was stored. Instantly following the explosion a great sheet of flame burst through the damaged walls. It ascended to the tower almost before the workmen could get out. Fifteen minutes after the explosion the flaming tower came crashing into the street. The whole building was then a mass of flames. The north wall of the brewery fell upon the two frame buildings adjoining, the residents barely escaping with their lives. The firemen had a stubborn fight, as a gale was blowing at the time. The loss is estimated at about $150,000, fully covered with insurance.

Robbed and Murdered.

Julius Moscow, a Hungarian, was found dead on the railway track near Wilkesbarre, Pa., and was supposed to have been run over by the cars. M. Rollins was arrested, charged with killing Moscow and placing his body on the tracks. It is said that the murderer offered to settle with the dead man's relatives for $300. Blood stains were found on the clothing and on the premises of Rollins. Moscow was on his way to New York and had $350 with him. The money was missing when the body was found.

The British Flag No Protection.

A private letter received at San Francisco from Capt. Porter, of the British bark Strathearn, dated at Pisagua, Chili, January 28, says all the vessels at that port came in for their share of shot at the taking of the town by the Government troops. The Birdson was perforated by a shell, and many of the other vessels were struck by rifle-balls. There was quite a panic among the people of the town, and many sought refuge aboard the ships. Capt. Porter says he had a busy day boating, and found that the British flag was no protection. He had set the Union Jack in the stern of the boat, but it was made a target of and he found it best to take it down.

Parnell's Manifesto.

Mr. Parnell has made public his long-expected manifesto. The beginning of the document is as follows:

HOUSE OF COMMONS, Friday, Mar. 12.

To the Irish People of America:

FELLOW COUNTRYMEN:—In 1880 and subsequent years, you assisted me powerfully by your influence upon American public opinion and with your generous financial support to create the great movement of the Land League. Without your aid so freely given and so constantly maintained, Ireland could not for one moment have made head against her oppressors. Still less could she have maintained the singular position of power and the promise of success which she has occupied during the last five years. At the instant when victory seemed near and certain, the hasty and meddlesome interference of English politicians defeated our plans.

To Protect the Seals.

The treasury department is considering the proposition to reduce the annual catch of fur seals in Behring's sea, as fixed by existing law, in order to guard against a possible extinction of the species. As such a step would necessarily operate as a hardship to the lessees not contemplated when the lease was made, the department will call on the Attorney General for an opinion as to the power of the Secretary to reduce the annual rental of the sea islands below the minimum of $50,000, as fixed by section 1,963 of the revised statutes.

Pritchard Wins.

A London cable says: The much discussed fight between Ted Pritchard and Jack Burke came off at the Albany Club hall in Holloway road and resulted in favor of Pritchard in the third round. The battle lasted only nine minutes and seven seconds. In this short time Burke was repeatedly knocked down and finally knocked out. Burke showed a great many clever tactics. Pritchard was as strong as a lion at the finish; his wind was unimpaired and he seemed good for any number of fights such as he had just concluded.

Poisoned Her Step-Mother.

Mrs. Ider Elder, a handsome young woman, 22 years of age, was arrested at New Castle, Pa., on her arrival from Pittsburgh, on the charge of the murder of her step-mother, Mrs. Levi Repman, in Wampum, Pa., in July, 1889. It is alleged that "Rough on Rats" was given to Mrs. Repman, who was ill at the time and, it was stated, had died of heart disease. Mrs. Elder is the wife of a locomotive engineer, who lived with her just one month after their marriage. She is apparently indifferent to the serious charge, but refuses to talk with any one on the subject.

A Passenger Train Derailed.

Day Express No. 5, south-bound on the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railroad, was derailed at Navarre, five miles south of Massillon, Ohio. A defective switch rod caused the accident. The engine passed the frog safely, but the combination baggage, mail and express, and two coaches were wrecked. None of the twenty passengers were hurt, but Postal Clerk U. T. McLean, of Toledo, Ohio, was so seriously injured that he will die.

A Priest Arrested for Vagrancy.

Father Charles O'Connor, of the diocese of New York, but for the past year engaged as a missionary on the Pacific coast, was arrested in Wilmington, Del., for vagrancy. Assistant Priest Flynn, of St. Mary's Church, communicated with and secured his release. He was taken to the church rectory and put to bed, and will be sent to his old post on the Pacific coast.

A Mob Hangs a Woman.

A Mt. Sterling, Ky., dispatch says a mob went to the house of Mrs. Wiggington, whose husband and sons are charged with poisoning Mr. Ferguson, and Mr. Watts, and hanged her, and are now searching for Mr. Wiggington, who has flown. Two of the Wiggington boys are in jail, which is strongly guarded.

Attack a School Teacher.

Noah Young and his three sons started after School Teacher L. A. Allen's scalp at Enon, a small town near Springfield, Ohio. They dragged Allen out, knocked him down with a billy and then nearly kicked him to death, because, as alleged, he punished Young's smallest son with undue severity.

Getting Ready for the World's Fair.

The legislative assembly of New Mexico appropriated $250,000 for a New Mexico exhibit at the World's Fair and proposed that four territorial commissioners be appointed by the Governor.

Wreck Near Goshen.

Two freight trains on the Lake Shore collided near Mishawaka, Ind., and twenty car loads of merchandise were smashed to flinders. It is reported that a fireman was killed.

MOB LAW FOR MAFIA.

ELEVEN ITALIANS LYNCHED AT NEW ORLEANS.

No Mercy for Assassins—Eighty Thousand Men Avenge Hennessey's Murder—The Wretched Prisoners Dragged from Their Cells and Shot and Hanged—Leading Residents Take Part.

Eighty thousand infuriated citizens rose up in their fierce wrath at New Orleans and wreaked summary vengeance on the men whom they considered guilty of the murder of Police Chief Hennessey. The excitement throughout the city over the miscarriage of justice in the case of the alleged Sicilian assassins leaped beyond all restraint. The parish prison was surrounded, the doors burst open and the Sicilian assassins taken out and lynched. Some were shot; the others were hanged.

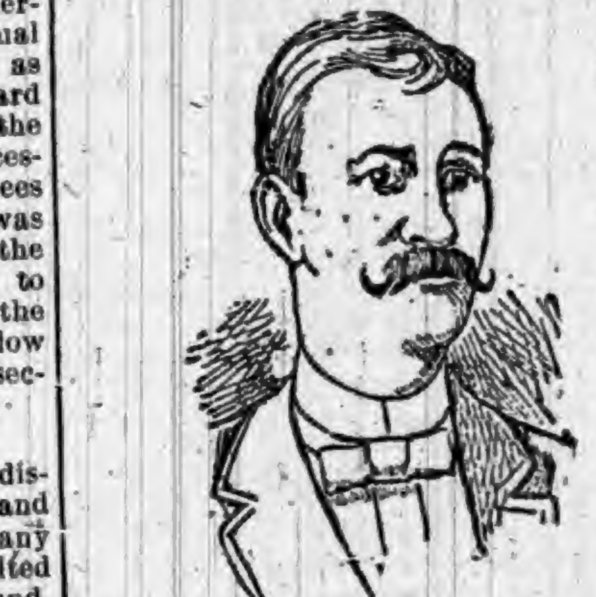
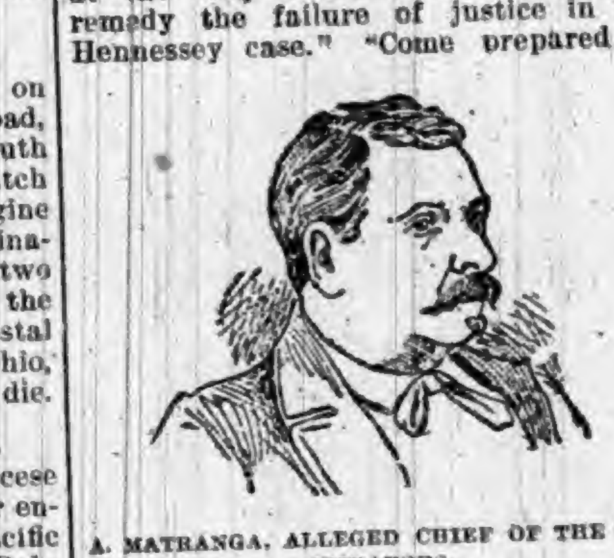
Charles Irienni and Soreto Conitz, who were charged with complicity in the murder of Hennessey, but who have not been tried, were also killed in their cells.

The boy Marchesi, Matranga Incerdona, who had been acquitted, were spared.



DAVID C. HENNESSEY, THE MURDERED CHIEF OF POLICE.

The verdict of the jury, acquitting six of the accused prisoners and reporting a disagreement as to three others, was received with general disapproval and rage and for a time it was apprehended that an attempt would be made to wreak vengeance upon the prisoners at once, but this was averted for the time. The evening newspaper extras were filled with intimations that the jury had been corrupted. It was asserted that not less than $75,000, and probably as much as $100,000, was contributed by Italians all over the country for a defense fund. Thousands of dollars, it was said, came from Chicago and New York, and farm laborers were taxed $2 a head. These statements only served to infuriate the enraged populace still more, and as a consequence a call appeared in the papers, signed by one hundred prominent citizens, for a mass meeting to assemble at the Clay statue "to take steps to remedy the failure of justice in the Hennessey case." "Come prepared for action," was the concluding injunction in the call.



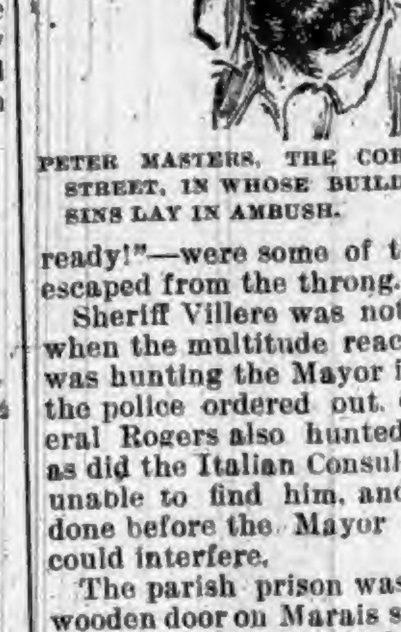
A. MATRANGA, ALLEGED CHIEF OF THE CONSPIRATORS.

The mob congregated at the Clay statue in broad daylight.

Mr. Parkerson spoke first. He said that he faced the people of New Orleans to denounce the most infamous act which was consequent upon the most revolting crime in the criminal annals of any community. That act was the finding of the jury in the murder trial and that crime was, as everybody knew, the foul assassination of the chief of police.

"I desire neither fame nor name nor glory," said Mr. Parkerson. "I am a plain American citizen, and as such and as a good citizen I am here."

The crowd was yelling itself hoarse. Fury ungovernable was evident throughout that immense assemblage, which by that time numbered fully eighty thousand people. "Shall you protect yourself?" "Yes." "Self-preservation is the first law of nature!" "This is the time for action, not talk!" "Come on, Wycliffe!" "Come on, Parkerson!" "We are ready!"—were some of the cries which escaped from the throng.



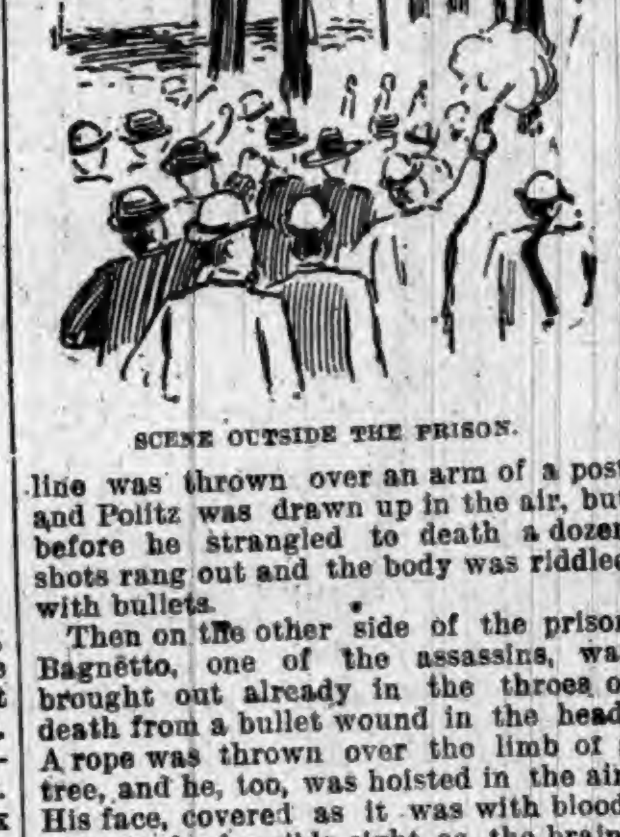
PETER MASTERS, THE COBBLER OF GIROB STREET, IN WHOSE BUILDING THE ASSASSINS LAY IN AMBUSH.

Sheriff Villere was not at the prison when the multitude reached there. He was hunting the Mayor in order to have the police ordered out. Attorney General Rogers also hunted up the Mayor, as did the Italian Consul, but they were unable to find him, and the work was done before the Mayor or the Governor could interfere.

The parish prison was reached. The wooden door on Marais street was broken in with a large billet of wood, used as a catapult and heavy rocks were also poured against it.

No material resistance was offered by the police or the Sheriff to the work of the citizens, who were armed with shotguns and pistols, and who represented not only the humbler classes but the most prominent bankers, citizens, merchants, and professional men in New Orleans. A wagon filled with police dashed up to the scene, but they were driven away amid a shower of mud and did not seem anxious to charge the crowd. The Sheriff's deputies found that resistance was useless. When apprised of the approach of the mob the prison officials transferred the Italians from the male to female department of the prison, and when the armed men who got on the inside of the jail found them the prisoners ran down into the yard below. They begged and pleaded for mercy, but for some of them there was no mercy at the hands of these outraged citizens. When the prisoners reached the yard they tried to seek places of safety, but there was none to be found and the shotguns belched forth and the slayers of Hennessey fell dead in their tracks. Macheca, the arch conspirator, crouched down in a corner with his hands before his face and screamed. A dozen bullets entered his body and he pitched head foremost on the stone pavement, dead. In the great confusion it was difficult to ascertain who had been killed.

While the work of vengeance was going on inside, a crowd of men came out of the jail with the crazy assassin Politz. Some one had a rope, and as the miserable Italian was rushed to the corner the line was thrown over an arm of a post and Politz was drawn up in the air, but before he strangled to death a dozen shots rang out and the body was riddled with bullets.



SCENE OUTSIDE THE PRISON.

Then on the other side of the prison Bagnetto, one of the assassins, was brought out already in the throes of death from a bullet wound in the head. A rope was thrown over the limb of a tree, and he, too, was hoisted in the air. His face, covered as it was with blood, presented a horrible sight as the brains oozed forth.

Police Officer Herron, who was in the prison, was shot in the neck, and he is the only one outside the prisoners who suffered.

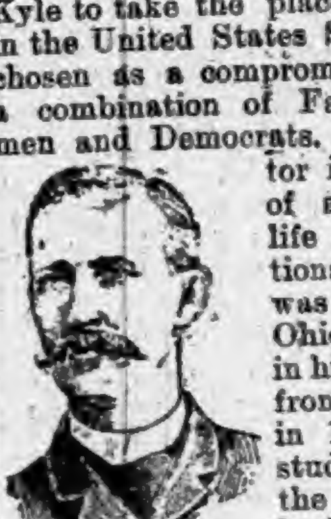
After the work was done Mr. Parkerson addressed the dense mob of citizens and advised them to disperse. They frantically applauded, and when he finished carried him bodily on their shoulders. The multitude participating in the avenging work then marched to Canal street shouting and waving handkerchiefs in the air.

Mass meetings of infuriated Italians are being held throughout the country, and it is feared that the end is not yet.

SENATORS FROM NEW STATES.

The Men Chosen by South Dakota and Idaho to Represent Them.

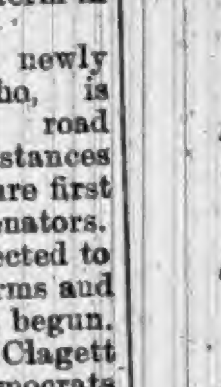
South Dakota has selected J. H. Kyle to take the place of Mr. Moody in the United States Senate. He was chosen as a compromise candidate by a combination of Farmers' Alliance men and Democrats. The new Senator is only 38 years of age, and began life as a Congregational minister. He was born at Xenia, Ohio, and graduated in his twentieth year from Oberlin College in 1873. He then studied theology in the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa., and came out in 1882. He officiated as pastor of a church in Salt Lake City. He went to Dakota five years ago, and is now Financial Secretary of Yankton College. He has taken an active part in politics, and served a term in the Dakota Senate.



SENATOR J. H. KYLE.

Judge William Clagett, the newly elected Senator from Idaho, is likely to have a hard road to travel, owing to the circumstances of his election. The Legislature first elected three instead of two Senators. McConnell and Shoup were elected to fill the long and the short terms and Dubois for that which has just begun. Since then the friends of Judge Clagett effected a coalition with the Democrats and elected him in the place of Dubois. The election of Dubois is considered by Senator Edmunds to be legal and it is probable that the question of the legality of Clagett's election will be raised.

Judge Clagett is a native of Maryland, but has been in the West since 1850. He was elected delegate to Congress from Montana in 1871, defeating the present Governor, J. K. Toole, by 431 votes. He has resided in Montana, Nevada, Dakota and Idaho. He is a lawyer, but is interested in mining. The Mormons, who have influence in Idaho, supported him against Dubois.



CLAIMANT WILLIAM CLAGETT.

Conductor Cured of Flirting.

A respectable young woman often happened to get on a car on which was a very gallant conductor, who always made some remark to her about the weather. One morning she took the car to come to the city. The conductor was unusually friendly, and asked her if she would go to the theater with him that night. The young woman could hardly believe her ears, but replied: "Oh, yes, with pleasure." The conductor then appointed a meeting place near one of the city theaters.

When the young woman's brother came home in the evening she told him, and she suggested that he dress in her clothing and meet the conductor. The brother acquiesced, kept the appointment, and was met by the gallant conductor with expressions of the greatest joy. They then went to the theater. The conductor bought two of the best seats in the house. As soon they were seated the conductor wanted to know what made his companion so quiet, and implored her to take off her veil. The bashful person at last did take off the veil, and disclosed a very masculine visage. "I'll have you arrested," panted the conductor, and, leaving the theater, he sought the aid of police, but was only laughed at.—Montreal special.

Lots of Timber Yet.

Says a Western lumberman: "The signing of a contract for 600,000,000 feet of pine in Minnesota should serve as a reminder that the fear of American forests giving out is far from being an imaginary one. I have been handling lumber by the 10,000 feet for two-thirds of a lifetime, but the figures in this deal took me by surprise, and it was some time before I could realize them. The supply of lumber in the North is steadily giving out, as the figures for Michigan in particular show. Ten years ago the annual output or product was just about the size of the great Minnesota contract just signed, for single companies, but the aggregate totals for 1890 barely reached these figures. We are lavish and extravagant with our lumber now, but at the present rate of consumption there will be precious little left to consume a quarter of a century hence, even making allowance for what we can draw from Mexico after Mr. Blaine's reciprocity treaty has been drafted and signed."

The Western Settler's Chosen Specific.

With every advance of emigration into the far West a new demand is created for Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Newly peopled regions are frequently less salubrious than older settled localities, on account of the miasma which rises from recently cleared land, particularly along the banks of rivers that are subject to freshets. The agricultural or mining emigrant soon learns, when he does not already know, that the Bitters afford the only sure protection against malaria, and those disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, to which climatic changes, exposure, and unaccustomed or unhealthy water or diet subject him. Consequently, he places an estimate upon this great household specific and preventive commensurate with its intrinsic merits, and is careful to keep on hand a restorative and promoter of health so implicitly to be relied upon in time of need.

Extravagant Economy.

The Captain of a fine clipper ship, rather than pay the price of having a tug tow her into port, attempted to sail her in during a furious gale. The result of this economy was the loss of an $80,000 craft, a $100,000 cargo, and the lives of the Captain and seventeen of the crew, which considerably more than offsets the saving of the price of a tug. Another sad feature arising from this economical spirit of the thrifty Captain, was the death of the Captain of the lifeboat which went to the clipper's assistance when she was driven on the rocks. Altogether it was extravagant economy.—New York Evening World.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

THE REAL POET.

BY HOWARD C. TRIPP.

'Tis he whose words like flaming fires
Warm up the passions of the breast,
'Tis he who sings of grand desires,
Of labor, honor, love and rest.

'Tis he whose lines are like the breath
Of summer's rarest flowers in bloom,
Who sings a deathless song of death,
And glorifies the hero's tomb.

'Tis he who with a master's art
Can touch the chords of life and bring
Divinest feelings to the heart—
Bright blossoms on an angel's wing.

He doth express the grandest thought
In staves of sweet, exquisite rhyme,
And with a pen with beauty fraught
He writes the annals of his time.

'Tis he who sees beyond the stars
The beauty of another clime,
And lifts the shadow's dusky bars
From sweeter scenes that are sublime.

He is a man whom we admire,
A mortal with a brain divine,
Whose words shall like a glowing fire
In stanzas sweet forever shine.

Dr. Elfenstein's Mission

A Remarkable Romance.

BY EMILY THORNTON.

CHAPTER XXX.

SEARCHING THE RUINS.

This, then, was the end of it all!

The wayfaring man, dead, in his upper room, was not the Rev. Edwin C. Stiles, but Sir Arthur Glendenning, the lost baronet.

Lost! Yes, indeed, lost to his friends, but not murdered. And Dr. Elfenstein felt a thrill of joy pass over him as the next thought came.

His employer was now Sir Fitzroy Glendenning, and he was entirely cleared of the heinous crime with which he had so long been charged. He was ready to be received joyfully back to his own estate and home.

Yes, his summons could bring him, for he alone knew where he resided.

He should start for New York immediately, and accompany and care for him on his return voyage.

Then another thought came—a thought that made his heart throb tumultuously—and that thought was this:

His pledge had been fulfilled!

Sir Fitzroy's name was cleared, and now he was free to woo and wed the girl of his choice. But as gladly as his heart had throbbed one moment before, so suddenly had it sunk again, like lead in his bosom

Was this girl—this one girl that he so devotedly loved—worthy?

Had she a knowledge of that hidden crime?

Was her hand the one that nightly opened those panels and shoved in that repulsive food to a human being—a peer of the English realm?

Again, with a smothered groan, he felt that it was she!

He remembered her wild entreaty that he should neither light a candle nor search that corridor on that dreadful night.

And he had been fool enough to listen to her pleadings.

Yes! He was convinced that she had aided the inhuman brother in carrying out his wicked purposes!

But again, he thrust away the idea; and at last resolved to see this girl, just once more, accuse her of being an accessory to this foul wrong, and then hear her reasons for so doing.

Possibly there might be some extenuating circumstances, some unexplained reason why she had lent herself to this purpose.

Possibly it was to release him in the end by giving him the knife.

She certainly had placed this method of escape in his hands.

Perhaps, then, God made her the instrument of his final release for His own purposes.

He would think so, until she had an opportunity given her for a full avowal or explanation.

If her own story proved that she willingly aided this human fiend in carrying out his sinful designs, then he would think of her no more forever.

But, if she convinced him she was innocent?

A wild heart tumult, within, finished the sentence.

Banishing all these thoughts for the present, the young physician turned his attention again to his friends, and became interested when they exclaimed, all together:

"There is not one doubt of his being Sir Arthur! But how strange that no one recognized him!"

"Not at all," returned the Doctor, "as I understand it, for I have heard a description of the supposed murdered man many, many times, as he was twenty-five years ago—a robust, black-haired, beardless young gentleman. Now he was a thin man, with snow-white hair and a long, snow-white, full beard. His attire then was that of a gay, fashionable denizen of the world; lately we saw him in the long, strait-cut, black broadcloth coat usually worn by clergymen. So you plainly see, my friends, everything tended to change his whole appearance."

"Doctor," now queried Mr. Lee, "what course is next to be pursued?"

"We must, early to-morrow, go to the porter's lodge on the premises—I think the keeper is still there—get the keys of the Hall and investigate the ruined part with its concealed room. If we find all as here said, we must at once publish the facts far and wide. I should also recall the servants, who probably still are near, and reopen the house, and from his own home bury the real baronet. All these years a false baron has reigned in his stead."

"Poor Sir Arthur! Yet what nobility of soul, what pure Christian principles actuated that last resolve never to expose the usurper. His was a grandly unselfish and loving heart," remarked the minister, "and such self-denial and devotion we rarely meet."

"Very true," was the reply of nearly all present.

Then the lawyer made a proposition, which was to visit the place at once.

"Could we not enter the ruins without being seen?"

"Yes, I am quite certain we can," Dr. Elfenstein replied. "I scarcely think it has been entered since the poor prisoner escaped, as the guilty party alone knew of its existence; and I judge, dared not send any person to close the place. We have time to go and return before dark. Come, let us start."

All the gentlemen arose as he thus acquiesced in the plan, and silently wended their way to the now deserted Hall.

They did not take the front entrance to the grounds, but gained it by a shorter route, emerging at the rear of the house, and so passing unseen to the clump of bushes, behind which was the entrance previously used by Dr. Elfenstein.

The stone he then found replaced, and the opening, therefore, scarcely perceptible.

This we explain to our readers, although Earle could not understand it.

The person who nightly brought the food in a basket, came after the escape had been made, to find the one placed there the night previous gone. Ethel had not returned it. Leaving the one he had in its place, a second visit found that undisturbed.

Twice this happened, then the man asked to see Sir Reginald.

He was received alone, and told to replace the stone and cease his labors, as no more food was required.

After receiving a large reward for past faithful labors the man departed, never having known at all for what purpose the food had been required.

Rolling away the stone, Dr. Elfenstein crept through into the passageway or hall, followed by his two companions.

Crossing this place, they found the door leading into the corridor wide open, as it had been left the night of that terrible fright.

Once in the corridor, they hastened to the end near the tower-stairs, and there, wide open, exposed to view through still parted panels and displaced shelves, lay the concealed room which for twenty-five years had held poor Sir Arthur a prisoner, now empty, and oh, so mournful when seen in the light of this fearful crime committed against an elder brother by one so long known in their community as Sir Reginald Glendenning.

Yes, here it all was, just as the journal had described it.

A good-sized bedroom, well furnished, soft bed, center table, large bookcase full of a quantity of well-selected books, and opening into a back room, with necessary toilet appurtenances. But the most terrible proof of all was a staple driven in the wall, with a long chain attached, from which the poor man, now dead, had cut himself loose.

Then there lay the iron shelves that had so long revolved, bringing the daily allowance of disgusting food, how disgusting could be seen, as a large dish of it stood on a shelf in one of the closets.

Every link was now perfect. The horrible tale was true,

If further confirmation was needed it was at hand, in the shape of the one note written by Reginald to his brother, when he had given him pen, ink, and paper, at his earnest request.

This note fell from a book that Mr. Lee picked from the table.

Lawyer Huntley knew the writing at once, as he had often received notes from the false baronet, in relation to legal matters.

Everything was examined, and everything was found to be exactly as described in the journal.

Then the Doctor related his experience on the night of the escape, and after telling of his discoveries in "The Haunted Tower" he led his friends up to the scene of that stupendous fraud.

Astonishment and indignation blended in the explanations that again broke from each lip, as they saw the frightful-looking figure, and all the colored lights, with their workings, used so long and so successfully to operate upon the fears of a whole community.

Turning away then with disgust from the spot, Elfenstein led them back, and endeavored to open the door leading to the wardrobe in Ethel's former room, but he found it as he feared, securely bolted within. The same fastenings debarred entrance into the baronet's room.

Having discovered all that could be done that day, the three gentleman wended their way from the place, and after returning to their homes for their evening meal, they all decided to meet at the village inn, and there make known the contents of the mysterious wallet.

CHAPTER XXXI.

A PAINFUL INTERVIEW.

It was the morning after the events related in the last chapter had taken place, that Ethel sat alone in Lady Claire Linwood's private boudoir, apparently engaged with some pretty fancy work, but in reality more occupied with her own sad thoughts than the needle work.

Her grace the Duchess of Westmoreland and Lady Claire had accepted an invitation from their agent, Mr. Bradley, to visit an estate he had recently added to their possessions, quite a long distance from the castle. In order to thoroughly examine it, they expected to occupy the entire day, and as Ethel had quite a headache, she declined accompanying them.

Seated by the broad open window, she watched the little party as they drove away, then resumed her own thoughts and work.

She was really glad to be alone this day; glad to rest from teaching, even while she liked her daily occupations. Her heart had been very sorrowful ever since she entered this charming home.

Her dejection was caused entirely by the coldness which had arisen between herself and the young physician she had learned to love.

During the weeks she had been in this place everything had been done to promote her happiness. She was ever treated with the greatest kindness, and by Lady Claire with true affection. She had entered into all her pupil's pleasures with seeming sympathy when her soul was even most cast down.

To-day occupation was irksome. Her mind rebelled from study and the school-books, and, as I said, the holiday was to her a welcome relief.

How beautiful everything looked to her weary eyes as she cast them from the window! How full the air was of fragrance, from flowers and bush, and how merrily a starling was singing from the branches of an old elm near by!

But its innocent glee awoke no answering echo in her own heart; there all was desolation and sorrow.

She felt so lonely in this her youth—no mother, aunt, relative near in whom to find sympathy and love.

Yes, she was utterly alone, and would be until claimed by an unknown father; and when she might be cheered by the love of one true heart, her misfortunes had alienated its respect, and all she could do was to constantly battle with her own self, and strive to overcome the unfortunate attachment that was wearing upon her health and spirits.

To-day, the more she resolved to forget this man, the more she studied over his coldness, the more she fondly remembered him, and told herself that it was her own want of frankness, and the suspicious circumstances in which he had found her placed that had shaken his confidence in her integrity, and merited only his scorn. But, bound as she had been to solemn secrecy, she could not conceive how she could have acted differently, and she felt convinced that, in order to be true to the trust imposed upon her, she had done no wrong.

So deep had been her reverie that she heard no bell, no opening door, no sound, and not until the words, "Miss Nevergail, I hope I do not interrupt you," fell upon her ear, did she dream that she was not alone!

Starting to her feet, she turned to face Dr. Elfenstein.

She would have extended her hand and welcomed him joyfully, but his grave, almost stern, looks deterred her, and, as he offered no further greeting, she merely assured him she was perfectly at leisure, and then wheeled up a large easy-chair for his use.

Not noticing the latter, however, the Doctor took a lighter one, and, placing it opposite the one she had resumed, said, as he sat down:

"I am glad to find you alone, as my business is important, and concerns no one but ourselves. The footman told me at the door that the family were absent, and I would find you here."

"They are absent for the day, and, therefore, I am at your service."

"The nature of my business, I fear, may startle you, but I feel that I ought not to forego it on that account. I shall be obliged to ask you several questions that you may dislike to answer, but, Miss Nevergail, allow me to say, as a preface, that perfect frankness on your part will be the best in the end."

The young man paused for a moment, then pitying her evident confusion he went on:

"Certain things, lately transpiring, have led me to regret exceedingly that I did not use my own judgment that evening, when we were together in the corridor at Glendenning Hall, and search for the cause of our fright. I should certainly have done so had you not seemed so decidedly to oppose it. I came to talk with you a little upon your career while in that house. Had you, as I suppose, any especial reason for not wishing that candle lighted, and a search made?"

Poor Ethel! She knew not what course to take now to regain his esteem. Certainly she could only falter, while a burning blush mantled cheek and brow:

"I had, but I cannot explain it!"

"Are you ashamed to tell the reason?"

Raising her eyes instantly to his she was dismayed at the stern gaze fixed upon her own.

But she answered, even while she trembled,

"Not ashamed, Doctor. Save for what I did under compulsion in the tower, I have no cause for shame."

"Then, you certainly are a very different person from the one I took you to be," was the cold reply. "Miss Nevergail, allow me to tell you that a more infamous crime was never committed than the one you, an innocent-appearing young girl, aided and abetted by your help while in that sin-stained house."

"Doctor Elfenstein!" exclaimed Ethel, rising to her feet, surprise and horror blending together on each of her beautiful features, and wonder and dismay settling in her large, hazel eyes; "what is this you are saying to me? If I understand aright, you are accusing me of being an accessory to some dark crime! Speak! Did I understand you to mean this?"

"You surely did."

"Then, sir," returned the indignant girl, drawing up her slight figure to its full height, while a queenly dignity reigned in each motion, even though every particle of color left both cheek and lip, "then, sir, all I shall say in reply is that you accuse me falsely, and in doing so you cease to be my friend!"

"But, Miss Nevergail, reflect one moment. Had I not been your friend I should wish no explanation. I am your friend, while I desire to be sure of your innocence. You say, and I rejoice to hear you affirm it, that you are guiltless. Will you not relieve my mind of these doubts by telling me frankly the nature of your occupation while at the Hall?"

Clasping her hands together in anguish, the poor girl only answered: "Would that I might, but I cannot!"

"Then, Miss Nevergail, I shall be obliged to tell you that all has been discovered, and that your horrible secret is known."

"O, thank God! Can it be possible! Please go on, for I am anxious to hear all you know, but dare not utter one word!" exclaimed Ethel.

"You must learn then, that your nightly work was to carry food to a certain concealed room, place it upon revolving shelves, and——"

"Doctor, you do indeed know all; then now am I free to speak, as no secret will be revealed by me? Those shelves were knocked over, and the ape escaped that night. It was his dreadful howl that so frightened us. Tell me, has the animal been recaptured, and returned to the owner?"

"Ape? Owner?" queried the Doctor, surprise illuminating each one of his speaking features. "What can you mean?"

"Yes; Sir Reginald said it was a kind never before seen of that species. He was keeping it concealed, until the owner returned with other extraordinary curiosities, he was abroad collecting. When he did return, all were to be exhibited. The fact that he kept its existence a secret, and made me take a solemn oath, never to reveal it, was certainly no crime. It was absurd, and the absurdity sprang from a love of money, but in consenting to preserve the creature's life by giving him food, during his lordship's illness, I did it, only because he was nervous, and seemed to worry so much over its helplessness. I saw nothing wrong in it, and as it was not sinful, I am not ashamed of it."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Land Where All is Light.

The contrast is indeed marked coming out from under the star-besprinkled heavens of this winter's night to a mundane office with its conventional chairs and gray desks, and folded files in their pigeon-hole tombs. To the average weary mortal stars are only feeble lamps to light his tired footsteps homeward, but to the philosopher they are the great luminous centers of systems of worlds, the numbers of which the grains of sand and the drops of water of this little planet called Earth would only begin to count. Our world is only an atom of star dust floating we know not whence or whither. Our petty doings and ephemeral activities, like those of our fathers, will soon have

> Of things that were;

will soon be resolved into the infinite azure of the past, and endless oblivion will be our achievement so far as future ages here are concerned. Again,

"See here," said the barber as he got seated in the chair, "let me go ahead and fix you up just as if you were going to get married to-night."

"Say! Did anybody tell ye?" whispered the old man.

"No, not exactly."

"But you tumbled?"

"Yes."

"Kinder give myself away by acting so colty, eh?"

THE first spectacles, which were very expensive, were made in Italy. Somewhat later the manufacture of cheaper glasses sprang up in Holland, and it spread late in the fourteenth century to Germany. Nurnberg and Rathenow acquired fame for their glasses between 1490 and 1500. For many years glasses were used only as means for aiding bad eyes. First in Spain appeared the fashion of wearing glasses merely for the sake of wearing them. It spread rapidly to the rest of the continent, and brought about the transformation of the old thirteenth century spectacles into eyeglasses, and eventually into the monocle, "the cosmopolitan trade-mark of the dandy."

Shelbyville Democrat:

He is little and meek, and you'd scarcely dream
He'd ever a word to say;
But you ought to hear his adjectives stream
In a woful, wicked way,
When copy for puffs comes in by the ream
From patrons who do not pay!

Now Try This.

It will cost you nothing and will surely do you good, if you have a cough, cold, or any trouble with throat, chest or lungs. Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, is guaranteed to give relief, or money will be paid back. Sufferers from La Grippe found it just the thing and under its use had a speedy and perfect recovery. Try a sample bottle at our expense and learn for yourself just how good a thing it is. Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Large size 50c and $1 00. 3

Bluffton Banner says: "What the people want is a plain, equitable and just fee and salary law, without any curlycues about it. Something so plain that it will not admit of constructive fees. It is a law that is demanded by the people."

Height of Cruelty.

Nervous women seldom receive the sympathy they deserve. While often the pictures of health, they are constantly ailing. To withhold sympathy from these unfortunates is the height of cruelty. They have a weak heart, causing shortness of breath, fluttering, pain in side, weak and hungry spells, and finally swelling of ankles, oppression, choking, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is just the thing for them. For their nervousness, headache, weakness, etc., his Restorative Nervine is unequaled. Fine treatise on "Heart and Nervous Diseases" and marvelous testimonials free. Sold and guarranteed by F. E. Davenport. 3

John F. Daniels, Shelbyville, forged a $50 check on J. E. Daniels, Saturday, and when arrested and confronted with the fact, said, yes, he did it, and he didn't care who knew it!

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with neuralgia and rheumatism, his stomach was disordered, his liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shephard, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely, Sold by Robbins & McCord 3

Geo. Hayn, farmer, 63 years old, near Terre Haute, cut his throat Saturday. Despondent over heavy losses and given to drink. May recover.

Our Baby Boy.

The pride of our home should have proper care and during certain seasons when the air is damp, children are often taken with a cough that should be attended to in time. The best remedy you can use is Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, the children's friend. It is pleasant to the taste and can be given to the smallest child without danger. Mothers, send for Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup and use no other. Sold by F. E. Davenport. 13

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Dr. Chamberlain is improving.

J. Fitzgerald went to Toledo, Wednesday.

John Fisher has returned from California, and is on our streets again.

Mrs. Ryan from Fremont is here visiting her daughter Mrs. Weaver.

D. A. Garwood, of Auburn, was in town on Wednesday of last week.

The U. B. church case will be tried on Tuesday of next week, March 24.

Rev. J. W. Lilly will hold a quarterly meeting at Corunna next Saturday and Sunday.

R. M. Lockhart's team made a lively run away a few days ago. Not much damage was done.

The younger member of the firm of Lazenby Brothers, who was recently married, has moved back to Angola.

The Rev. Marshall is engaged to fill the pulpit of the Presbyterian church. He has preached several sermons here

Report says there will be a wedding in town soon, perhaps several. One of the prospective brides resides on South Wayne street.

Elder Moot, of Butler, has been engaged by the Disciples to preach for them. He has moved his family into the J. S. Jackman house.

Wednesday and Thursday evenings of last week, "The Shadows of Shasta" was played at the Opera House, with one or two exceptions, by home talent.

Mrs. T. C Ford and daughter Margeret were here last Friday and Saturday the guests of Mrs. Noah Weaver, they also attended the concert given by the Choral Union.

It is said that Tom Brown and family, who formerly resided here, are in trouble in Steuben county being charged with burglary and stealing and secreting stolen goods.

Frank Davenport, Walter Hartman, Miss Minnie Zimmerman and Miss Nellie Barns were over from Auburn Friday evening to attend the concert given by the Choral Union.

Some miscreants have been enjoying themselves by shooting the woodhouse door of Robert Speer, in the west part of town, full of shot. It is time such recklessness was stopped.

The Ford family will gave a musical and elocution entertainment at the M. E. church the evenings of March 17 and 18. This was in the interests of the L. A. S. we learned from the bill.

Tuesday evening the L. M. C. held their regular session with Mrs. Olive Jackman. So many of the members have been ill, that the attendance for several weeks has not been nearly so good as usual.

Revs. J. W. Lilly and Brosia, of the U. B. church were in town a short time on Monday. Mr. Brosia had just closed a revival meeting at Pleasant Lake in which 95 had been converted and 60 had joined the U. B. church.

Lœwenstein & Co. have been repairing their store room and making it look as neat and fresh as a daisy with paper and paint. All this is to prepare the rooms for their new and beautiful stock of spring goods which will soon be here.

Capp, the proprietor of the meat market on North Wayne street, has moved into the brick on South Wayne, owned by Mrs. J. U. Winslow, where he hopes to have his share of patronage, and to merit it, by furnishing good meat, and in variety to suit the taste of his customers.

Mrs. Juliette Dickinson is recovering from a very severe attack of the grip of several weeks duration. E. P. Dickinson also had the same disease in a less severe form, also his little girl. Harriet Mrs. Waterman, Mrs. Winslow, George Kennedy and a number of others have been among the sufferers.

Clint Graham, the man who fell from the passenger train, west of town, several weeks ago, and who was kept at the hotel here a long time, and then taken to a hospital in Chicago, died there Wednesday. He was a wealthy stock man of Montana, and it will always remain a mystery as to how he fell from the train

Rev. J. D. Snyder has just returned from an extended Evangelistic tour in Pennsylvania, where he has been assisting the Methodist church in revival meetings. We learn that he will travel a portion of the coming season with a large tent, doing revival work for the M. E. church, and no doubt will be successful in his labors for that church.

Friday evening, March 13, the Choral Union gave a very fine entertainment at the M. E. church. The audience room was opened to its full size, and was completely filled, as was also the gallery. Many invited friends were present from neighboring towns. The piano used was from C. H Baldwin & Co., of Ft. Wayne. Waterloo certainly has reason to feel proud of the musical talent of many of her people, and to judge from the rapt attention given, and the hearty applause, both instrumental and vocal music were appreciated and thoroughly.

BUTLER.

Eugene Mock remains about the same.

Mrs. Anna Glennings is a little better, but still very poorly.

By some accident our items failed to reach the COURIER last week.

James Revett has materially improved and bids fair to get around again.

Isaac Hurshler, of Philadelphia, Pa., is visiting with his daughter, Mrs. Ben Stiefel.

Eli Bryan is about to purchase property in Butler and become a resident of our little city.

McLewis, removes to this week to the village of Blakesly, to assist Geo. Casebeer in his store at that place.

John S. Greenwalt, of Stafford, who has been confined to his bed about seventeen years, is quite poorly this winter.

William Maxwell, son of Joseph Maxwell, recently deceased, lies dangerouslyill with typhoid fever at his home in Angola.

J. A. Campbell was called to Bryan, Ohio, last on an Edgerton insurance lawsuit. He thinks the chances for an insurance company in a lawsuit, are meager indeed.

George C. Haskins is preparing to build a two story double brick building on the site occupied at present by his residence, which he will remove to the south side of Oak street.

Mrs. Mattie Zeigler, was buried last week at Eddy's Conners. Her death took place at her father's, four miles southeast of Butler. She leaves a husband some where in the west, one child and her aged father in very feeble health, to mourn her early death.

SUMMIT.

Mrs. Edward Jackman is slowly improving.

DEKALB.
LAST WEEK.

Esquire Hoffman lost two colts.

H. P. Housel is building a small barn on his lot.

C. H. Baber will cry a sale for D. W. Fair March 18.

James Monroe is still with Eli. Lane section foreman.

E E Housel is the owner of some fine Poland China pigs.

Wm. Balentine is moving to St. Johns this week on W. H. Fair's farm.

The boys in this vicinity have organized a band to be known as St. Johns Cornet Band.

The Farmer's Alliance at DeKalb is flourishing and are taking in new members at each meeting.

New groceries at J. F. Housels every two weeks. Prices very reasonable give him a call and be convinced.

Ad. McKinley moved to LaOtto last week. H. Hyatt moved into the property the same day and will continue selling goods.

C. C. Grim's horses took fright in front of the DeKalb P. O. and run west about half a mile. No one hurt, but a violin bounced from the wagon and was badly wrecked and will have to go to the shop for repairs.

FAIRVIEW.

William Knight is on the sick list.

Mrs. Samuel Parsons is convalescing.

Miss Ethel Rickett Sundayed with Mrs. Hamm.

A. Jackson and wife were at Auburn, over Sunday.

Miss Mamie Keller is visiting with relatives at Butler.

M. Friece and wife visited with friends at St. Joe, last week.

Will Jackson was the guest of Miss Mamie Keller, Sunday.

Miss Eva May is staying with Mr. Parsons and wife, this week.

Grant Keller spent Sunday in Butler, the guest of his brother Fred.

Mrs. C Smith has been confined to her rooms with rheumatism for several weeks, with no improvement.

Henry Jenkins and wife, of St. Joe, were the guests of their daughter, Mrs. Tel. Elson, on Sunday, of last week.

Mrs. Lorrin Saylyr, of Butler, and Mrs. H. Walford, of St. Joe, were at home with their mother Mrs. N. A Hoffman, Tuesday and Wednesday, of last week.

Grandma Krise died at this place, on Monday of last week, and was buried at Sawdust on Wednesday. She was 86 years, 11 months and 9 days old.

I. B. Goldsmith died very suddenly at his home in Wilmington township, on Sunday morning of last week, at the age of 73 years. He was buried at Newville, on Tuesday following.

UNION CHAPEL.

John Deeds has moved onto the Swineford farm.

There is a great many sick in the neighborhood.

The Hines mill on the last two snows has received about four hundred logs.

Byron Cosper is afflicted with erysipelas, but like Job of old, he bears it patiently.

Reuben Clouse is so happy, so very very happy. The cause of Reuben being so very happy is in the fact that he is the father of a bouncing baby boy.

Lewis Brown's little girl has been quite sick, but at present is recovering under the care of Dr. Buchtel. The Dr. without a doubt understands his business as this was quite a severe case.

A Lady In Texas Writes:

My case is of long standing; has baffled many physicians; have tried every remedy I could hear of, but Bradfield's Female Regulator is all that relieved me. Write The Bradfield Reg. Co Atlanta, Ga., for particulars. Sold by F. E. Davenport, and all druggists. 18

Notice of Administration.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, of the State of Indiana, administrator of the estate of John Kester, deceased, late of said county.

A Mystery Explained.

The papers contain frequent notices of rich, pretty and educated girls eloping with negroes, tramps and coachmen. The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, says all such girls are more or less hysterical, nervous, very impulsive, unbalanced; usually subject to headache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, immoderate crying or laughing. These show a weak nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and fine book, containing many marvelous cures, free at F. E Davenport's who also sells and guarantees Dr. Miles' celebrated New Heart Cure, the finest of heart tonics. Cures fluttering, short breath, etc. 3

Bard Ship, M. D., mormon elder from Salt Lake City, is visiting in Columbus. His five wives and thirty five children are keeping house during his absence.

Very Peculiar.

Many cases of so called consumption have been cured by Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. This medicine is peculiarly adapted to this class of diseases and we know of several lives that have been saved by its use. These cases are hard to overcome, but by the persistent use of this medicine you will notice a change for the better. Don't delay, but begin at once, and continue to use it as directed and we are positive it will help you. Sold by F. E. Davenport. 13

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein James O. Blake is plaintiff and William sprankle, Mary Sprankle, his wife, John J. Baxter Anna Sprankle, Sarah Myers, August C Treutman, Henry J. Ash, Robert H. Lane, Charles W. Bell and James F. Cummings are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of seventeen hundred nineteen dollars, sixty-five cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at Public Sale, to the highest bidder, on Saturday, March 28, 1891.

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the Court House in Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to-wit:

The west half (½) of the northeast quarter (¼) of section two (2) in township thirtyfive (35) north, of range thirteen (13) east, and also twenty-one and fifteen one hundredths acres off the east end of the north half (½) of the northwest quarter (¼) of said section, described as follows, to-wit:

Making the northwest corner fifty-eight rods west of the northeast corner of said lot, thence east to said northeast corner of said lot, thence south to the southeast corner of said lot, thence west forty-five rods, thence north twenty-eight rods in a straight line to the place of beginning. Situated in DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs. AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1846.

[The item respecting Samuel W. Russel in last week's COURIER is incorrect, and the writer was wrongly informed. Mr. Russel we hear, reformed and died only a year ago last November, at the home of his son-in-law, James Crow, of Kent, State of Washington.]

Prominent in town and county matters, Samuel Sprott, Samuel Ralston, Wesley Park, Jonathan Puffenbarger and Miles Waterman seem to have taken the lead in the matter of public improvements.

From 1841 to 1842, S. W. Sprott was clerk, recorder and auditor and from 1841 to 1851, he was clerk and recorder. In 1846, S. W. Ralston was elected sheriff. He was re-elected in 1848 and in 1850 was elected county treasurer when he resigned the office of sheriff. In 1856, he was again elected sheriff and served till 1859.

Wesley Park was sheriff in 1837 and treasurer from that year till 1851, a period of fourteen years.

Mr. Puffenbarger preceded Mr. Ralston as sheriff and Mr. Waterman succeeded Aaron Hague as auditor and held the office from 1846 till 1854.

The county commissioners in 1845 were John Helwig, D. Keep and D. Moody. By this board, S. W. Sprott was authorized to build an office on the public square at a cost not to exceed $200. An additional $50 00 was later allowed for the improvement.

Dr. I. Tatman was allowed the modest sum of $3.37½ for medical aid to a pauper in Stafford township and this may be regarded as corroborating testimony to the common saying that "The poor are always with us," since at the same session an allowance was made to H. Fusselman as overseer of the poor for farming out a pauper.

A three per cent fund was equally divided between the three commissioners to be expended in their respective districts with the understanding that each should make due report at next session.

Wesley Park had provided the recorder and auditor with books for their offices together with paper and "quills" for which he was paid the sum of $28 22. The item of quills is a recollection to the aged of the old school days when teachers included in their qualifications the ability to "mend pens" and vividly recalls the days before steel pens, gold pens and fountain pens were in use and when blue paper was so common.

T. J. Freeman continuing in business paid a small license fee for permission to vend foreign and domestic goods among which were prints and ginghams, plain, striped and plaid alpacas and possibly with these were sold boots and shoes, drugs and medicines mostly paid for in country produce.

Auburn had three stores and two of these were carried on by partnership. Woodbury and Watkins were in business on the corner north of Charles R u 's house. They continued several years and finally sold to Rice & Wilson, and returned to Ohio.

Nelson Payne took Samuel Ralston as a partner on June 15, 1845 and they kept store in the front room of a building put up by Payne, later occupied as a residence by Mrs. Bodine and now moved to south end, repaired and used as a dwelling. It stands next south of the Watson House which was itself the retired store building of C. Klotz and long stood on the present site of the brick occupied by Schaab & Bros.

On the northeast corner of the lot on which now stands the Culbertson residence, Payne & Ralston conducted a general business and Mr. Ralston was at the time the only store keeper in the village, who kept that panacea for ague, quinine, on hand for his customers.

The season of 1846 was long remembered by the inhabitants of this county for the prevalence of that dreaded disease the ague and fever. It had had no parallel in the history of the county since its first settlement and while most best remember quinine as the main dependence of sufferers, there were those who put their trust in McLean's Liver Pills or McKenzie's Tonic Febrifuge.

There was little of moment to break the monotony of those days. Day after day the same routine was pursued and now and then strangers made temporary halts for necessary supplies.

Goods were sold without a cent of money at times. Merchandise was exchanged for produce of all kinds, furs and peltries. At one sale, skins of deer, otter, mink and raccoon were sold to the value of $500. The deer skins lashed on a wagon were taken to Ft. Wayne and sold to a fur trader named Timo by Wayne. The load was very unstable though lashed fast, and as the wagon wheels dipped in the deep ruts, the deer skins slid down and parted company, and, with satisfaction the load was finally delived. Dry deer skins sold at 11 to 18cts. per pound, otter $6 to $8 each, mink $1 to $5, raccoon $1.50. During the year ending June 12, 1845, twenty-six wolves were killed in the county and the scalps brought the hunters $5 each, so that to no slight degree the wild animals of the forest contributed to the support of the settlers and furnished the means for supplying the family with goods and groceries, not else perhaps attainable.

As historical evidence of the poverty of settlers in northeastern Indiana, one may read in the acts of the Indiana legislature for the year 1849, that the residents of DeKalb, Steuben, Noble and Lagrange counties were exempted from payment of state and county taxes on all agricultural improvements when such improvements were valued less than $500 and this practically exempted most and was an act of needed relief. Even then, not a few became hopelessly delinquent and their lands were sold for taxes on them.

Rheumatism,

BEING due to the presence of uric acid in the blood, is most effectually cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Be sure you get Ayer's and no other, and take it till the poisonous acid is thoroughly expelled from the system. We challenge attention to this testimony:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months, and am pleased to state that it has effected a complete cure. I have since had no return of the disease."—Mrs R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th st., New York.

"One year ago I was taken ill with inflammatory rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."—Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H.

"Thrift is a good revenue."

Great Saving results from cleanliness and SAPOLIO:

It is a solid cake of scouring soap.

Try it in your next house-cleaning and be happy.

Looking out over the many homes of this country, we see thousands of women wearing away their lives in household drudgery that might be materially lessened by the use of a few cakes of SAPOLIO. If an hour is saved each time a cake is used, if one less wrinkle gathers upon the face because the toil is lightened, she must be a foolish woman who would hesitate to make the experiment, and he a churlish husband who would grudge the few cents which it costs.

An Ancient Newspaper.

By the kindness of W. E. Rush, we have been reading some very venerable old newspapers, the "Lancaster Gazette," published at Lancaster, Ohio, and this especial one, dated "Tuesday, Dec. 1, 1829." It is a five-column, four-page paper, and not a bad one either. It has a fair amount of reading matter, and the advertisements run about as they do in the papers of to day. Medicines are advertised, almost as now except that the "store" sold almost everything else, also. The most of the "ads." are for general stores, each store keeping a line of dry goods, groceries, hardware, queensware, books, stationery, drugs, medicines, boots, shoes, hats, caps, bonnets, and "whisky." All seem fully agreed, that whisky must be kept on hand for their customers. There was no local license in those days, nor did the U. S. government levy a tax on whisky or other liquors. Every man could sell it, or drink it, and no one thought it out of place apparently. And as far as we have talked with older people, there was no more drunkenness than now. Who shall say which generation is wiser, ourselves or our fathers? Nearly every advertisement has a finely cut glass decanter to illustrate its business. It all looks strange now. To give our readers a further idea of storekeeping then we quote a part of one. After calling attention to the lines of goods, wet and dry that we have already named, "Sam. Macracken & Co." speak of their stock of "pig and bar lead, Dupont's F. F. F powder, military goods, consisting of plated and gilt swords, sword belts, white and yellow epaulets, white and yellow lace Prussian binding, cords and laces for trimming ladies' dresses, stars, buttons, tassels, eagles, hat vases, cap looping, sword knots, white and yellow chain and braided wings, white and yellow puffs, Juniata nails, windmill irons, cast mould boards, mill and cross-cut saws, sole and upper leather, calf and Morocco skins, tanner's and flaxseed oil, whisky, and flour." They also agree to take in exchange, "hides, feathers, beans, rags, wheat, rye, flax seed, oats, corn, whisky, dry fruit and pork." They want to buy, "50 barrels of peach brandy, 1000 bushels of clover seed, and will keep on hand "an assortment of rifle guns, and ploughs." One man offers a reward of $5 for the return of an apprentice who has run away before he finished the trade of blacksmithing. Politically, this old paper is a "whig" and of course, in this first year of Jackson's administration, it pitches into "Old Hickory" rough shod. They denounce the president for advocating "reform" (How natural that sounds to-day.) Then they discover that he has turned out some office holders who "were soldiers in the bloody days of '76," and proceeds to read a lecture about it just as we hear every little while now-days, especially in campaign time. Then, too, the tariff is up as a living issue in this old paper, just as to-day. Of course, it is for "a high tariff to protect infant industries" in 1829, while the wicked democrats, are trying in that same year, to lower the tariff, claiming as democrats still do, that these industries are not "infants," but strong enough to take care of themselves. Now, after 62 years have gone by, these questions are still being fought over, and the "infant industries" still begging for help although, the average tariff rate is twice as high as then. Jackson had been president nine months, and they complain that he had turned out several officers opposed to him. Then they speak of the "tide of emigration going toward the Wabash and the territory of Michigan." There is a rumor, so they say, that Russia is at her old tricks, acquiring more territory. In another place, Baron Rothschild, then the wealthiest man in the world, was believed to have made a bargain with Turkey, that would secure him all of Palestine, and that he would rebuild the temple, and become 'King of Jerusalem." Then they rap the knuckles of a famous deist, the Bob Ingersoll of his day, but add that he is not doing christianity any harm. Then they talk up the best way to get an easy passage across the Isthmus of Panama, and believe a line of steamboats would help. Then there is an advertisement for the Arithmetic "Federal Calculator" which was published only the year before, and the author, Wm. Slocomb, gives the opinions of several teachers. Several common Ohio names are noticed in this paper, such as Abright, Sheets, Custer, Irvin, Colerick, Noble, Dillon, Hoover, Rice, Zimmerman, Sanderson, Beecher, Kaufman, Peters, Thompson, Oswald, Clark, Wittmer, Mitchell, McKay, Levering, King, Armstrong, Waters, Nelson, Latta. Then there is a poem suspiciously like that of a poem from Byron, who was recently deceased; one or two fine prose selections, and a long reprint from the "London Times," of an exciting murder trial. In fact, the old paper is the study of a day, and to the older readers of the COURIER will call up many recollections of the old days, as well as thoughts of the vast changes the world has seen since the ink now dim, and the paper faded, was fresh and bright, as it reached its readers in that long gone morning of 1829.

—Twelve young ladies entered into the novitiate of the Poor Handmaid of Christ, at the St. Joseph Hospital, Fort Wayne. The impressive ceremonies were conducted by Bishop Dwenger, of the Fort Wayne diocese.

—James Lewis, a gallant soldier in the Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, was found dead in bed at Danville. His death resulted from heart disease. He was in usual health the day before, having served on a jury until late in the evening.

—A thief entered the residence of Robert Spaugh, of Hope, and attempted to chloroform him in order to be able to search the house undisturbed, but spilled the drug in Mr. Spaugh's face, awakening him. The burglar made good his escape.

—A traveling man said to the Logansport Journal: "Indiana is the best commercial State in the Union. Its merchants buy larger bills, buy closer and more promptly, and know more about their business than those of any other State."

—Peter Benyard, a native of France, and an old resident of Floyd County, died at his home near New Albany, at the age of 82 years.

—The Rogers brothers, who have been sentenced to the penitentiary from Montgomery County for stealing clover seed, made an attempt to escape from jail. One of them broke the lock on the inside corridor door of the jail, and gained the outer corridor, and but for the bravery of the Sheriff's wife would have escaped.

—Perry County boasts of not having a single prisoner confined in jail. It also claims the distinction of not having a jail in which to confine one.

—The southwest portion of Hendricks County is excited over the reported finding of mineral. Copper has been found, but the discoverer will not reveal the place because he wants a larger proportion of the profits than the owner will give. A shaft will soon be sunk for coal near Coatesville soon. Gold has been found and the value of land has increased 300 per cent., in some instances $200 per acre being asked for it.

—Land in Lake County which sold three months ago for $50 and $100 per acre now brings $300 and $400.

—The barns blonging to Burr Haws and Mrs. L. A. Chamberlain, near Washington, were burned by incendiaries. A large number of barns have been burned in Daviess County in the past year, and it is thought to be the work of an organized gang of vandals.

—Charles W. Pool, a traveling man, purchased a ticket at Shelbsville for Indianapolis, which the local agent failed to stamp. When Mr. Pool presented his ticket to the conductor he refused to accept it. Pool refused to pay, and was ejected from the train. He has brought suit against the company for $10,000 damages.

—Six local capitalists of Peru have subscribed funds sufficient to place Peru in the Indiana and Michigan Base-ball League, which as now organized, comprises Peru, Fort Wayne, Anderson, South Bend, Grand Rapids, Jackson, Bay City and Saginaw. A strong team will be engaged at once. The season will open May 15, closing Sept. 5.

—A. L. Johnson & Co., Muncie, were experimenting with giant-powder as a means of splitting monster saw-logs at their mill. The man in charge used the explosive too freely and the fragments of the log demolished one end of the mill, and damaged the skewer factory near by. The employes had been notified, but as it was, a number of narrow escapes were made.

—Rush Chambers, a well-to-do farmer residing in the northwestern part of Bartholomew County, near Taylorsville, was fearfully gored in the left thigh by a mad milk cow. The cow had a young calf, which Mr. Chambers was in the act of putting in the barn, when the cow rushed upon him and fearfully lacerated his left thigh with her horns, puncturing the femoral artery. Gangrene has set in, and it will be necessary to amputate the limb.

—When a Vandalia train reached Crawfordsville recently, the engineer discovered that the fireman, John Elliott, of Terre Haute, was missing. The engineer returned and found the fireman lying in the gutter about a mile from town. Elliott, while shaking down the cinders, was thrown from the engine and so badly injured that it is hardly possible that he will recover. It was his first trip as a fireman.

—Fred Arbergast, a young German farmer residing east of Frankfort, has been arrested for inhuman treatment of his 3-months-old baby. From its birth the father exhibited a profound hatred for the infant, and the neighbors tell stories of frightful cruelty inflicted on the child, which died a few days ago. Among the things alleged was that he would lock it in the room and forbid its mother giving it nourishment, and otherwise maltreating it. Arbergast is in jail.

—Misfortunes still continue to befall witnesses and others connected with the murder case against W. F. Pettit, who was sent to the penitentiary for life from Crawfordsville. The latest victim is Rev. W. W. Wilson, who was killed last week by the bursting of a feed-mill. His wife was a witness in the same case. The latest story is that the church at Shawnee Mound, where Pettit was preaching when his wife died, is haunted by the spirit of Mrs. Pettit.

—J. C. Amstutz, of Fort Wayne, some time ago, ordered a lot of fancy articles from J. Minden, 134 East Thirteenth street, New York, whose advertisement appears in a number of papers. The goods were delivered and found to be fully up to description. A few days later Amstutz ordered six gold watches from the same firm, and he received a box from the express company with $330 charges, which he paid. The box contained instead of the gold watches a lot of papers and a bottle of patent medicine. The money was replevined.

—The citizens of Tunnelton have succeeded for the third time in preventing a liquor license being issued to W. R. Maris. The village of Tunnelton has an interesting history. Ten years ago it was a quiet, orderly place. One night in February, 1882, the town was raided by a gang of desperadoes bent on destroying the place. But they were met by a party of determined citizens, and two of the number killed. Soon after that the village degenerated into a place of drunkenness and disorder. Within the past year the citizens have made a determined fight for the right, and are gaining their former customs of sobriety and order.

—W. W. Wilson, a farmer and a local Methodist minister, living near Shawnee Mound, Tippecanoe County, was instantly killed by the bursting of a feed-grinder, which he was operating.

EASTER EGGS.

A Glance at the Religious Feature of the Egg.

The egg is the germ of life. From the egg comes forth all things that live and breathe. The egg, therefore, is the emblem of the rising sun, of the coming forth of vernal life—of the bursting of environment—the tomb, and coming forth in life. The egg has been intimately connected with religious worship for many thousand years; and yet clings to its place in the ceremonials. The Buddhist, Moslem, Christian—all connect the egg with Easter—with the resurrection—with the coming forth of life.

In the matter of color—it sometimes runs to fantasy, but red is commonest—blood-red—in imitation of the blood that the pre-Christian Mediators shed in giving up their lives for sinful man. Both the idea and color passed into Christian custom. Indeed, it would be difficult to point out the year or century when the Easter egg custom ceased to be Pagan and became Christian, since it has undergone no material change in all the ages. Tracing it back it becomes connected with the crescent moon at Heliopolis—the city of On in the Bible pages, also with the serpent—like as the Eden apple and the serpent. Among the Cyprus ruins is found an enormous carved stone egg, adorned with generative emblems.

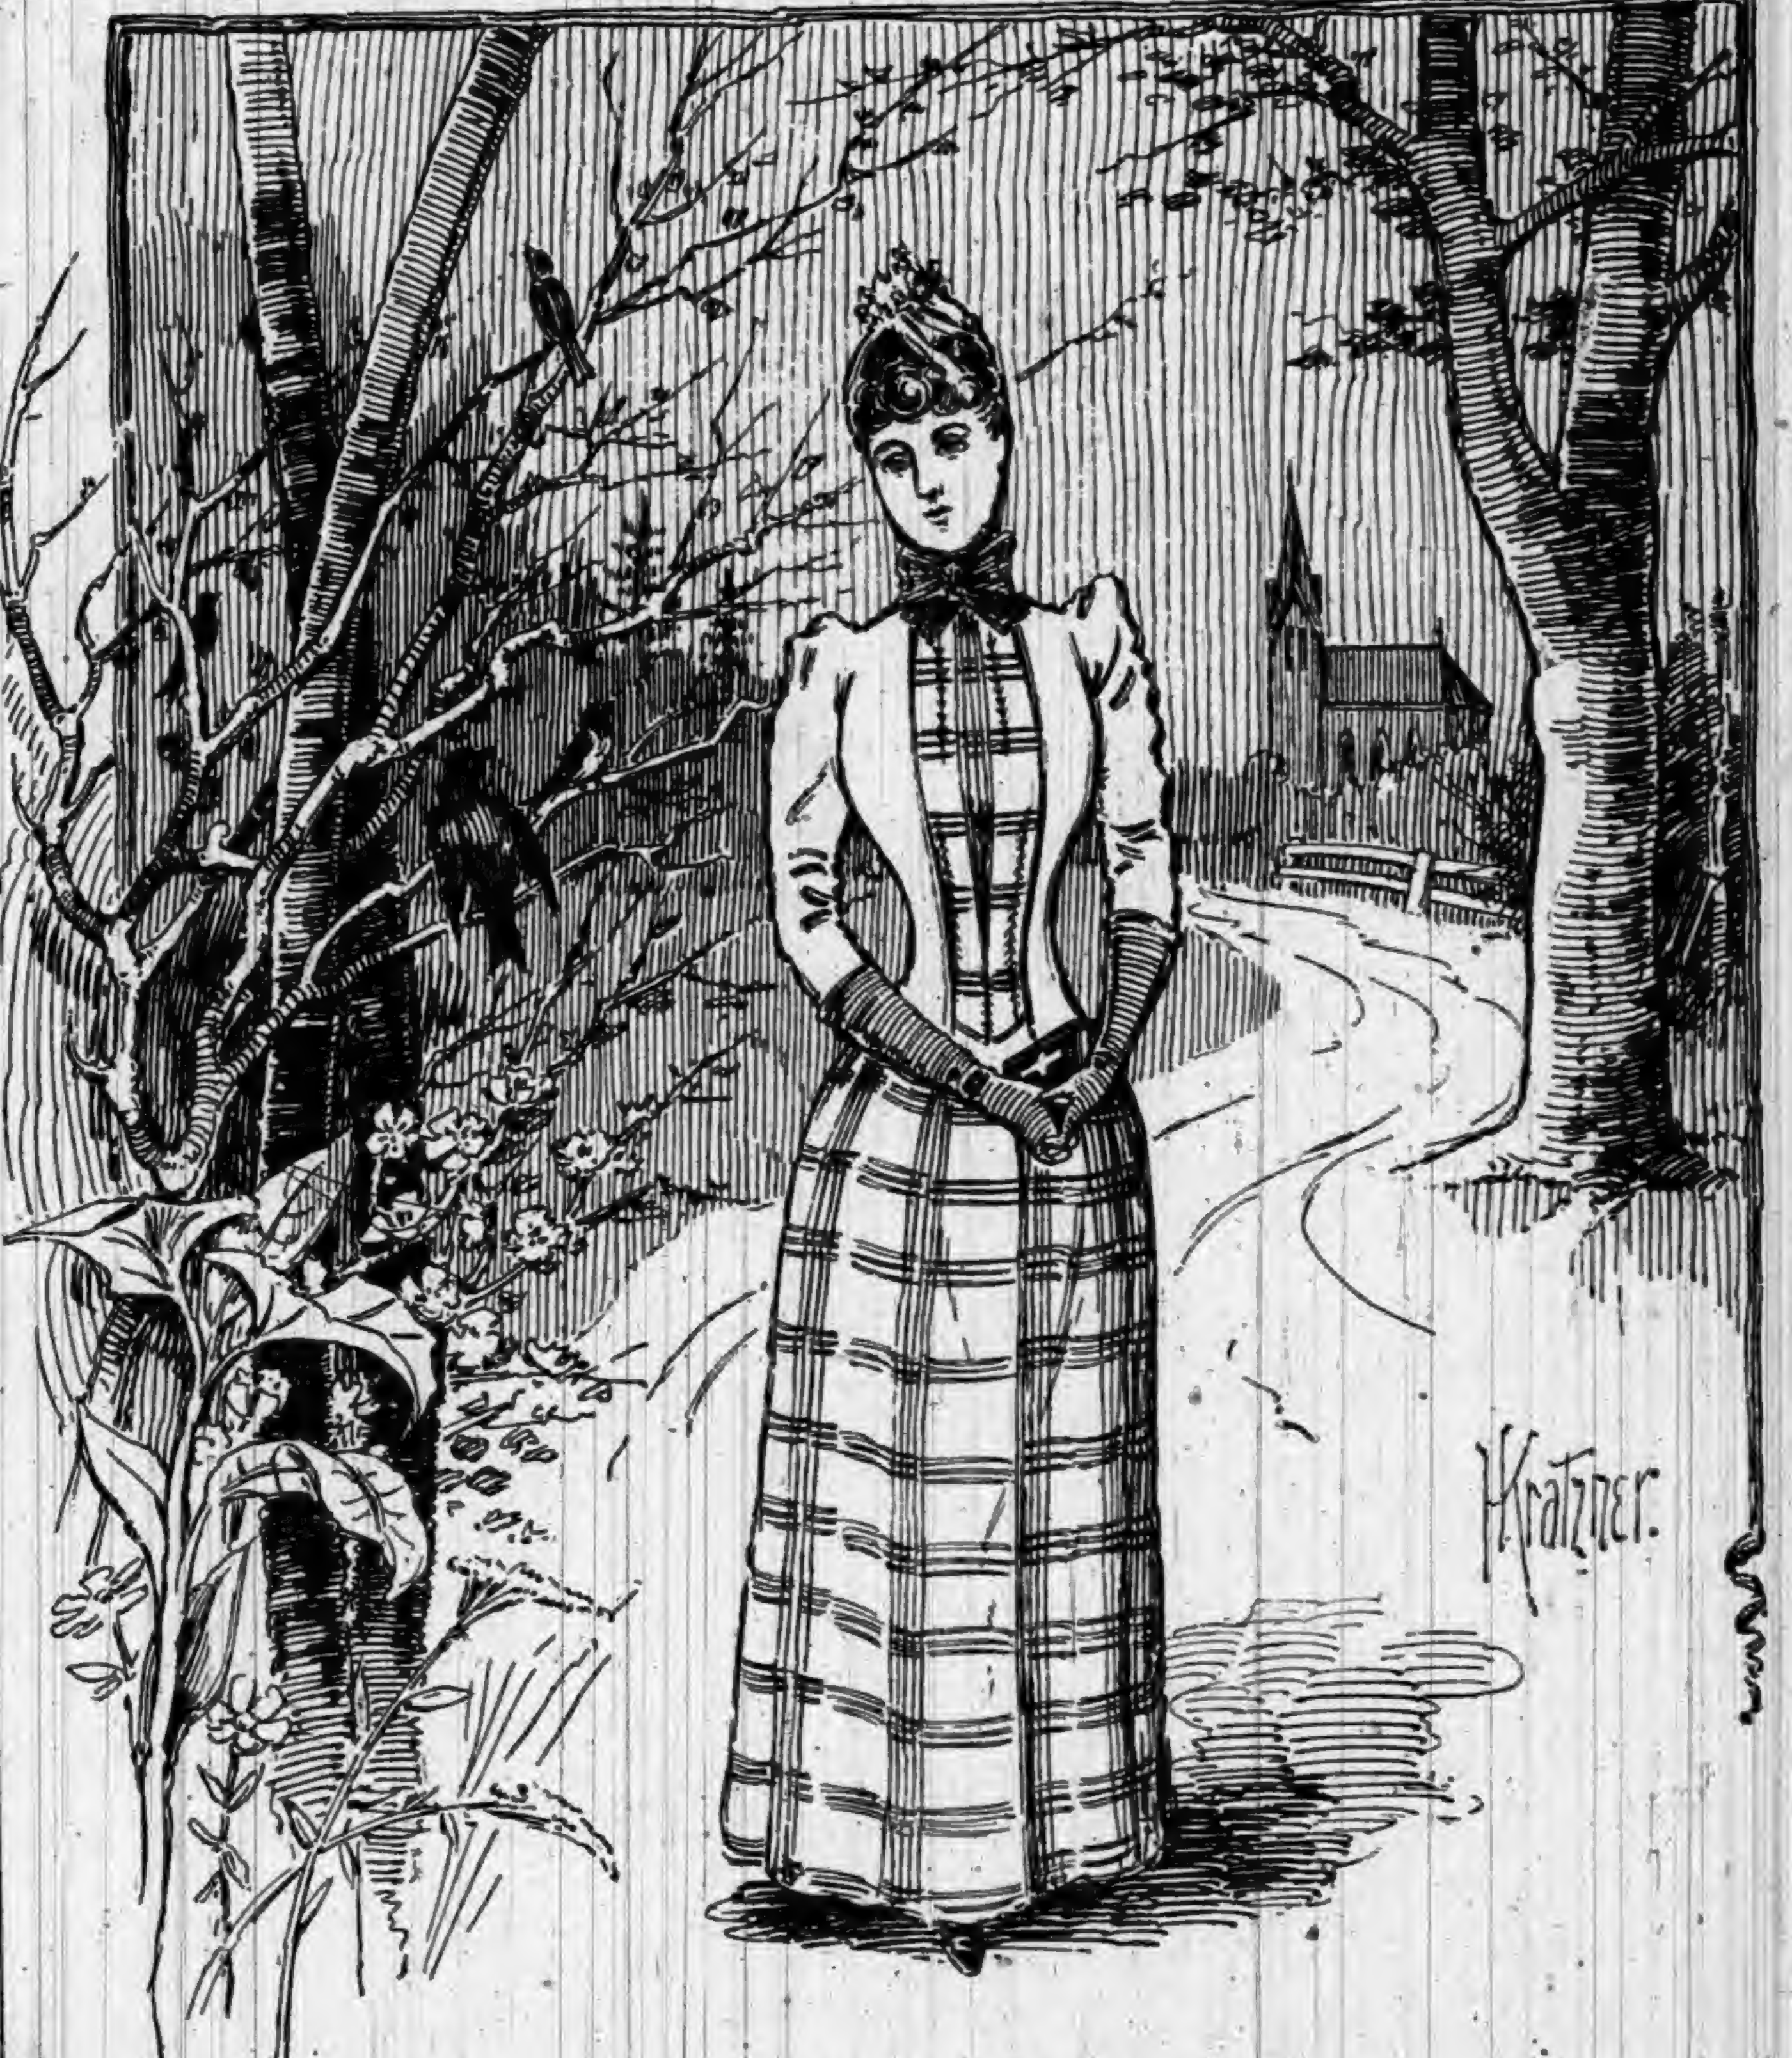
The practice of presenting eggs to friends on Easter day is Magian or Persian, alluding to the mundane egg for which Ormuzd (Supreme Being) and Ahriman (the Devil) were to contend to the end of all things. It was said that on Easter the earth was hatched or created. In most pagan lands it was a type of the resurrection. The ritual of Pope Paul V. reads:

> Bless, Lord, we beseech Thee, this Thy creature of eggs, that it may become a wholesome sustenance to Thy faithful servants, eating it in thankfulness to Thee on account of the resurrection of our Lord.

Come with me to Cairo. This is Easter week. These women you see are Moslem—Mohammed is their savior. This is Palm Sunday—and as you see they bind palm twigs about their heads and fingers. Each succeeding day has its peculiar ceremonials. On Shrove Tuesday the diet is cheese broth and onions; Ash Wednesday is Arba Eyub—Job's day; Maundy-Thursday is their pea soup day, and Good Friday is their gum'a el-mafruka—day of butter cakes; and Saturday is sebt ennur, or Sabbath of light—so named from the sacred fire which on this day bursts forth from the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem. Now do they strengthen their eyes with powders, get themselves bled and eat colored Easter eggs. On Easter Sunday, 'id en-nusara, they love their neighbors as themselves—even make friendly calls upon their Christian neighbors—calls that are to be returned during the feast of Beriam.

In the discussion of Plutarch and Macrobius we find that the egg plays a prominent part in the religions of the ancient world. It was used in auguries, was placed by the Romans upon the table at the beginning of the repasts, and at feasts in honor of the dead it was also prominent. The ancient Jews at Pasqua, after purifying and cleaning the house, placed hard eggs on the table as a symbol, and also cakes of peculiar form, and dates and figs—three emblems of fecundity. The Greeks and Romans used the egg in expiations, and when they had blessed the houses and temples, and sprinkled them with lustral (purification) water, they carried an egg with them. The account of blessing the ship by Apuleius might almost stand for a description of the modern ceremony at Pasque. "The high priest," he says, "carrying a lighted torch and an egg, and some sulphur, made the most solemn prayers with his chaste lips, completely purified it, and consecrated it to the goddess."

Besides the blessing of the eggs and the house, it is the custom in some parts of Italy for the priest at Easter to affix to the door of the palaces and villas a waxen cross to guard against evil spirits—and seal it with the letter M.—Misericordia—"Have mercy on us."



A GLORIOUS EASTER MORN.

Meddlesome Hotel Attaches.

Great actress (to hotel clerk)—I left my diamond necklace on the bureau in my room, and now it's gone. Send word to the police immediately, and—and the newspapers.

Hotel clerk—One of the servants saw your necklace there and brought it to me. It is in the safe.

Great actress (hotly)—I—I wish people would attend to their own business. So there!—Brooklyn Life.

Her Easter Bonnet.

THE seats are taken, every one;
My heart is beating in my ear;
The sermon is but just begun.
I look around—she must be here!
Ah, no—alas! Her place I see
Filled by a maiden strange to me.

And all at once how empty seems
The crowded space; how dim and cold
The tender morning light that streams
Through windows stained in blue and gold.
The craven cherubs look quite glum,
And even the organ pipes seem dumb.

The preacher tells of peace and bliss,
Of Easter joy. Ah, well, no doubt
Some other sinner will not miss
The comfort that he talks about.
For me, my altar shrine is bare
Since my fair saint's smile is not there.

What's this? A sweet face turned my way,
A gently welcoming look; dear eyes!
Ah, now, indeed, my prayer I'll say,
And now the preacher's words seem wise.
To think my love I did not know,
Her Easter bonnet changed her so!
—Madeline S. Bridges.

BELLS of Easter, thy clear ringing
Sounded so
One year ago;
And as now thy tongues are flinging
On still air,
Music rare,
They to some are mem'ries bringing
Of fond eyes with love sunned o'er,
Eyes that ne'er shall brighten more.

Bells of Easter, thy loved voices
Will ring clear,
Tho' one year
Some glad heart that new rejoices,
Then at rest,
Comfort-blest,
Will not throb for earthly noises—
Sleeping calmly on, below
Summer's bloom and winter's snow.

Bells of Easter, lo! thy sweetness
Shall bring peace,
Care's surcease,
While the years with 'wild'ring fleetness
Wing their flight
To Time's night,
And some souls—past incompleteness—
List to sounds more sweet by far
Than thine, O bells of Easter, are!

Easter Festivities at Chester.

There is hardly an ancient English city which is not surrounded by the memories of the quaint customs of by-gone times. Most of them selected some particular day to celebrate. Easter was chosen by Chester, and was enlivened by sports—everybody played football, there being two games, one for the men and one for the women—and an imposing procession. This latter was not discontinued until 1756, having been kept up for centuries. It had its origin in the delivery from the Welsh of Lord Dutton's castle. Many minstrels and other roving characters were gathered together and marched toward the invaders' camp. They made an imposing appearance, and although they could not have fought for half an hour, frightened the Welsh away. Lord Dutton, out of gratitude, declared that a parade should be given every Easter for all time to come. Various sports are still held in Chester on Easter, and a dinner is still the reward of the winners as in ancient times.

EASTER SUPERSTITIONS.

Curious Customs of Various People on That Day.

The curious practices and beliefs that cluster about Easter would almost be laughable to an American if he were not able to trace many of them to a source anterior to Christianity, and if he did not know that they once had a profound significance for his ancestors. The world is a big child, which often affects to look with contempt upon the broken toys of its babyhood. This is particularly so in America, the most precocious of countries. The old-time feasts for us are stripped bare like the interiors of our churches or the walls of our imagination.

One must go to some hamlet in Germany, or some village in the North of England to find a survival of Easter customs, or, as some might call them, superstitions. This word may be discarded, however, as it is too harsh to be applied to our ancestors.

THE SUN DANCE.

The first of childish fictions about Easter, and the one that has longest survived in America, is that the sun dances or takes three steps on Easter morn. One has a suspicion that this fable was invented by nurses who wished to encourage in youthful Christians a habit of early rising. Little ones go to bed Easter evening fully determined to get up to witness the phenomenon; but as they oversleep themselves they generally remain credulous and unsatisfied. Perhaps it would be wrong to rudely disturb their beliefs.

One of the minor English poets has given a metrical explanation which is satisfactory of the Easter jocularity of the sun. He thus addresses the luminary:

Phœbus, the old wives say
That on Easter Day
To th' music of th' spheres you do caper;
If the fact, sir, be true,
Pray let's the cause know
When you have any room in your paper.

A NEW BONNET ESSENTIAL.

Speaking of superstitions one had almost forgotten that there is one as old as the hills in which all women believe even to this day. It is that a person will have no luck for a year who does not wear a new article of dress Easter Sunday. It will be observed that it is not necessary to order an entire outfit. A bonnet, for instance, will suffice, and if it is new and pretty that is sufficient. It is not necessary that it should cost a week's salary.

TANSY TEA AND RED HERRING.

To entirely propitiate fate the true observer of Easter should dine on tansy tea and red herrings. At least this is in accordance with the rules laid down in ancient and reliable English chronicles.

The beggars were presumably first made presentable, and then their feet were washed in turn by the laundress, the sub-almoner and the grand almoner. Then the Queen repeated the ceremony while her lords and ladies of the court waited on her, carrying towels, etc. She wiped, crossed and kissed the feet of the fortunate unfortunates, and then distributed presents among them.

BEGGARS' FEET WASHED BY THE QUEEN.

A royal custom on this day was the washing by the king or queen of the feet of beggars, after the example related in the Scripture. There were as many beggars as the sovereign was years old. For instance, if her Majesty was 49 years old there were exactly forty-nine beggars. This was no doubt thought in ancient times a salutary way of reminding a woman of her age.

SIGNIFICANCE OF EASTER CUSTOMS.

The passing of the feast of Easter from Semitic to Aryan lands is really the history of humanity, and the story of Easter practices is the story of civilization. These practices link us with the remote past, and in their decadence from earnestness to sport they show how the world has grown from childhood to the age of reason.

The Reformation in England did away with a number of pagan practices that were supposed to be "popish."

The fact was that the peasants had kept them from pagan times, and the Roman Church may have tolerated but did not encourage them. They would have died a natural death if left alone, for many that did survive the Reformation gradually became ridiculous, and died to the music of a laugh.

DECORATING THE WELL.

Easter is the time for the divining of a good year by the height of the water, and for the decoration of wells.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN
NERVINE TONIC
—AND—
Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.
It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk.

This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the Great South American Medicine Company, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by the native inhabitants of South America, who rely almost wholly upon its great medicinal powers to cure every form of disease by which they are overtaken.

This new and valuable South American medicine possesses powers and qualities hitherto unknown to the medical profession. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the general Nervous System. It also cures all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the Great Nervine Tonic qualities which it possesses and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body and as a great renewer of a broken down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the Lungs than any ten consumption remedies ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic almost constantly for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir, are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This recent production of the South American Continent has been found, by analysis, to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its magic power to cure all forms of nervous derangements.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., Aug. 20, '86.
To the Great South American Medicine Co.:
DEAR GENTS:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the stomach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervous system. If everyone knew the value of this remedy as I do, you would not be able to supply the demand.
J. A. HARDEE,
Ex-Treas. Montgomery Co.

Mr. Solomon Bond, a member of the Society of Friends, of Darlington, Ind., says: "I have used twelve bottles of The Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and I consider that every bottle did for me one hundred dollars worth of good, because I have not had a good night's sleep for twenty years on account of irritation, pain, horrible dreams, and general nervous prostration, which has been caused by chronic indigestion and dyspepsia of the stomach and by a broken down condition of my nervous system. But now I can lie down and sleep all night as sweetly as a baby, and I feel like a sound man. I do not think there has ever been a medicine introduced into this country which will at all compare with this Nervine Tonic as a cure for the stomach."

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR CHOREA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., May 19, 1886.
My daughter, twelve years old, had been afflicted for several months with Chorea or St. Vitus's Dance. She was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk, could not talk, could not swallow anything but milk. I had to handle her like an infant. Doctor and neighbors gave her up. I commenced giving her the South American Nervine Tonic; the effects were very surprising. In three days she was rid of the nervousness, and rapidly improved. Four bottles cured her completely. I think the South American Nervine the grandest remedy ever discovered, and would recommend it to everyone.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.
My daughter, eleven years old, was severely afflicted with St. Vitus's Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus's Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, all forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health from whatever cause.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the Stomach, because the experience and testimony of thousands go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to The Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted Stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

Mrs. M. Russell, Sugar Creek Valley, Ind., writes: "I have used several bottles of The South American Nervine Tonic, and will say I consider it the best medicine in the world. I believe it saved the lives of two of my children. They were down and nothing appeared to do them any good until I procured this remedy. It was very surprising how rapidly they both improved on its use. I recommend the medicine to all my neighbors.

Mrs. Ella A. Bratton, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I can not express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen.

Ed. J. Brown, Druggist, of Edina, Mo., writes: "My health had been very poor for years, was coughing severely. I only weighed 110 pounds when I commenced using South American Nervine. I have used two bottles and now weigh 130 pounds, and am much stronger and better than have been for five years. Am sure would not have lived through the Winter had I not secured this remedy. My customers see what it has done for me and buy it eagerly. It gives great satisfaction."

SERVANTS AND FASHION

DRESS OF THE COQUETTISH CHAMBERMAID.

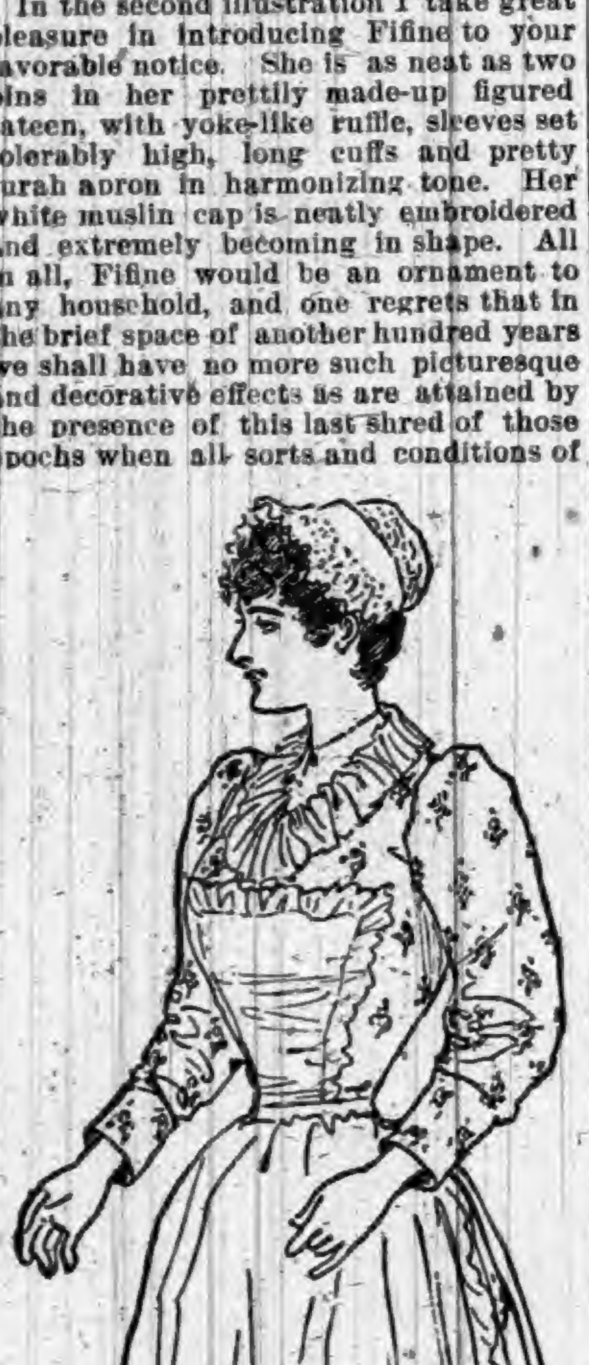
What She Wears in Up-town Households—A Charming Attire for Refined Public Entertainments—Tasty Street Dresses, Etc.

NEW YORK, March, 1891.

MODES may come and modes may go, but servant girls go on forever, and go their own sweet way, too. They are like the slave who stood behind the Roman victor, and amid the acclamations of the multitude whispered to him that he was but mortal. For when the millionaire has finished his splendid mansion he finds that he must await the pleasure of the footman to get into it, that he can't eat a mouthful or drink a swallow except by the assistance of a servant, that light and heat are not under his control, that he may not even receive a friend until a servant has first arranged the interview, that his coachman has no scruples in making a railway president wait fifteen minutes, and that his cook never deigns to ask him what he'd like to have for dinner. In a word, the children no longer rule the house, the servants do. We have no one to blame but ourselves. We should have known better than to proclaim absolute liberty and equality. In another century, servants will be emancipated as the slaves have been, and those who can't run their houses by machinery will either starve or help themselves.

Meanwhile I sing the praises of the natty, pretty, saucy chambermaid, who is really one of the family. Everybody says "please" to Fifine, and she expects it. Barring her coquettish little muslin cap and her dainty white apron, Fifine might readily pass for some poor relative or perhaps for a nursery governess. She is no longer contented with plain calico. Pretty woolens, figured sateens and flannelettes in dull colors, and even surahs are none too good for her. Her cap, too, has parted with its long strings, and is now handsomely embroidered, serving admirably to bring out the beauty of her glossy black hair. Fifine powders her face, manicures her hands, curls her bangs and, horror of horrors, in some households perfumes her handkerchief. But this is never allowed in any refined uptown household.

In the second illustration I take great pleasure in introducing Fifine to your favorable notice. She is as neat as two pins in her prettily made-up figured sateen, with yoke-like ruffle, sleeves set tolerably high, long cuffs and pretty surah apron in harmonizing tone. Her white muslin cap is neatly embroidered and extremely becoming in shape. All in all, Fifine would be an ornament to any household, and one regrets that in the brief space of another hundred years we shall have no more such picturesque and decorative effects as are attained by the presence of this last shred of those epochs when all sorts and conditions of men and women didn't wear the same material, the same cut, the same trimming and the same style.



Some of the spring hats have a quiet and refined elegance which contrasts quite sharply with the assertive or speaking colors of last season. For instance, a capote for a lady—who, while denying indignantly that she has grown old, would hesitate to say "we girls"—struck me as being in remarkable good taste. It was in black tulle, embroidered with gold. A large bow is set in front, and has its ends fastened down by gold pins. There is also a coquille of the tulle in front with a cluster of small black bows on top. From the back come black velvet strings fastening under the chin. Another altogether charming toque consisted of bouillonnee of black tulle over a crown made up of three bands of mauve velvet. At the back there is a small branch of mauve and black ostrich tips from which the black velvet strings take their start. This toque can only be worn when the hair is done high on the head. Still another stylish toque has a crown of black tulle point edged with gold galloon. It has a jet aigrette in front and a bunch of ostrich tips behind.

An extremely pretty gray felt round hat attracted my attention for its vigorous style and dashing air. The crown is flat and round with wide brim in front. It is turned sharply up behind and held by a bow of faille ribbon. The crown is trimmed with a broad faille ribbon and is ornamented with a steel star in front.

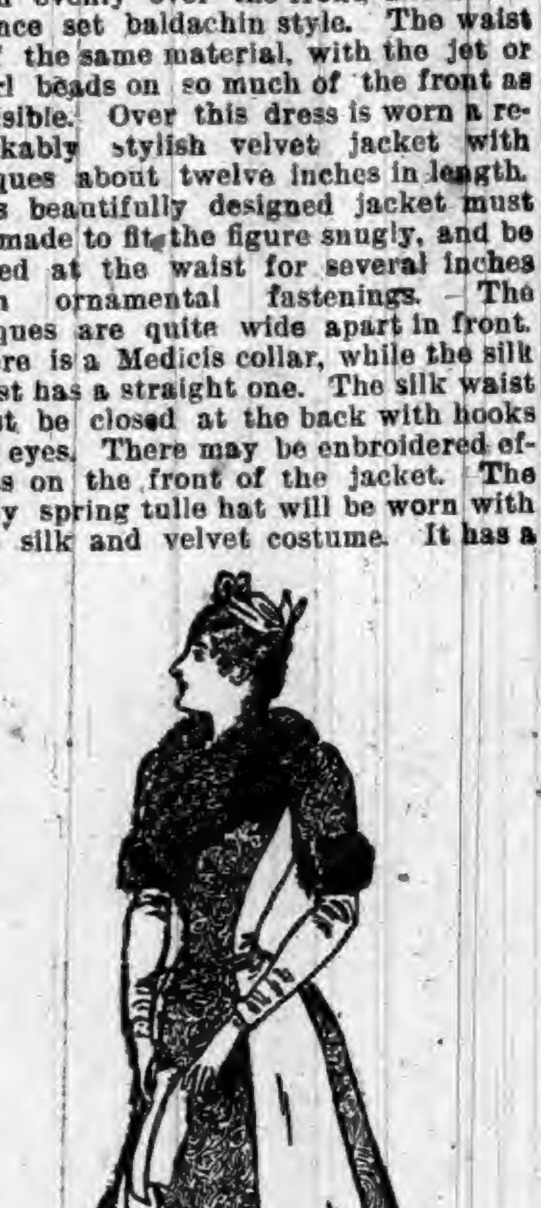
The lovely outdoor costume for afternoon receptions and standing fetes represented in the third illustration is made up of Parma faille and violet stamped velvet and sable fur. With this charming attire for refined public entertainments, such as first days at the galleries, is worn a very small white bonnet of lace, velvet, and tulle. One sees many delightful cloth costumes made up in jacket style. It is quite necessary, in order to secure the proper fit and hang of the long jacket corsage, that the skirt should lie flat on the hips, and to this end the darts should be carefully made and the fullness at the back secured in hollow pleats. To hold the skirt firmly down on the hips, strings should be sewed to the front breadth and then tied behind. There should be two collars, a straight one inside and a rolling one out. The waist of the jacket has but one dart on each side. The sides are scalloped and embroidered. The basques are also ornamented in the same way, and the same motive reappears on the sleeves. The jacket must be lined with flannel and silk.

Another very pretty street dress is made up in putty-colored cloth. The corsage is smocked at the waist on a lining. There is a straight electric blue velvet collar and also a deep velvet yoke with a Medicis collar. The sleeves are also of velvet, with a double cloth sleeve ending in a point just above the elbow.

In some of the street costumes the velvet yoke runs to a point at the waist in front, is repeated in the back and has deep graduated revers edged with a narrow border of feather trimming, and the basque is also bordered with this trimming and is widely separated in front. The front of the skirt is set off with a deep flounce of hollow pleats.

The last illustration presents a very stylish and refined dress for public or private receptions of white cashmere lattice worked with dark-gray, made up upon a black velvet foundation underskirt. With it is worn a very handsome long jacket—a combination of black and pale-gray velvet, with black designs in braid and gray fur, as shown in the drawing. The front revers are in gray and black striped frills. For occasions of ceremony, such as afternoon gatherings in the world of art or literature, a very small bonnet should be worn. The one here represented is in gray silk gauze caught up by black jet and trimmed with black and white cock's feathers.

An exquisite and velvet creation in the line of spring outdoor costumes consists of a silk skirt made up over a taffetas or serge foundation, and ornamented with jet or white pearl beads sown evenly over the front, and a lace flounce set baldachin style. The waist is of the same material, with the jet or pearl beads on so much of the front as is visible. Over this dress is worn a remarkably stylish velvet jacket with basques about twelve inches in length. This beautifully designed jacket must be made to fit the figure snugly, and be closed at the waist for several inches with ornamental fastenings. The basques are quite wide apart in front. There is a Medicis collar, while the silk waist has a straight one. The silk waist must be closed at the back with hooks and eyes. There may be enbroidered effects on the front of the jacket. The early spring tulle hat will be worn with this silk and velvet costume. It has a narrow brim, and is mounted on a wire frame, garnitured with bows of black and dull-red roses at the back, with a graceful lace ornament in front. The long featherweight umbrella which belongs to this costume, has all the grace of the slender cane carried by the court ladies of the epoch from which this graceful garment is borrowed.



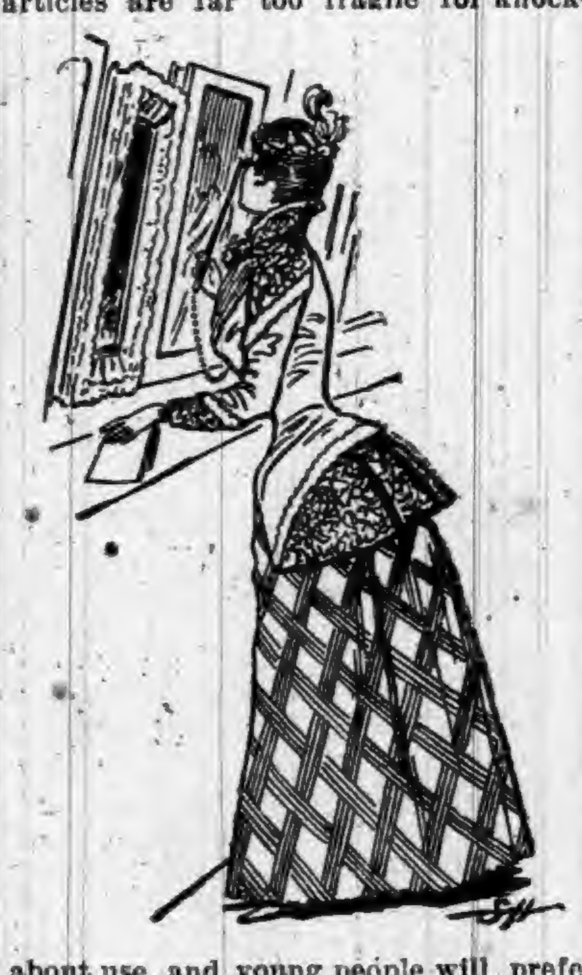
Figured materials are much affected for the reason that in skillful hands the pattern may be turned into a very pretty garniture for the dress. Braided effects will be very popular and they look extremely stylish on the sleeves and lapels and pocket flaps of the jacket corsage. When velvet lapels are used stylish brocaded vest patterns should go with them.

The pointed-toed shoe has quite disappeared and round or square toes are affected by those who wish to do exactly the correct thing on all occasions. But I need hardly add that the satin slipper still keeps its point. It was to be expected that heels should feel the effect of the craze for old French styles, and as a consequence they are as unreasonable as they are coquettish in their size and angles. The black silk stockings seem to be hard to displace, although one often sees attempts to keep the colors of the shoe and stocking in perfect harmony.

Judging from all signs, the late spring and early summer styles will hold fast to the jacket bodies and long basques and vests, most dainty and taking in material.

Flower fans promise to be popular, a single flower forming the fan. Poppies and chrysanthemums will be favorites for those who like something effective. Another novelty in this line will be the butterfly fan, in which these gaudy-winged insects will seem to have alighted upon the leaves or flowers trailed upon the sticks of the fan. But such articles are far too fragile for knockabout use, and young people will prefer to set the gold butterflies in their hair.

DAISY DART.



Why We Die.

The most common cause of death is fat and lime. Microbes are mere accessories in causing death. Take myself as a case in point. Once, when younger, I could lift my leg on a level with my head. It is an effort now for me to get it half that distance. Lime deposits are the cause of it. It is only a few days since that I performed a post-mortem on the remains of a distinguished journalist, who died in this city at an advanced age. When I reached his heart I took my knife, and, on rubbing it over that organ, it sounded as if it were being rubbed over a rough stone. The heart was fairly encased in lime. I have now under my care a distinguished literary man—a nonogenarian. He is going to die. (The patient has since died). His death will be caused by abnormal deposits of lime. There is no mystery in death. It is as natural for man to die as to be born. We are born, we develop, we grow ("grow" is right,) and we die. Is there anything strange about that? Man is like a tree. He lives his time, then withers, decays, dies. When we shall have learned everything, we shall be wise enough to prolong the life of man, but by reason of the materials of which the body is composed he must die.—Dr. Philip Wales, U. S. A., in St. Louis Glob-

The Locks of Schellingwoude.

The great locks of Schellingwoude that let you out into the Zuider Zee are worthy objects of interest to those of engineering tastes—huge piles of abstruse masonry, machinery and iron, so solid and serious, so free from anything frivolous, that I feel tempted to assume scientific knowledge enough to weight this rambling article with a saving blast of solid matter. Why shouldn't I? Thousands of people write about abstruser matters—art, for instance—of which they know infinitely less than an artist knows about engineering, and they manage to come off with eclat. Why should we not have the credit of making those great hulking locks feel small and humiliated? It would not be difficult. They really lack the elements of simplicity and quiet that mark the locks on the Upper Thames. There are no flowers, no ginger-beer, no bending reeds or waving willows, no fresh gush of water here and there between the leaky wood-work, that lend such an air of picturesqueness to a fine old river lock. These comparisons skillfully brought to bear would pass for criticism very well, and we should escape the reproach of having gone through one of the most noble monuments of modern engineering skill without a word of appreciation.

These locks, the pride of Holland, that seem to hold two mighty floods by the throat with a gigantic stony grasp, and to keep the seas at bay, surely deserve more worthy comment than we know how to give them. It is not our purpose to introduce guide-book matter in the way of statistics; we had only about ten minutes' experience of those mighty works, and they were given mostly to things pictorial. We own to being impressed, even dazed, by these splendid examples of Dutch engineering skill, to say nothing of courage and enterprise.—George H. Boughton, in Harper's Magazine.

Living Fountains.

The swamps of the Bay of Campeachy, which are on a level with the sea, become so completely parched during the heat of summer, says Vick's Magazine, that the huntsmen who lose themselves in the extensive forests with which they are covered, would be in danger of perishing with thirst, were they not provided with living fountains in the wilderness where there are no springs or running water. The trunks of a kind of pine, indigenous to the soil, are covered with a species of fungus, called from its peculiar form, pineapples. They resemble a packet of leaves piled one upon the other, and are so full of sap, that, on piercing them with a knife at the base, nearly a pint of clear and wholesome juice immediately distils.

The Prostrating Shocks

Of malarial fever are not to be counteracted by quinine with any degree of certainty, or for any length of time. The eradication and prevention of diseases of a miasmatic type are, however, ascertained possibilities. Long experience has shown that there is infinitely more preventive efficacy in the fine botanic medicine, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, than in the alkaloids, drugs and poisons which were formerly the only recognized means of removing and anticipating attacks of fever and ague and bilious remittent. When the system has been depleted by periodically recurring paroxysms, this agreeable restorative renews the fund of energy, and is not only a positive specific, but repairs the damage to the general health inflicted by all febrile complaints partaking of the malarial character.

Dropped the "H."

An American, who is in London for several months every year, returned from one trip with a handsome umbrella, on the silver knob of which was engraved a complicated monogram—the gentleman's initials were H. A. B. One day, a friend took up the umbrella, and, after squinting at the knob for several minutes, said: "This is rather a queer monogram on your umbrella, Mr. ——. I can see the A and B all right, but, for the life of me, I can't find the H."

"Why," responded the owner, quickly, "I lent the umbrella to an Englishman just before I left London, and I presume he dropped the H!"

A Husband and the Mule.

Wakefield Starkey, of Austin, while crossing the track of the International and Great Northern railroad on a valuable mule, was struck by a locomotive and killed. The mule was also hurried into eternity. Wakefield Starkey, although a perfect gentleman on the street, was a perfect tyrant of the deepest dye. Without any provocation whatever, he used to beat his wife and lock her up in the wardrobe; hence, when she heard of his death, it was not so much a case of heavy bereavement as it was of mitigated affection. As the engineer of the locomotive was clearly to blame for the accident, it was suggested to the widow that she bring a suit for damages. She resolved to do so, and called at the office of the railroad company. The proper official happened to be in. The widow had such a clear case against the company that it was deemed advisable to compromise the matter.

"Now, madam," said the official, after the widow had thrown back her veil and stated her business, "we are willing to do what is fair in this matter. There is really no occasion to go to law. It is a delicate subject to discuss; so I think, without going into the merits of it, I will tender you a check for $3,000, and you will sign a paper releasing the company from all further demands."

The widow started and asked: "How much?"

"I am authorized to pay you $3,000."

"I accept it," she said, very much agitated. The check was handed over, the papers signed, and the widow walked out into the street in a bewildered frame of mind. As she cashed the check, she said to herself, confidentially, "I didn't expect to get more than $50. I reckon that railroad fellow didn't know how old that mule was!"

Jewesses and Wigs.

There is a remarkable mystery surrounding the origin of the custom of the Jewish women cutting off their hair and donning a wig on their marriage. The stubborn adherence to this custom suggested the plot of the gloomy story which concludes the "Jews of Barnow." Even in the present day the custom is still observed by the ultra-orthodox. The effects of the custom were supposed to give a clew to its origin.

There was undoubtedly too much reason in the middle ages for Jewesses to be eager to make themselves as unattractive as possible. The custom of cutting off the hair of the bride on the wedding day is not mentioned in the Talmud. According to Mishnah Ketuboth (vol. 6) it is contrary to Jewish custom for married women to appear in the street with head uncovered. Out of modesty the custom was also observed in the house, and in order to remove the possibility of yielding to temptation the hair—serving no longer as an ornament, but being a superfluous weight on the head—was entirely cut off.

According to Mishnah Nazir (iv., 5) the cutting off the hair is considered a disfigurement, which the husband could veto in case of his wife being a Nazarite. Some few believe that the custom dates from the very earliest times, and that they found their opinion upon the allusion thereto in Deuteronomy xxi., 12. Referring to the mode prescribed for taking a captive woman for wife the text says: "Then thou shalt bring her home to thine house, and she shall shave her head."—Jewish Chronicle.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

CHICAGO is running five candidates for Mayor.

LEGISLATURE cost us $91,508.83, or $16,000 less than the average.

THE creed and other important points in Presbyterian doctrines have been changed by converts in Japan. Possibly the changes may be for the better.

WRITING by telegraph was tried Saturday, between Indianapolis and Crawfordsville, over the Postal telegraph line. It was a wonderful success, and the new machine is easily learned. The ticker will soon be a thing of the past.

GOVERNOR of Texas, refused to sign a bill the legislature passed, to permit the U. S., inspectors to come in and test the sugar made at the big sugar farm owned by the state. He says he will not even accept the 2-cent-a pound bounty, for it is wrong to make all the nation pay a bounty to a few. Gov. Hogg has his back up, but he is right.

GENERAL JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON, next after Lee, the leading rebel general, died at Washington, last week. He had acted as pall bearer to his old antagonist, Gen. Sherman, but a short time before. He was rebel Commander-in-chief till wounded in the Peninsular campaign, when Lee was given the place. He surrendered to Sherman, the last great army of the rebellion. His love for Sherman, was as honorable to his goodness of heart, as his hatred for Jeff. Davis was to his good sense.

THE Butler Record still claims that the McKinley high tariff helps the hens in their peculiar industry. He says he knows how to explain this because he once taught school. He then explains: "If a farmer in Canada has twenty-five hens, and a farmer near Auburn, the same number, both having access to market at Detroit, the Canadian farmer is taxed so he cannot send his product to Detroit, the Auburn farmer can double the number of his hens, and the egg production will remain the same, and consequently the price to the consumer will not be increased." Then as if expecting we would again ask how the farmer is benefited if prices are not made better, he adds that double the number of hens will produce cheaper eggs, leaving the farmer a larger profit, etc. We give his ridiculous statement so our readers can be judge whether we have been so far wrong in claiming, what the Record complains of us for claiming, that republican editors are very ignorant. He don't explain why a farmer can not "double the number of his hens," as well without the tariff as with it, if as he insists the tariff does not affect the price. Then he strikes the tin question, and as might be expected says "the McKinley bill is the cause of establishing tin making mills in various parts of our country and these in time will lead to the developement of tin mines" But what, we venture to ask will these mills busy themselves at while these mines are being "developed." We supposed it took tin to run a tin mill or foundry. Perhaps though the hands could busy themselves sawing wood till the McKinley bill has time to start a tin mine to forming that metal some where. But in sober earnest, how nonsensical these republican articles appear, in view of the fact known to all well posted people, that tin, as well as nearly all our other mineral productions can be produced here cheaper than in any other part of world, in spite of the better wages our men receive. It is from this latter stand point, that we feel impelled to call republicans editors ignorant. If they are not ignorant, then they are stating what they know to be false, and trying to make their dupes believe it.

The Finest Spectacle.

The finest spectacle, the most unique and pleasing performance ever given in Auburn, was the musicale and sword drill last Friday evening. Our people did not become fully awake to the real merits of this splendid effort our young ladies were making, till a few days before the appointed evening. The tickets were then put on sale, and on Wednesday morning seats began to be located. They were going off like a whirlwind, and the sale received a fresh impetus when the COURIER appeared next morning with a full statement of the beautiful character of the display. So of course, the great Opera House was full at an early hour, and an expectant, throng waited patiently for the rising of the great curtain. When it did rise, there came trooping in sixteen of Auburn's prettiest girls, (and Auburn has the prettiest and best behaved girls in the Union.) This was the opening chorus, "Sixteen Old Maids." We can't describe it so our readers can get the full force of the performance, but it was good irresistibly funny, and they were wildly cheered. The piano duet by Miss Jessie Weaver and James Eldridge was a choice one, skillfully performed, and was followed by a song given by T. P. Scott, S. D. Hanna, Walter Hartman and M. B. Hastings, equally good. "A Natural Spell," came next, and was a study and a surprise. Of all ancient parodies on old day spelling schools, this is the quaintest and the newest. Those who have witnessed the others only, have not had the spice and flavor of the best. The sixteen girls were "the class" and each deserved "first honors." And the audience laughed itself tired. Mrs. Yesbera's solo was a sweet one, and she never sang better. The subject and its treatment were just suited for her, and we don't see how it could have been improved. A funny quartet about the "Charming Young Fellow" was then given by Edna Davis, Mabel Hartman, Jessie Weaver and Flora Hoffman, which created a good deal of merriment, when the plot disclosed who the "young fellow" was. Mrs. Don. Garwood and and Mrs Bert. Robbins were to have sung a duet, but owing to a bad cold, the latter, could not assist, and Mrs. Garwood sang a charming solo instead. It was a delightful one, and sweetly executed as all her singing is. Here followed another very sweet song, a trio, given by Mrs. Yesbera, Flora Hoffman and Mabel Hartman. Dr. Buchtel had the last exercise in the first part of the program, a violin solo. The doctor was for some years with the famous Gilmore's Band, and is a master of this most difficult of musical instruments. He wields the bow with the hand of a master, and we venture to say, few of the vast audience, ever before listened to such delightful strains from a violin, or from anything else, for the matter of that. Nothing would suit the audience, but he must come back, and he did, this time, giving a delicious version of "Annie Laurie." He left the audience in raptures. After a brief rest, part second began, with a grand march, "Norwegian Wedding March" by the sixteen in costume. This was the opening of the grand scene of the evening for it was closely followed by the "sword drill." The young ladies had been drilled in this excercise, by Joseph McKay, who certainly proved himself a good drillmaster, for all the difficult evolutions were performed with the precision and independence of regulars. The uniforms were neat and very becoming, jaunty little fatigue caps, dark dresses, and with the close fitting belts, glittering scabbards and flashing swords, such as are used by the Knights of Pythias, they made the brightest, trimmest and most sparkling military spectacle ever seen here, and seldom equaled on the stage in great cities. No description can do justice to the beauty of the scene. It was grand, it was entrancing, and the audience sat rooted to their places in admiration, but involuntarily burst into wild applause, when the ladies formed and executed the difficult "Maltese Cross" with the ease and precision of a beautiful machine. Only the eyes of the audience, were alive, for all else, was lost in the entrancing vision until the other senses were aroused by Miss Mabel Hartman's recital of Tennyson's famous "Charge of the Light Brigade," with which the spectacle closed. She was assisted and supported by her glittering "brigade," with appropriate maneuvers and posturing, giving realistic strength to the stirring lines. All the evolutions were difficult and beautiful, but cannot be described. Of course, they were called back, and it was with great regret, that the closing song, "Good Night" told unmistakably that the finest entertainment we ever had here, had ended. The young ladies, have every reason to be proud of their success. At the present writing, they talk of giving this delightful performance again at Wagner's opera house, in Garrett. We assure our Garrett friends it is one of the finest entertainments we have seen, and the young ladies, who are thus earnestly trying to assist their church are among the most worthy in our city. If they go, we hope they will have a good audience and those who do not attend will surely regret it. We understand, their gross receipts were $86 80 but as expenses were great, they will clear about $60, which is very gratifying indeed.

New Tax Law.

This law is already in force. Assessors must begin work April 1st, as usual, as they hold office till the first Monday in April 1894. Real estate will be assessed this year and every four years after. A county assessor must be appointed the first Monday in April and will hold office till the general election of November 1892. He must examine all tax duplicates, assessor's books, etc., and see that a proper assessment is made on a basis of actual value. He looks into mortgages, etc, and is really at the head of the whole assessor work. The board of equalization is abolished, and a "Board of Review," composed of the county assessor, auditor and treasurer is established. This board meets the first Monday after the 4th of July to hear complaints and decide disputed points. Appeals may be taken from them to state board of tax commissioners, which is composed of the governor, state auditor, secretary and two tax commissioners appointed by the governor. All sorts of corporations are to be taxed on their gross receipts, foreign companies $3 on the 100, and home companies, $2 down to 50 cents. Township assessors do not gather any statistics now, and assessments must be at a fair cash value. Mortgages are assessed to the parties owning them.

New Dog Law.

The legislature passed two laws that touch this subject, on March 5, and the other March 6. The former says that all owners of dogs must go to township trustee on or before the first Monday in May, and have their dogs registered and pay a license of $1 for a male dog or $2 for a female, and if they have more, then $2 and $5 respectively for each additional one. The money shall be used to pay damages done by dogs. If not registered anyone may kill the dog. The law is now in effect. The other law passed the next day, speaks of the assessors listing the dogs as heretofore. So the attorney general decides that all dogs not registered with the trustee by the first Monday in May will be assessed the same as usual under the old law. But if the owner can show a receipt from the trustee, then the assessor must not list his dog on the assessment books.

Surprise.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow space in your columns to say that Mrs. G. D. McGowan was agreeably surprised Friday it being her 60th birthday. Her friends and neighbors congregated to the number of about thirty. When twelve o'clock came, dinner was announced and after partaking bountifully, we repaired to the parlor where the remainder of the day was spent pleasantly. She received many tokens of love and friendship. Being one of those present will say it will long be remembered. We wish her many such happy birthdays.

ONE OF THE NUMBER

City Politics.

Edward Baker is being talked up by the people as councilman for the second ward. He would make a good one.

J. E. Ensley, another good man is spoken of for the fifth ward. These are as far as we have heard, all the new names mentioned since our last.

Caucus must be called soon. They should be announced in next week's papers, so as to give full notice to all. The nominees must be certified to the clerk by April 18.

Fruth Medical Institute.

Dr. Fruth, formerly of the Provident Medical Institute of New York, and Representative to the American Medical Association at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1883, has by reason of his large practice in the west, established and incorporated under the laws of the state of Illinois, The Fruth Medical Dispensary Association, for the treatment of all chronic diseases. The doctor has made regular visits here for over two years and has made friends among those who have been the recipients of his medical treatment. The citizens of this place are not slow to recognize his true merit, but have ever been on the alert for ignorant pretenders who have neither home, responsibility, credit or brains. Personally the Doctor is a courteous gentleman ever ready to discharge his obligations, and his success and large practice in this state is not a matter of chance, but the outgrowth of thorough preparation and a natural adaption for his profession. Dr. A. C. Fruth of St. Lukes Hospital, New York, now examining physician of the Fruth Medical Institute will also be at the Swineford House, Auburn, Tuesday March 31, one day only from 1 to 5 p. m.

208 Young Women.

An Indiana girl has taken the prize of $200 offered by The Cosmopolitan Magazine for "the best article of 4,000 words descriptive of farm life, with suggestions as to the best method of making farm life attractive and happy," only farmers' daughters being permitted to enter the competition. The design of The Cosmopolitan was to draw out an expression of opinion as to the important problems of happiness and discomfort on the modern farm, and it was successful that more than 200 manuscripts, very many of them ably prepared, and representing nearly every state and territory, were sent in. The prize was awarded by Prof. H. H. Boyesen and the editor of the Cosmopolitan, the final committee of award, to Miss Jennie E. Hooker, of McCutchanville, near Evansville, Ind. Her article will appear in the April number of the Cosmopolitan, and the same number will contain a very interesting article on the Farmers' Alliance, by the newly elected United States Senator Peffer, of Kansas. The Cosmopolitan is one of the few periodicals, which, while gaining circulation in the cities more rapidly than in the country, yet devote special attention to all matters pertaining to the farm. Taking the prize over so many competitors, doubtless Miss Hooker's article will present numerous ideas well worth the consideration of these who find their happiness or discomfort within the limits of farm homes. Price 25 cents, Cosmopolitan Publishing Company, Madison Square, New York.

Wanted a Cabbage Dinner.

Garrett, the grocer, has had sacks of flour, and similar things stolen from the sidewalk in front of his store. Last Saturday evening as he and Cook Ford and several others were talking in the store, Mr. Ford, who faced the street, saw some one come along, grab a cabbage, and start away. But he evidently saw his act was noticed, and he threw the cabbage back and disappeared. The men stood talking about it, when as suddenly as before, the same figure flew past again, snatched the cabbage once more, and disappeared in the darkness. The men ran out into the street but were not able to find any trace of the thief.

Directors' Meeting.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein Ætna Life Insurance Company is plaintiff, and Martin F. Thompson, Henry Harvey and Moses Lumley, are defendants requiring me to make the sum of Seven hundred forty four dollars and eighty-six cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on Saturday, April 18, 1891.

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the court house in Auburn DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to wit:

The west half (½) of the east half (½) of the northeast quarter (¼) excepting one acre out of the southeast corner thereof, 20 rods east and west by 8 rods north and south, in section ten (10) township thirty three (33), north of range twelve (12) east, situated in DeKalb county, state of Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

Also, at the same place, by the same, on March 22, 1891, John Martz and Cora McConnell. The COURIER sends congratulations to both the fortunate couples.

E Zimmerman was at Spencerville last Friday, to attend the funeral of Mrs. Barbara Wilson, but it was postponed till Sunday, as a daughter, whose home is on the Pacific coast, did not reach here in time. Mrs Wilson was a twin sister of Mr. Zimmerman's first wife, and it is rather remarkable, that both died six days from the time of taking a chill with which the last sickness began.

We agree with an article in the Dispatch that the use of pasters on ballots under the Australian system, robs the law of much of its value, or at least it makes fraud possible once more. That part of the amendment should never have been allowed to go through. But our contemporary must thank its favorite, Gov. Hovey for this, for it was Hovey who fought for the change so as to make it "constitutional." We say Hovey was wrong, and the legislature that went out of its way to suit his whim, was also wrong.

J. G. Clapp has a number of interior views of the new M. E., church finished. They are real beauties and present the appearance of that grand structure with a distinctness not always found in a photograph. Anyone wishing one of these pictures as a memento of the christian pride in Auburn, can get them of him at reasonable rates.

Rev Mr. Lamport preaches his farewell sermon next Sunday. He will of course be sent elsewhere, next year, as he has now been here five years, the longest time that he can remain in one place, even under the new regulation. His work here has been an eminent success, and many will regret even now, to part with him.

'Squire Walborn had his first case to try under his present term as justice, last Saturday. Marshal Pfefferl, had arrested a man the night before for "drunk and disorderly," and the 'squire added $8.10 as fine and costs. We would like to say to several others, that the marshal has his eye on them, and they will do well to go slow. The marshal means business.

The report of Wm. Shutt's death last week was a false one. We are glad to state he is still alive, though quite low Our informant believed he had the sad news correct, but, it appears that the ones who told him, made a mistake in the name, as Jacob Shutt, another of the well known family, had died on Tuesday of the week previous. Of course we regret to make mistakes, but hope they will all be as fortunate as this one.

Miss F. A. Husselman, who has been to the city the past week, buying her spring and summer millinery has returned bringing a finer and larger stock of goods than has ever been brought to this town. Every body is invited to call and examine her fine line of trimmed hats also untrimmed hats, beautiful flowers, gold and silver ornaments, laces and ribbons which are elegant and a new feature this season, while the prices are much lower than usual. Our old friend Martin Whetsel was in town Saturday. He reports a good deal of sickness up that way. His own family have been sick and he himself was out for the first time in six weeks. A neighbor, Geo. Wittig died on Tuesday of last week, after a sickness of but ten days. He had arranged to move onto the Christian Smith place in Fairfield, and some things had been taken there, when sickness overtook him. He was about 28.

Col. C. A. Lounsberry, of Fargo, North Dakota, was last Friday a guest of G. W. Weeks and family, on his return from Washington to a big field of labor that he has, as special agent of the general land office. The Colonel is a young old settler of DeKalb Co, born in Wilmington township, March 1843. Since his enlistment at the commencement of the rebellion in the 1st regiment Michigan volunteers, his career has been an eventful and continuous upward flight.

Frank Dills was married over a week ago, and although we heard of it soon after, it was such an unusual thing for Frank to get married, that we fairly forgot it, and so failed to speak of it in last issue. But he is married and settled down and we believe has a worthy young woman. She is Miss Minnie Walter, daughter of Ex-Auditor C. C. Walter, and they will go to housekeeping here in town. The COURIER joins their many other friends in extending a welcome, and hearty good wishes.

The Reading Room continues to be a place in our town, that is creating new interest. Not alone are people learning to appreciate the advantages of having good literature, literature that is accessible, but they are giving the confectionery department a substantial patronage This department comprises almost every kind of candy, nuts, etc., known to the trade. It is unquestionably a cause intended for moral development, intellectual culture and the purifying of motives, which deserves the most generous patronage that this community can bestow upon it.

A. Lewis is rapidly bringing his new building to completion. It is no mean thing either. It is being substantially built on a good, solid brick foundation, that is expected to stand the test of years of usage. Heretofore in the rainy season of the year, the mud and water made it somewhat difficult to get around. He will take measures to remove that difficulty by graveling that part of the yard most frequently used as drive ways. After viewing everything from a reasonable, business standpoint, we have no hesitency in saying that we believe Mr. Lewis will have facilities for meeting the requirements of the lumber trade that has never before been favored with. He is a thorough business man, and his many years experience among us is a guarantee that what he attempts to do in his line, will be done without any base motives. He has in his employ Mr. A. L. Kuhlman, who is a first-class man, and is fully acquainted with every detail of the business. With this team at the helm, our people can count on square dealing and value received
